No other weapon was found in the rooms or on the defendant, except the pistol which was taken from him. All five chambers of the pistol were empty. There was also evidence on the part of the defendant which tended to show that deceased, after being released on bond the night before she was shot and killed, went into the saloon and secured her husband's pistol, which, the evidence tended to show, was, if not the same, like the one with which the shooting was done. Another and different revolver, produced by the defendant's witness Butch, was more positively identified as the one taken by the deceased from the saloon. This witness found this revolver in a stove which he had bought from among deceased's effects. There was also evidence of assaults by the deceased upon the defendant the night before the shooting. Defendant, in his own behalf, testified that the deceased had on the 5th of March taken all his ready money, and, when he asked for it in order to pay his bills, she declared she was going to keep it. At supper time on this day a difference arose as to whether deceased should make tea instead of coffee, and she became very angry. There was a fire in the range, and the defendant insisted that she should utilize it for cooking and turned out the gas stove, which was also burning. Deceased relit the gas, and defendant extinguished it again, whereupon she struck the defendant with a pan and a poker. Immediately thereafter the deceased made an assault upon him with a cleaver in the room below. He testified as to his arrest and detention on the night of the 5th, and on his return to the saloon in the morning he found the money that was in the drawer to be taken, and he asked his wife for change to use that day, and she refused to let him have it; that, on going upstairs to prepare for the trip to the court in the matter of the disturbance of the night before, his wife attempted to assault him with a butcher knife. He declared: That when he then told his wife that she could stay in the rooms, and he would leave, when he turned to get some articles of dress, she struck him in the face with some instrument, and he heard a shot, which passed close to his mouth; that a second shot passed near his head; "that he could not hear nothing more; that he did not know nothing at all, dropped, didn't know nothing, swimming in the head and everything." Defendant denied attempting to purchase the revolver on the morning of the shooting. Defendant also offered some testimony tending to show that his reputation was good.

The gravity of the offense and the character of the sentence compel the serious consideration of the court of the proposition which meets us at the very threshold, to wit, that no matters of exception are reviewable for the reason that the bill of exception was not filed within the time allowed by the order of the court, and hence, legally considered, are no part of the record. By reference to the statement, it will be observed that on the 5th day of May the court, by its order of record made on the day of the granting of the appeal to this court, allowed the defendant 90 days to file his bill of exceptions. Now excluding the 5th of May, the day on which the order was made, 90 days from that date expired on August 3, 1908. The attempt made on September 5, 1908, to save the lapse of time by the entry of a nunc pro tunc order purporting to have been made on August 5, 1908, extending the time to October 5, 1908, was utterly futile for the reason that the order, even if it had been made originally on August 5th, would have been inoperative and ineffective to extend the time because the time had lapsed on August 3d, and nothing that the court could do on August 5th, the term having lapsed, could have imparted any life whatever to the order. In State v. Eaton, 191 Mo., loc. cit. 156, 89 S. W. 949, it was said: "It is a fundamental principle that courts can exercise judicial functions only at such times and places as are fixed by law, and that the judges of courts can enter no orders in vacation except such as are specially authorized by statute. 4 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 337, note 2. * * * It is of grave importance that the records of our courts shall be kept so that all parties interested therein or affected thereby may be able to ascertain, by application to the clerk, when a judgment has become final, or when exceptions have been or will be filed if in vacation." In State v. Britt, 117 Mo. 586, 23 S. W. 771, it was said: "When the 40 days given by the court had expired, the judgment of the circuit court became final, and neither the court or the parties had any power, in the absence of an order or stipulation extending the time, to take any other steps in the cause. State v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198, 17 S. W. 169; State v. Mosley, 118 Mo. 545, 22 S. W. 804; State v. Apperson, 115 Mo. 470, 22 S. W. 375." These cases all concur in holding what it would seem on principle would require no citation of authority to show that when the time granted by the court had elapsed on August 3, 1908, it was entirely out of the power of the court or the parties to invest the court with authority to extend the time for filing the bill of exceptions. This view of the record obviates any necessity for considering the validity of the nunc pro tunc entry of September 5, 1908, on the ground that it was made without any minute of the judge or the clerk or any paper in the cause which would support such an order. The law on this point is too well settled to require more than a mere reference to it. It follows that, however serious the consequences to the defendant, it is plain that we are restricted to the record proper, and that the alleged exceptions are not before us for review. The indictment is but a rescript of the one approved in State v. Gray, 172 Mo. 434, 72 S. W. 698; State v. Wilson, 172 Mo., loc. cit. 423, 428, 72 S. W. 696. The arraignment and the plea of not guilty were in due and regular form, and so, also, are the entries of the impanelment of the jury, the verdict, and the sentence of the court.

In the absence of any proper exceptions and of any error in the record proper, we have but one duty to perform; that is, to indulge the presumption that the court performed its duty and gave the defendant a fair and impartial trial.

The judgment of the circuit court is therefore affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pettis County; Louis Hoffman, Judge.

Dora Hubbard was convicted of larceny, and she appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Shortridge, for appellant. E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and John M. Atkinson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BURGESS, J. The prosecution in this cause was commenced by the filing of an information by the prosecuting attorney of Pettis county in the circuit court of said county, charging the defendant with a larceny of $80 from the person of S. E. Scarlatt, in the nighttime in the city of Sedalia, on the 6th day of December, 1907. The defendant was duly arraigned, and pleaded not guilty, and upon a trial for said charge was found guilty, and her punishment assessed at two years in the penitentiary. From the sentence upon this verdict, she has appealed to this court.

The evidence tends to establish the following facts: The prosecuting witness left Higginsville, Mo., about 8 o'clock on the evening of December 6, 1907. He purchased a railroad ticket from Higginsville to Stamps, Ark., over the Missouri Pacific and Iron Mountain System. On leaving Higginsville he had $80 in paper money and some $5 in silver. He came to Sedalia on what is known as the Lexington Branch of the Missouri Pacific System, reaching there about 9:45 that night. On his arrival at Sedalia, he went to the Missouri Pacific depot, and remained there a short time, when he discovered that he had lost one of his rubbers from his overcoat pocket, and he started out to buy a rubber. While on the street in search of an open store, he was accosted by the defendant on two different occasions. On the first, she said that she must get away or they would catch her, or something of that kind, and went. He thereupon continued his search for the store, and she met him again, and he detailed the circumstance in this manner: "She came right up in front of me. My vest was open and my overcoat over my shoulder, and I had the money in here [indicating his inside vest pocket]. I had $80 in paper money in a pocketbook. I also had a railroad ticket. I had the pocketbook in this vest pocket. I had my head down, and she came right up to me and grabbed me, and ran her hands around and said, 'You are a nice fat old fellow,' and made a swipe around me, and I did not think about the money, and it kinda excited me, and she let loose and went on. I did not miss the money until I got into the depot. She had on a red skirt and a big hat and a brown looking coat—I do not know whether it was a coat or not—and she was a yellow woman." Having discovered the loss of his money and railroad ticket, the prosecuting witness immediately notified the police, and the defendant was arrested within a very few minutes in McGurran's restaurant, near the depot, about 11 o'clock, and was taken to the police station, where she was identified by the prosecuting witness as the woman who had robbed him on the street a few minutes prior thereto. When arrested the defendant wore a red skirt and a big hat and a brown looking cloak. She had $6 in currency and $4 and 15 cents in silver on her person. The pocketbook and railroad ticket were found about 4 o'clock on the following morning in front of Holdner's store, on the south side of Main street, by a negro man. The money had all been taken from the pocketbook, and the railroad ticket alone remained. Between 10 and 11 o'clock on this same night the defendant was seen by the witness Flossie Guy, a negro girl, on the south side of Main street, in front of said Holdner's store, where the pocketbook was afterwards found. Defendant was in a stooping position as if she was hunting something or tying her shoe. She afterwards had a conversation with this witness Guy, in which she said that "The trouble Will and I had I need not say anything about. I did not have to bring it up at court; and about seeing her over at Holdner's, I need not bring that up." When arrested on the night of the robbery, defendant stated to the police officer that she had just come downtown, and had not been on the street that night. After her arrest she was locked up in the city prison, and early on the following morning, she secretly sent from the city prison her hat and cloak by a negro man. She was seen at McGurrien's restaurant a few minutes before the arrival of the Lexington train from Higginsville, at which time she stated that she had no money to buy any drinks for a crowd of negroes, who were then at the restaurant, but that she was going out on the street, and when she came back she would have money to buy drinks for the crowd.

On her return to the restaurant about 11 o'clock she bought three rounds of drinks for the crowd amounting to about $3.50, and was a free spender with her money. She testified in her own behalf, and stated that she came downtown about 8:15 that evening to go to a show, but that her "dusky buck" was sick, and she then went to Houston's hall for a dance. She did not stay there long, but went from there to McGurrien's and then went back for the second time to the dance hall, and returned for the second time to the restaurant, and remained there but a few minutes, when the police came in and arrested her. She denied paying for any drinks, or exhibiting any money, or making any statement about her buying drinks, when she came back to the restaurant the second time. On the following day, at the preliminary hearing in the justice's court, defendant had a sister there, dressed in red and wearing a cloak and dress very much like the defendant wore the night of the robbery; and her sister, on the advice of one of defendant's counsel, was caused to change positions in the courtroom with the defendant, to see if the prosecuting witness was able to identify the defendant as the one who had robbed him on the previous night. And the prosecuting witness in a very positive manner pointed out defendant as the guilty party on that occasion. Various records of former convictions of the defendant were offered and read in evidence, from which it appears that she was an habitual criminal of the most pronounced type.

The information is in all respects sufficient. The record is a very voluminous one, and is interlarded with many objections, but we will consider those urged in the brief of the counsel for the defendant first.

1. It is insisted that the court should have instructed the jury on circumstantial evidence, and erred in refusing four instructions designated as "C," "D," "E," and "F," which were requested by the defendant. The court did instruct on alibi, which was the defendant's theory of the case on the trial, and there was direct and positive evidence in this case that the defendant committed the larceny as charged in the information, and she was positively identified by the prosecuting witness as the person who went through his pockets and stole his pocketbook and money. It has again and again been ruled by this court that it is only when a conviction is sought on circumstantial evidence alone that it is necessary to give an instruction on the weight of circumstantial evidence. State v. Bobbitt, 215 Mo., loc. cit. 43, 114 S. W. 511; State v. Donnelly, 130 Mo. 642, 32 S. W. 1124; State v. Fairlamb, 121 Mo. 137, 25 S. W. 895; State v. Robinson, 117 Mo., loc. cit. 663, 23 S. W. 1066. And in this connection it may also be remarked that in her motion for new trial the defendant complains that the court did not instruct on the law of the case. There was no request to instruct on any other proposition, except upon the law of circumstantial evidence, and, as the case was one of direct testimony, there was no harm in the court refusing to instruct on that subject, otherwise than it did in giving the very full and ample instruction on the presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt, and alibi.

2. There is no merit in the contention that the various judgments of conviction of the defendant of various offenses were incompetent. Having made herself a witness, the defendant was then open to impeachment and cross-examination by the express provisions of section 4680, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2549). State v. Blitz, 171 Mo. 530, 71 S. W. 1027; State v. Brooks, 202 Mo., loc. cit. 117, 118, 100 S. W. 416, and cases cited. While the defendant makes a formal assignment of error in the instructions given by the court of its own motion, her counsel have pointed out no error in any specific instruction.

A careful examination of each and every one of the instructions given by the court demonstrates that they are such as have often received the approval of this court, and there is no error in them or any one of them.

As to the assignment in the motion for new trial that the verdict was the result of passion and prejudice, we can only say that it is refuted by the whole record, which leaves no doubt whatever of the guilt of the defendant, and contains no mitigating circumstances in her favor.

The judgment is therefore affirmed. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Douglas County; John T. Moore, Judge.

John Fleetwood appeals from a conviction. Affirmed.

This cause is now pending before this court upon an appeal from a judgment of the circuit court of Douglas county, convicting the defendant, John Fleetwood, of an offense as defined by section 1842, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1273), for the taking away of a female under the age of 18 years for the purpose of prostitution or concubinage. Omitting formal parts, the information, which was duly verified, charging the defendant with this offense, was as follows: "Fred Stewart, prosecuting attorney within and for the county of Douglas, in the state of Missouri, informs the court upon his oath that John Fleetwood, on the 10th day of September, 1908, in the county of Douglas and state of Missouri, did then and there being one Myrtle Miller, a female person under the age of 18 years, to wit, 17 years old, unlawfully and feloniously take from one William Miller, her father, he, the said William Miller, then and there being in the legal charge of the person of the said Myrtle Miller, without the consent and against the will of the said William Miller, for the purpose of concubinage by having illicit sexual intercourse with him, the said John Fleetwood, against the peace and dignity of the state."

Upon this charge the defendant was duly arraigned and pleaded not guilty at the September term, 1908, of said Douglas county circuit court. At said term the trial proceeded, and the evidence introduced on the part of the state upon the trial of said cause tended substantially to prove: That the prosecutrix was the daughter of William Miller and lived with her father in Christian county, Mo., about a mile and a half from defendant's home in Douglas county. That on September 12, 1908, there was a reunion being held at Ava, the county seat of Douglas county. That on the morning of September 12th prosecutrix left her home in a conveyance with Mat Morrison (who had married a sister of prosecutrix) and his family to go to Ava, to attend the reunion, under the direction and with the consent of her father. That they arrived at the grounds where the reunion was held at about 10 o'clock a. m. That immediately after arriving at the reunion grounds the defendant and prosecutrix met and remained together all day. That defendant induced and overpersuaded the prosecutrix to remain with him at the reunion and accompany him home, and not to return to her own home with the Morrisons when they were ready to start home from the reunion. Mat Morrison and Mamie Morrison, his daughter, left prosecutrix and defendant together on the reunion grounds. That when Mamie Morrison, at least three different times, asked prosecutrix to return home, the defendant at each and all times coaxed, induced, and overpersuaded the prosecutrix to stay with him at the reunion grounds, without the consent of the Morrisons, in whose charge prosecutrix had been placed by her father. The state's evidence also shows: That prosecutrix was only 17 years of age at the time; that her father never consented to her going or being with the defendant, but, on the contrary, would not permit prosecutrix to visit the home of defendant, and had not permitted defendant and prosecutrix to be together for two years prior to this time; that some time previous to this time the prosecutrix had been staying at the home of defendant—that is to say, about two years previous—and became pregnant and gave birth to a child; that since the occurrence of that event the father of prosecutrix had never allowed her to be in defendant's company or visit defendant's home. Prosecutrix testified: That she lived with her father; that she went to the reunion at Ava with her brother-in-law, Mat Morrison, and his family, and at the reunion defendant asked her to stay with him at the reunion grounds and not return to her home with the Morrison family; that when the Morrisons asked her to go home defendant would whisper to her to stay; that they remained together on the reunion grounds Saturday night until toward morning, when they started for defendant's home, a distance of 12 or 15 miles, arriving there about daylight Sunday morning; that defendant's home was a one-room house, in which were two beds; that no other persons were at defendant's home when they arrived; and that they remained there together from the time of their arrival until Monday morning about 2 o'clock, when her father, the constable, John Thurman, Perry Riniker, and Mat Morrison came there and took her to her father's home. Prosecutrix further testified: That, during the time they were at defendant's home together defendant lay down on the side of the bed by her; that she had her clothes off; and that she went to sleep while they were in that position; and that she was asleep when her father and the officer arrived there Monday morning. Prosecutrix further testified that none of her family knew she was with defendant.

Defendant testified: That he first saw prosecutrix at the reunion grounds; that she remained there and went home with him "because she wanted to"; that he did not take her away for the purpose of having sexual relations with her; that he did not have sexual relations with her; that it was at her request that she went home with him; that he expected to find his wife and family at home when he arrived there; that he knew his wife had gone to her father's home that day, but expected her to return home on Saturday evening. Defendant further testified: That he and prosecutrix were together at the reunion pretty much all day, and admitted that he was with her when Mamie Morrison came after her to get her to return home with the Morrisons. That he stayed with her Saturday night. That they left the reunion grounds at dark Saturday night and arrived at home at daybreak, having walked all night; the distance being 15 or 16 miles. That his home was a one-room house. And that he and prosecutrix remained together at his home from the time they arrived there until early Monday morning, when the father of prosecutrix and the officer came to his house and arrested him. On cross-examination defendant testified: That he requested the prosecutrix to remain at the reunion with him. That after reaching his home he lay down on the side of the bed by her, with his shoes and coat off, and asked her why she thought his wife had not come. That she was undressed at the time. That he remained there with her all day Sunday, except a short time, when he went to a neighbor's house, who lived a couple of hundred yards from his home. That he did not know that his child was sick at his wife's father's home until after his wife came home. However, his wife's father lived only a mile and a half from where he and prosecutrix were together from early Sunday morning until early Monday morning. Defendant further testified: That his wife was sick on the day of the trial; that he took a buggy and went after her, but she was too ill to attend the trial; that he and his wife had been living together since this trouble. J. William Miller, witness for defendant, testified that defendant's wife was at his (Miller's) home on the day of the trial, that she was not well when he left home, and that he did not suppose she was well enough to attend the trial. On cross-examination this witness testified that defendant's wife stated to him that she would attend the trial if they had to have her and would come after her. There was also other evidence introduced on the part of the defendant tending to show that the reputation of the prosecuting witness for chastity was bad.

At the close of the evidence, the court instructed the jury upon every phase of the case to which the testimony was applicable. We do not deem it essential to reproduce the instructions given, but will give them such attention as we deem necessary during the course of the opinion. The cause was then submitted to the jury, and they returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty as charged in the information and assessed his punishment at three years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary. Time motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed and by the court taken up and overruled. Sentence and judgment were entered of record in conformity to the verdict returned, and from this judgment the defendant in due time and proper form prosecuted his appeal to this court, and the record is now before us for consideration.

E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and John M. Dawson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

FOX, J. (after stating the facts as above). In the consideration of this cause, we are not favored with a brief, or even any suggestions concerning the errors complained of, as disclosed by the record. However, in obedience to the commands of the statute, we will carefully analyze the disclosures of the record with the view of ascertaining if any substantial error has been committed in the trial of this cause.

1. We have analyzed in detail the disclosures of the record as to what occurred during the progress of the trial of the defendant in this cause, and find that numerous objections were made during the progress of the trial upon the introduction of evidence upon the part of the state. Upon this proposition it is sufficient to say that we have examined very carefully the objections urged to the testimony offered by the state, and in our opinion the testimony as offered, to which objections were interposed, was admissible; at least, we have reached the conclusion, after a careful analysis of the numerous objections to the introduction of evidence, that there was no substantial error in the action of the trial court in the admission or rejection of evidence. The evidence as offered by the state, to which objection was made, manifestly had a tendency to establish some essential elements of the crime charged. As to the rulings of the court excluding evidence offered by the defendant, the motion for new trial fails to preserve the action of the trial court upon that subject. Hence any complaint as to the rejection of testimony offered by the defendant is not before us for review.

2. Our attention is directed to the application for a continuance on the part of the defendant and the action of the court in overruling it. It is sufficient to say upon that question that we have fully considered the application, and in our opinion there was no error in denying the same. Granting or refusing applications for continuances in criminal cases is a matter that frequently rests within the sound judicial discretion of the trial court, and, unless it is apparent that such discretion has been abused and arbitrarily exercised, the appellate courts are not inclined to interfere with the action of trial court upon this subject. State v. Day, 100 Mo. 242, 12 S. W. 365; State v. Cochran, 147 Mo. 504, 49 S. W. 558; State v. Burns, 148 Mo. 167, 49 S. W. 1005, 71 Am. St. Rep. 588. But, aside from this, an examination of the record discloses that the application for a continuance is not embodied in the bill of exceptions which is signed by the judge of the trial court. This being true, it is not a subject for review by this court.

3. We have carefully considered the instructions which were given to the jury at the close of the evidence, and we are unable to discover any substantial error in the declarations as given. They are substantially in form with instructions which have heretofore met the approval of this court, applicable to offenses of this character.

They required the jury, before they were authorized in returning a verdict of guilty, to find beyond a reasonable doubt every essential element necessary to constitute the offense with which defendant was charged. The jury were fully informed by an appropriate instruction that the law presumed the innocence of the defendant, and that this presumption continued with him until it had been overcome by evidence which established his guilt to their satisfaction and beyond a reasonable doubt. The jury were also informed that the burden of proving the guilt of the defendant rested with the state, and if they had a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt they should acquit him. It may be further said that the court gave to the jury full information as to their duty in determining the credibility of witnesses and the weight and value of their testimony, substantially telling them that they were the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses, as well as the weight and value of their testimony, and in determining what weight and credit they should give to the testimony of any witness they should take into consideration the interest such witness may have had in the result of the trial, the relationship, if any, of any witness to the defendant or to the prosecuting witness, the attitude and demeanor of the witness on the witness stand, and finally told the jury that, if they believed that any witness had willfully and knowingly sworn falsely to any material fact in issue, they were at liberty to disregard any or all of such witness' testimony. A careful consideration of all the instructions indicates very clearly that all of the subjects to which the testimony had any reference were fully covered by them. The defendant requested the court to instruct the jury as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if you find and believe from the evidence that the defendant did have sexual relations with Myrtle Miller, unless you further find that he took the said Myrtle Miller for the purpose of concubinage, if you find that he did take her, you should acquit the defendant, as sexual intercourse is not concubinage, as defined in these instructions." This instruction was refused, and we think properly so, for the reason that the matters embraced in that instruction had been fully covered by instructions given by the court. The court in its instructions had clearly presented the gravamen of this offense; that the essential element of it was the taking away of the female under the age of 18 years for the purpose of prostitution and concubinage. Hence we take it that the instruction as offered by the defendant was a repetition of what had already been declared to the jury by the trial court, and it constituted no error to decline to give the instruction requested.

4. This leads us to the consideration of the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. We have indicated in the statement the nature and character of the evidence upon which this cause was submitted to the jury. This cause is no exception to causes generally of this character. It presents evidence both ways, and it is sufficient to say that it was the province of the jury to settle and adjust the conflict in the evidence. It needs no citation of authorities upon the proposition that this court will not undertake, if there is any substantial evidence to support the verdict, to retry the cause upon the mere disclosures of the record. This has been the uniform expression of this court. State v. Tetrick, 199 Mo. 100, 97 S. W. 564; State v. Mathews, 202 Mo. 143, 100 S. W. 420; State v. Smith, 190 Mo. 706, 90 S. W. 440; State v. Williams, 186 Mo. 128, 84 S. W. 924.

5. We have indicated our views upon the legal propositions as disclosed by the record. We see no reason for further discussing the complaints presented by it. The trial court fully and fairly declared the law to the jury applicable to this case. There was substantial evidence upon which the jury had the right, if they believed it, to predicate their verdict.

Finding no substantial error disclosed by the record in this cause, the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. All concur.

STATE v. KEATING.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1906.)

1. ELECTIONS (§ 328*)—FRAUDULENT REGISTRATION—OFFENSES—INFORMATION.

An information charging one with fraudulently registering in an election precinct of which he was not a resident need not allege that he was sworn when he made application for registering and before he answered the necessary questions.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 165*)—"FORMER JEOPARDY."

One is in legal jeopardy when he is put on trial before a court of competent jurisdiction on an indictment sufficient to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been empaneled and sworn, unless the jury is discharged with the consent of accused, or when, after verdict of guilty, the same has been set aside on accused's motion for a new trial or the judgment arrested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 290-298; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3802-3811; vol. 8, p. 7694.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 170*)—FORMER JEOPARDY.

Where accused was convicted on a second count of the information, and the court, on appeal, determined that the information was insufficient as to both counts, accused had not been put in jeopardy by reason of the conviction on the second count and the acquittal by inference on the first count.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 312-321; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1167*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—MISJOINDER OF COUNTS.

Where the court withdrew from the jury the first count of the information and submitted the case on the second count only, a misjoinder of the counts was not prejudicial to accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3101-3106; Dec. Dig. § 1167.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Hugo Muench, Judge.

Edward J. Keating was convicted of fraudulently registering in an election precinct, and he appeals. Affirmed.

See 202 Mo. 197, 100 S. W. 648.

Zachriyz & Bass, for appellant. E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Chas. G. Revelle, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BURGESS, J. On September 19, 1906, the circuit attorney of St. Louis filed in the circuit court an information in two counts, attempting to charge the defendant in the first count with unlawfully registering in two separate election precincts, to wit, in the Fourth and Ninth precincts of the Second ward, and in the second count attempting to charge him with the offense of fraudulently registering in an election precinct, to wit, the Ninth precinct of the Second ward, not having a lawful right to register therein; he not being a resident thereof. He was convicted upon the second count, and from the judgment entered in accordance with the verdict he appealed to this court, where the information was held insufficient, and judgment reversed and the cause remanded. State v. Keating, 202 Mo. 197, 100 S. W. 648. Thereupon, on the 6th day of January, 1908, the circuit attorney filed an amended information duly verified in two counts, charging in the first count the offense that he attempted to charge in the first count in the original information, and on which there had been no finding by the jury on the first trial, and in the second count charging the offense he attempted to charge in the second count of the original information. To this information defendant filed his plea in bar, alleging that, although the original information contained two counts, they covered but one and the same transaction and were supported by one and the same evidence, and the silence of the verdict as to the first count at the former trial amounted to a verdict of not guilty on that count, and therefore operated as an acquittal on both counts of the amended information. To this plea the state entered a general denial, and the defendant thereupon demanded that the issues thus presented be tried separate and apart from the general issue tendered by the plea of not guilty. This the court refused to do, and defendant being arraigned, and pleading not guilty, the cause went to trial, and at the close of all the evidence the court sustained the plea as to the first count, and withdrew same from the consideration of the jury. On the second count the defendant was convicted, and his punishment assessed at three years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. After unsuccessful motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, he was sentenced on the verdict, and has appealed to this court.

The testimony on the part of the state tended to prove that, in accordance with the laws of this state, there was a general registration of voters and electors in the city of St. Louis on the 19th, 20th, 21st, and 22d days of September, 1904, and that the judges and clerks of registration, after having been properly appointed, were duly sworn and qualified, and during those days discharged their respective duties as such judges and clerks of registration. All persons applying for registration were required to state under oath their place of residence, name, date of birth, age, and occupation, duration of residence in the precinct, city, and state, and certain other matters touching their qualification and right to register as voters. These questions were propounded by one of the judges, and the answers were recorded in books prepared and kept for that purpose, and, if the answers were satisfactory to the judges, the applicant was declared a qualified voter by entering the word "Yes" opposite his name in the column, headed by the words "Qualified Voters," and the applicant was then permitted to sign his name on the register in the proper place as a qualified voter. On the 19th of September, 1904, defendant appeared before the judges and clerks of registration of the Ninth election precinct of the Second ward, and requested to be permitted to register. After being sworn to truthfully answer questions touching his right to register, he stated, among other things, that his name was Edward J. Keating; that he resided at number 3127 South Twelfth street in said Ninth election precinct of said Second ward; that he was 23 years of age; that his occupation was that of bartender; that he was born in Missouri, and had resided in said election precinct for 10 years, and in the city of St. Louis and state of Missouri for 23 years. These answers were written by the clerk in the registration record, at the proper place in said book, and in the column for qualified voters defendant signed his name, and the judges declared him a qualified voter, and wrote the word "Yes" opposite his name in the column headed "Qualified Voters," and he was duly entered on the registration books as such. The testimony on the part of the state then tended to show that the defendant's residence was not in the Ninth election precinct, but that he was a young man and lived with his parents at 812 Wright street in the Fourth election precinct of the Second ward. The testimony also tended to show that defendant made application for registration in the Fourth precinct of the Second ward, and stated that he resided at 812 Wright street. He offered no evidence in his own behalf.

1. The information conformed to the rulings of this court on the former appeal in State v. Keating, 202 Mo. 197, 100 S. W. 648, and stated with particularity the doing by the defendant of all the acts necessary to registration within the meaning of Laws Mo. 1903, pp. 177, 178 (Ann. St. 1903, pp. 3506, 3507), and Rev. St. 1899, § 2120j, added by Laws 1903, p. 153 (Ann. St. 1903, p. 1373). The information did not allege that the defendant was sworn when he made application for registration, and before he answered the necessary questions, but, as held in State v. Cummings, 202 Mo., loc. cit. 624, 625, 105 S. W. 649, it was not essential that he do so, as this provision of the statute was one directed solely to the registration officers.

2. In regard to the special plea in bar, to wit, an acquittal on the former trial, it is sufficient to say that the legal efficiency of the record of the former trial offered to sustain the acquittal from the crime charged in the second information was entirely a question of law which the court was bound to decide. The identity of the prisoner and the record of the former information, trial and acquittal, were all admitted by the state, and there was nothing for a jury to pass upon. State v. Williams, 152 Mo., loc. cit. 120, 53 S. W. 424, 75 Am. St. Rep. 441; State v. Manning, 168 Mo., loc. cit. 429, 68 S. W. 341; State v. Laughlin, 180 Mo., loc. cit. 358, 79 S. W. 401; 1 Bishop's Crim. Proc. § 816, subsecs. 4, 5. The substantial question involved is: Did the court correctly hold that the said proceedings constituted no obstacle to a trial of the defendant on the new information? On the former appeal it was ruled that the information was insufficient to sustain the verdict and sentence, and for that reason the judgment was reversed and the cause remanded, with permission to the circuit attorney to file a new information if he thought fit. Without restating the doctrine and the reasons in support thereof in regard to what constituted jeopardy, we will content ourselves by adopting the language of Judge Phillips in State v. Hays, 78 Mo., loc. cit. 605, 606, to wit: "It is sufficient, for the purposes of this case, to say that if the former indictment had been sufficient to sustain a conviction, and its further prosecution had been voluntarily abandoned by the state after the impaneling of the jury, and the reading of the indictment, the defendant could not again be exposed to conviction upon the same charge.

Cooley, in his admirable work on Constitutional Limitations, p. 327, very succinctly asserts that a person is in legal jeopardy when he is put upon trial before a court of competent jurisdiction upon an indictment which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance: 'And a jury is said to be thus charged when they have been impaneled and sworn.' There are exceptions to this general rule, among which is that if the jury are discharged with the consent of defendant, expressed or implied, or if after verdict of guilty the same has been set aside on defendant's motion for a new trial, or the judgment arrested. Commonwealth v. Stowell, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 572; State v. Slack, 6 Ala. 676." It is the accepted doctrine that, in order for a former trial and acquittal or conviction to be invoked on a plea of former jeopardy, it is essential that the former conviction or trial must have been upon a sufficient indictment or information. Thus in State v. Manning, 168 Mo., loc. cit. 430, 68 S. W. 341, this court said: "The indictment No. 2,123 was invalid on its face, and no judgment could have been rendered upon it, and hence the plea in bar was lacking in this essential to a good plea of former jeopardy." As this court decided on the former appeal that this information was insufficient as to both counts, nothing further need be added to show that that conviction on the second count and the acquittal by inference on the first count neither amounted to jeopardy within the meaning of our Constitution and law.

3. In regard to the motion to elect, it suffices to say that the defendant cannot complain for the reason that the court withdrew the first count from the jury's consideration, and no possible harm could have resulted to him from the alleged misjoinder of the two counts. State v. Richmond, 186 Mo., loc. cit. 81, 84 S. W. 880; State v. Carragin, 210 Mo., loc. cit. 365, 109 S. W. 553, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561.

It remains only to add that the arraignment was sufficient and in proper form, and the evidence amply full to support the verdict.

We have carefully examined the record, and have passed upon all the alleged errors assigned in the motion for new trial which appear to us to have had any merit in them.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

STATE v. WILSON.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 16*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—"CONFIDENCE GAME" AS CONSTITUTING OFFENSE.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2213 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1410), provides that "every person who, with intent to cheat and defraud, shall obtain or attempt to obtain from any other person or persons, any money, property or valuable thing whatever, by means or by use of any trick or deception, or false and fraudulent representation or statement or pretense, or by any other means or instrument or device, commonly called the 'confidence game,' or by means or by use of any false or bogus check, or by any other written or printed or engraved instrument, or spurious coin or metal, shall be deemed guilty of a felony," etc. Held, to be manifestly directed against obtaining money or property from one whose confidence has first been secured by false and fraudulent representations in connection with acts done, with intent to cheat and defraud, to provide for a class of false representations not included in some other section dealing with ordinary false representations, and to be intended to reach a class of offenders known as "confidence men," who obtain money by some trick or representation designed to deceive.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1420, 1421.]

2. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 34*)—SUFFICIENCY OF INFORMATION.

An information setting out in detail acts and representations of defendant, from which it appears that, by falsely representing he was the traveling salesman of a company with which the prosecuting witness was doing business, by assuming to take an order as such salesman, and by representing that an expected draft for his traveling expenses had not been received, he induced the witness to cash a draft, assumed to be drawn by him on the company therefor, sufficiently charges an offense under such section.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 371*)—EVIDENCE—OTHER OFFENSES.

In a prosecution under Rev. St. 1899, § 2213 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1410), for fraudulently obtaining money by means of a worthless draft, it was competent for the state, for the purpose of showing intent, to introduce evidence of defendant's perpetration, or attempt to perpetrate, frauds on other persons, thereby obtaining money from them under the same or similar circumstances at or near the time of the act in question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 830; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1043*)—PRESERVING OBJECTION TO TESTIMONY FOR REVIEW.

An objection to testimony, to be considered on appeal, should at least briefly indicate some reason therefor.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 382*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—COMPLAINT AND AFFIDAVIT OF PROSECUTING WITNESS.

The complaint and affidavit made by the prosecuting witness before a justice of the peace were properly excluded, in the absence of any tendency to prove or disprove any of the issues involved, or to contradict or impeach any witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 382.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 770*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

There was no error in an instruction which fully covered the charge in the information, and required the jury to find every essential fact necessary to constitute the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1806; Dec. Dig. § 770.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

7. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 52*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—LIMITING PURPOSE OF EVIDENCE OF OTHER FRAUDS.

In a prosecution, under Rev. St. 1899, § 2213 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1410), for fraudulently obtaining money on a worthless draft, an instruction limiting the purpose of evidence of frauds by defendant on other persons at or near the time of the offense in question was entirely proper.

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 778, 789*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF—REASONABLE DOUBT.

An instruction fully covering the presumption of innocence, and informing the jury that the burden of proof rests on the state, and requiring them to find defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and directing them in the usual manner that if they entertain such a doubt of his guilt, they should give him the benefit of it, is proper.

9. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 49*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction in a prosecution, under Rev. St. 1899, § 2213 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1410), for fraudulently obtaining money by means of a worthless draft.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Texas County; L. B. Woodside, Judge.

D. E. Wilson was convicted of obtaining money fraudulently, and he appeals. Affirmed.

The defendant in this cause has brought this case to this court by appeal from a judgment of the circuit court of Texas county, Mo., convicting him of obtaining fraudulently, by means of a trick and deception, false and fraudulent representations, the sum of $25 from one John H. Bauch. The amended information, which was duly verified, upon which the defendant was tried, was predicated upon the provisions of section 2213, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1410). The sufficiency of the information was challenged in the trial court by a motion to quash, as well as in the motion in arrest of judgment. Hence it is well to reproduce the information upon which the judgment in this cause is based. Omitting formal parts, it is as follows:

"John H. Sanks, prosecuting attorney, within and for the county of Texas and state of Missouri, upon his information and belief, informs the court that D. E. Wilson, on the 10th day of January, 1908, in the county of Texas and state of Missouri, then and there with intent unlawfully and feloniously to cheat and defraud one John H. Bauch, then and there unlawfully, knowingly, and feloniously, by use of a trick and deception and false and fraudulent representation, statement, and pretense, did falsely and fraudulently represent and pretend to the said John H. Bauch that he, the said D. E. Wilson, was then and there the representative and authorized agent of the Pratt Food Company of Philadelphia, Pa., a corporation duly incorporated and existing under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania, and that he, the said D. E. Wilson, had full right and authority from the said corporation then and there to transact business for said corporation, to sell and contract for the sale of the goods and products of said corporation, and to furnish advertising matter to the dealers in said goods and products; that he, the said D. E. Wilson, was in the employ of said corporation, and sent by the said corporation for the purpose of selling the goods and products of said corporation, and furnishing and distributing the advertising matter of said corporation to dealers.

"And the said D. E. Wilson in pursuance of his purpose and intent to cheat and defraud the said John H. Bauch as aforesaid, did then and there, as the agent and representative of said corporation, pretend to, and did, sell to the said John H. Bauch a bill of goods and products of the said corporation, and then and there take an order, from the said John H. Bauch, for advertising matter of the said corporation, advertising the goods and products of the same, which order for said goods and advertising matter is in the words and figures as follows: 'Order No. Date. M. : Ship to John M. Bauch. At Cabool, Mo. How ship, Freight. When, At once. Terms, March 1st 60 days. 1,000 letter heads; 1,000 bill heads; 1,000 statements; 1,000 envelopes; 500 handbooks; plenty of signs to tack up on counter; plenty of large Litho signs; ½ bale 12-lb. sacks stock food, printed like sample attached. Ship at once.'

"And he, the said D. E. Wilson, then and there represented to the said John H. Bauch that he had expected to receive a draft or check from the said corporation to defray his traveling expenses as representative of the said corporation, but that said draft or check had not been received, that he, the said D. E. Wilson, was in need of money to defray said traveling expenses, and requested the said John H. Bauch to cash a draft of the said corporation for the sum of $25 for the purpose of defraying said traveling expenses, which said draft he, the said D. E. Wilson, then and there drew on said corporation, said draft being in the words and figures as follows: '$25.00. 'Cabool, Mo., 1-10-1908. At sight pay to the order of John H. Bauch, twenty-five dollars, value received, and charge the same to the account of D. E. Wilson. To Pratt Food Co. No. ———, Phila. Pa.'—which said draft the Pratt Food Company refused to honor and pay, but returned the same to the said John H. Bauch, and the said John H. Bauch, believing the said false and fraudulent representations and statements and pretenses made as aforesaid by the said D. E.

Wilson to be true, and being deceived thereby, was induced by reason thereof, and did then and there cash said draft, and in pursuance thereof paid to the said D. E. Wilson the sum of $25 lawful money of the United States of the value of $25; and the said D. E. Wilson by means and use of said trick, deception, false and fraudulent representations, statements, and pretenses so made as aforesaid, then and there unlawfully, knowingly, and feloniously did obtain from him, the said John H. Bauch, the sum of $25, the money and property of the said John H. Bauch, with the intent then and there unlawfully and feloniously to cheat and defraud him, the said John H. Bauch, of the same.

"Whereas, in truth and in fact, the said D. E. Wilson did not have any right or authority then and there to transact business for said corporation, and was not then their representative or authorized agent of said corporation to sell and contract for the sale of the goods and products of the said corporation, or the furnishing of advertising matter to dealers for said corporation; that he was not employed in any manner by said corporation, and he, the said D. E. Wilson, well knew that he, the said D. E. Wilson, did not have any right or authority then and there to transact business for said corporation, or to sell the goods and products of the same, or furnish dealers with advertising matter, advertising the business of said corporation, or to receive any draft or checks or money from the said corporation in any manner to defray his traveling expenses, and he, the said D. E. Wilson, was not then and there, or at any time, sent by the said corporation to represent said corporation in any manner whatever, against the peace and dignity of the state."

Upon the overruling of the motion to quash this information the defendant was duly arraigned, entered a plea of not guilty, and the trial proceeded. The testimony developed upon the trial of this cause tended substantially to establish the following state of facts: That John H. Bauch, about January 10, 1908, and prior thereto, was engaged in the milling and mercantile business in the town of Cabool, in Texas county, Mo., and handled, among other things, Pratt's foods; that on the morning of January 10, 1908, defendant went to Bauch's store, and stated that his name was Wilson, and that he was the traveling salesman and representative of the Pratt Food Company. After inquiring of Bauch concerning his supply of such foods, defendant stated that his company, owing to the fierce competition it was then encountering, was preparing and furnishing free to its customers some special advertising matter. On being advised by Bauch that his supply of such advertising matter, including letter and bill stationery, was about exhausted, defendant remarked that he had better send him some, and thereupon took from his pocket an order book, and, after writing in the book certain items which he called aloud as he entered them on the order book, he asked Bauch if that would be sufficient, to which inquiry Bauch replied in the affirmative. Bauch then informed defendant that he was in need of some 12-lb. sacks of stock food, and directed defendant to send him 100 pounds. Defendant placed this on the order with the advertising matter, and, after describing to Bauch some of the territory in which he said he was the traveling representative of the Pratt Food Company, and after ascertaining that Bauch would be in the store at a later hour that morning, defendant left the store, saying that he would return. Soon thereafter defendant returned to the store, and went to the office desk where Bauch then was, and informed Bauch that he had failed to get his check for traveling expenses and was about out of money, and requested Bauch to cash for him a draft in the sum of $25. Bauch agreed to accommodate him, and defendant filled out a blank draft which he took from his pocket, and Bauch gave him the $25. The draft was drawn on the Pratt Food Company, and was never paid, as defendant was in no manner connected with, and had at no time been the representative or employé of, that company. When defendant received the money, he took from his pocket the order, which, on the previous trip to the store was taken, and, after placing it in a stamped envelope, remarked that he would get it off on the morning mail. He then left Cabool on the morning train, saying he was going to Thayer, Mo. After defendant's arrest he stated to Bauch that his reason for doing as he did was because he had been drunk. Bauch let him have the money, relying upon his representations and statements that he was the agent of that company, and his conduct and acts in connection with taking the order, etc.

The testimony also discloses that at the town of Fordland, Webster county, Mo., a distance of about 53 miles from Cabool, and located on the same line of railroad, defendant, on January 11, 1908, went to another customer of the Pratt Food Company, Dr. John W. Good, and made the same representations and statements as he had made to Bauch. On that occasion he told Dr. Good that he would have the company send him some calendars and stationery, and, after taking out his order book and writing what he said was a requisition on the company for the calendars and advertising matter, stated that he was a little shy on traveling expenses, and asked Dr. Good to cash for him a $10 draft. The doctor, needing for immediate use the money he then had on hand, declined to cash the draft, and thus escaped being fleeced. Again, on January 13, 1908, at the town of Rogersville, located about 60 miles from Cabool, and on the same line of railroad and in the same direction from Cabool as Fordland, defendant called on N. T. Bowles, a druggist, and dealer in Pratt's Foods, and introduced himself as Pratt's agent, and, after taking an order from Bowles for some food and stationery and advertising matter, he said that he was in a hurry, and that some of the business men would have to help him out, as he was in need of money. He asked Bowles to accompany him to the bank and identify him in order to enable him to cash a draft. This Bowles did, and on his indorsement defendant's draft on the Pratt Food Company for $25 was paid. Payment on this draft was also refused by the Pratt Food Company, and Bowles was required to take up the draft and refund to the bank the $25. Defendant actually mailed to the Pratt Food Company the various orders he had thus taken, but attached no signature, and these orders and papers were received by the company, but not recognized, because defendant was not their agent.

At the close of the evidence the court gave instructions to the jury numbered 1, 2, and 3. It is not essential that we reproduce such instructions, but it is sufficient to say that instruction No. 1 was predicated upon the allegations in the information, and required the jury to affirmatively find the existence of every essential element necessary to constitute the offense charged. Instruction No. 2 simply limited the purpose of evidence introduced by the state of other similar offenses committed by defendant. Instruction No. 3 appropriately directed the jury upon the subjects of presumption of innocence, the burden of proof, and reasonable doubt. The cause was then submitted to the jury, and they returned their verdict, finding the defendant guilty as charged, and assessed his punishment at imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of four years. Timely motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed and by the court overruled. Sentence and judgment followed in conformity to the verdict returned, and from this judgment the defendant prosecuted this appeal, and the record is now before us for consideration.

E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Chas. G. Revelle, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

FOX, J. (after stating the facts as above). The first legal proposition with which we are confronted, as disclosed by the record, is the challenge by the defendant to the sufficiency of the information. The statute, upon which this information is predicated is section 2213, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1410), which, so far as it relates to the information in this cause, provides that "every person who, with intent to cheat and defraud, shall obtain or attempt to obtain from any other person or persons, any money, property or valuable thing whatever, by means or by use of any trick or deception, or false and fraudulent representation or statement or pretense, or by any other means or instrument or device, commonly called 'the confidence game,' or by means or by use of any false or bogus check, or by any other written or printed or engraved instrument, or spurious coin or metal, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding seven years." It may here be noted that, in addition to the provisions of the statute, as herein indicated, it also makes provision as to the form of an indictment, but it will be observed that the information in the case at bar does not undertake to adopt the form of the charge as is embraced within that section. Hence it follows that the cases of State v. Terry, 100 Mo. 601, 19 S. W. 206, State v. Cameron, 117 Mo. 371, 22 S. W. 1024, and State v. Kain, 118 Mo. 5, 23 S. W. 763, wherein it was held that that statute in undertaking to prescribe the form of the indictment, was unconstitutional, has no application to the information in the case at bar. Manifestly the provisions of section 2213 were directed against the obtaining of money or property from a person whose confidence has first been secured by and through means of false and fraudulent representations in connection with acts done, with the intent to cheat and defraud. As was said in the case of State v. Pickett, 174 Mo. 663, 74 S. W. 844, the purpose of this statute was to provide for a class of false representations not included in some other section dealing with the subject of the ordinary false representations. It was intended to reach a class of offenders known as "confidence men," who obtain the money of their victims by means of, or by the use of, some trick or representation designed to deceive. The very essence of the crime denounced by section 2213 is that the injured party must have relied upon some false or deceitful pretense or device and parted with his property.

After a careful analysis of the charge as embraced in the information in the case at bar, we are of the opinion that the acts and representations as made by the defendant, which are set out in detail in the information, clearly places this offense within the class of cases defined by section 2213. It must not be overlooked that the defendant in the case at bar, at the very inception of his dealings with the prosecuting witness, sought to obtain his confidence by representations that he was acting as the agent of a firm dealing in goods and products that the prosecuting witness carried in stock; and it further appears from the allegations in the information that, to thoroughly obtain such confidence of the party charged to have been defrauded, he took his order for certain goods and products as the agent and salesman of the firm which dealt in such goods and products. All of these representations are alleged in the information, and properly so, for the trick and deception consisted in convincing the prosecuting witness that he was the agent and traveling salesman of the firm he claimed to represent, thereby obtaining his confidence to the extent that, upon the false and fraudulent representation that he had expected to receive a draft or check from the Pratt Food Company to defray his traveling expenses, but that said draft or check had not been received, he induced John H. Bauch, the prosecuting witness, to cash a draft drawn by the defendant upon the Pratt Food Company for the sum of $25 for the purpose of defraying the traveling expenses of the defendant. We are unable to conceive a series of representations and acts, all of which are averred in the information, which present more strongly and clearly a case contemplated by the provisions of section 2213. The false and fraudulent representations, pretenses, statements, and acts done by the defendant, which clearly point to a trick and deception, are all set out with remarkable particularity and precision in the information. In our opinion every essential element necessary to constitute an offense under that section is embraced in the information.

The defendant in this case doubtless realized that, if he simply requested the cashing of the draft upon the Pratt Food Company, in all probability his request would not be granted. Hence he resorted to the deception and trick of impressing the prosecuting witness that he was the agent and representative of a business concern with which the prosecuting witness had had dealings, and thereby obtained his confidence, and manifestly it was through this deception and trick that he obtained the money from the prosecuting witness upon the worthless draft. We repeat that this information sufficiently charges an offense under the provisions of section 2213, and is not out of harmony with the cases of State v. Woodward, 156 Mo. 143, 56 S. W. 880; State v. Jackson, 112 Mo. 585, 20 S. W. 674; State v. Pickett, 174 Mo., loc. cit. 667, 668, 74 S. W. 844; State v. Vandenburg, 159 Mo. 230, 60 S. W. 79.

2. The record before us discloses numerous complaints at the action of the trial court in the admission and rejection of testimony. The defendant is not represented in this court. Hence, under the provisions of the statute, we have examined in detail the record disclosing the objections and exceptions to the action of the trial court in the disposition of this cause. There was, during the progress of the trial, evidence introduced upon the part of the state tending to show that the defendant had perpetrated, or undertook to perpetrate, frauds upon other persons, thereby obtaining money from them under the same and similar circumstances, at or near the time it is charged the acts were committed in the case at bar. Learned counsel for defendant in the trial court interposed objections to this character of testimony, and properly preserved their exceptions. This proposition is not one of first impression, but has in many instances been in judgment before this court. In State v. Myers, 82 Mo. 553, 52 Am. Rep. 389, Judge Phillips, who was then a commissioner of this court, exhaustively reviewed both the English and American authorities upon this subject, and from such review deduced the conclusion that, while as a general proposition a distinct crime, for which the party might be separately proceeded against, could not be given in evidence against the prisoner on trial for a single offense, this well-settled rule has its exceptions, equally well settled, and it was expressly held in that case, adopting the views of Judge Story in Wood v. United States, 16 Pet. 342, 10 L. Ed. 987, that where "the question was one of fraudulent intent or not, and upon questions of that sort, where the intent of the party is matter in issue, it has always been deemed allowable, as well in criminal as civil cases, to introduce evidence of other acts and doings of the party of a kindred character, in order to illustrate or establish his intent or motive, in the particular act directly in judgment." This court, in State v. Turley, 142 Mo. 403, 44 S. W. 267, was confronted with the same proposition, in a case of similar character, and it was there said by Judge Burgess, speaking for this court, that: "Evidence of other efforts upon the part of defendant, made about the same time, to obtain goods from other merchants, upon the same character of statements and representations, was admissible for the purpose of showing the intent of the defendant, and to this purpose that kind of evidence was properly restricted by the state's fifth instruction, so that defendant had no right to complain on that score." To the same effect is State v. Wilson, 143 Mo. 334, 44 S. W. 722. In fact an examination of the authorities in this state makes it manifest that the case of State v. Myers, supra, on this point has been consistently followed and adhered to by this court in all of its subsequent rulings. State v. Cooper, 85 Mo. 256; State v. Bayne, 88 Mo. 604; State v. Sarony, 95 Mo. 349, 8 S. W. 407; State v. Balch, 136 Mo. 103, 37 S. W. 808.

The next objection to the admission of testimony to which the record directs our attention is that of witness Shafer, introduced by the state, who testified along the line that the defendant was not the agent, representative, or employé of the Pratt Food Company, and was in no manner authorized to solicit or take orders for them, or in any manner represent that company. The objection to the testimony of this witness seems to be predicated upon the theory that there was no allegation in the information that defendant was not in fact the agent and representative of the Pratt Food Company. In this we are of the opinion that it is a misconception of the charge as embraced in the information. The information plainly charges that the defendant falsely and fraudulently pretended to be the agent of the Pratt Food Company, and this is followed by another allegation that he in truth and in fact was not such agent, and had no authority to represent them. There is no merit in this objection, and it must be ruled adversely to the appellant.

We find other objections disclosed by the record, but they are mere objections, without assigning any reasons for them. In other words, it is simply stated that "We object." In view of the uniform expressions by this court that objections in that form are insufficient to preserve the rulings of the court upon them for review in this court, we deem it unnecessary to burden this opinion with a citation of the authorities. An objection to testimony during the progress of a trial should at least briefly indicate some reason for such objection; and, in order to entitle it to the consideration of this court, this should be done.

Upon the trial of this cause defendant offered in evidence the complaint and affidavit made by the prosecuting witness before the justice of the peace. The court, upon the objection of the state, excluded the complaint and affidavit, and in our opinion the action of the court was entirely proper. Prior to the offering of the complaint and affidavit made by the prosecuting witness, a preliminary inquiry was made concerning the making and signing of the affidavit, to which inquiry prompt answers were given. The purpose of offering this complaint and affidavit as made before the justice of the peace was not disclosed by counsel for appellant in the trial of this cause, and manifestly the only theory upon which such offer was made would be that it tended to contradict or impeach the testimony as given in the trial of the cause by the prosecuting witness. The affidavit and complaint as made before the justice is fully set out in the bill of exceptions, and we have carefully examined it; and, while it is true that it does not set forth all of the details of the offense as fully as the information by the prosecuting attorney, yet it contains nothing which in any way contradicts or has a tendency to impeach the statements as made by the prosecuting witness upon the trial of this cause. Hence we have reached the conclusion that this testimony was immaterial. It had no tendency to prove or disprove any of the issues involved in this proceeding, nor did it tend to contradict or impeach any witness in the proceeding.

3. This leads us to the consideration of the instructions given by the court. Instruction No. 1 fully covered the charge in the information, and required the jury to find every essential fact necessary to constitute the offense. There was no error in that instruction. Instruction No. 2 was a very appropriate instruction, limiting the purpose for which evidence was offered by the state during the progress of the trial, to which reference has heretofore been made, as to the perpetration of frauds upon other persons at or near the time it is charged this offense was committed, in the same section of the country and under similar circumstances. This instruction was entirely proper, and is in accord with what this court held in State v. Turley, supra, concerning evidence of this character, that it should be properly restricted to the purpose for which it was introduced; that is to say in ascertaining the intent to defraud, which was an issue in the cause. Instruction No. 3 fully covered the subject of the presumption of innocence, and informed the jury that the burden of proof rested upon the state, and required them to find the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, and directed them, in the usual manner, that if they entertained a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, they should give him the benefit of it and acquit him.

4. The defendant, not being represented in this court, has lead us to make a very careful examination of the disclosures of the record, with the view of ascertaining whether or not there was any substantial error committed during the progress of the trial of this cause. After such examination we are clearly of the opinion that there was no substantial error committed by the trial court which would authorize the reversal of this judgment. No one can read in detail the testimony developed upon the trial without being convinced that the defendant is guilty of the perpetration of the fraud charged in the information. The rulings of the court upon the admission and rejection of evidence were entirely in accord with the well-settled principles of law applicable to that subject. The instructions of the court fully and fairly covered every subject to which the testimony was applicable.

Entertaining these views, the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; C. A. Mosman, Judge.

Action by John Halter and others against John L. Leonard and others. From a judgment for defendants, but ordering that the temporary restraining order issued in the cause shall remain in force pending an appeal, plaintiffs appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Mytton & Parkinson and C. C. Crow, for appellants. Luke H. Moss, for respondents.

GANTT, P. J. On the 6th of February, 1905, John A. Lynch et al. filed with the clerk of the county court of Buchanan county a petition to establish and open a county road in said county. The petitioners allege that they were citizens of said county, and at least 12 of them were duly qualified and competent adult petitioners, residents of and owners in their own proper rights of lands in the municipal townships through which said proposed road was to be located, three of whom resided in the immediate neighborhood of said proposed road. They stated that the said road was to be 30 feet in width and would be located in the townships of Agency and Washington in said county, and was of great public utility, and was not a change of a previous location, and that the beginning, courses, and termination thereof, with not less than two points named on the direction of said public road, are as follows: "Beginning at the quarter section corner between sections 7 and 8, in township 56, of range 34, in center of public road, and run north with section line 106 two-thirds rods, to a point, and thence west, 80 rods, and thence north, 53½ rods, to north line of section 7, and thence north to a point due of the center of section 6, and thence west to the center of section 6, and thence north to the north line of section 6 in same township and range, and thence west, 4 chains and 64 links, to quarter section corner south line of section 31, in township 57, of range 34, and thence due north with section line to Garrettsburg road, in section 31 aforesaid." The petition further avers that this road whenever practicable would run along government surveys, and that this petition was accompanied by the names of all the residents and other persons owning lands through which said proposed road would run, and also names of all who were willing to give the right of way for said public road. And they prayed for the establishment of said proposed public road and for all proper relief. At the time of the filing of said petition said John A. Lynch et al. whose names were subscribed thereto filed with the clerk of the county court a notice of said intended application for the location of said road, whereby notice was given that on February 6, 1905, at the regular February term, they would present said petition for said public road to the county court of said county. This petition was filed and proof of legal notice was made on the 6th of February, 1905, and the court set the cause down for hearing on the 27th of February, 1905. On the 20th of February a remonstrance was filed by the plaintiffs and others by the circuit clerk of the county of Buchanan against said road. The hearing was had on said petition and remonstrance on the 28th of April, 1905, and on which said last-named date the county court found that the said proposed road was of great public necessity, was practicable, and that the facts justified the location of the road at the expense of the county, and ordered the road commissioner to view, survey, and mark out said proposed road and report his proceedings in the premises at the next term of the said court to be begun in May, 1905. In obedience to the order of the court, the county surveyor on the 1st of May, 1905, made his report in which he stated the names of the landowners who gave the right of way, and of those who claimed damages, and named as among those who declined to state what damages they claimed John Halter, Mrs. J. G. Adams, and the heirs of the Stock estate. He also filed his estimate of the cost of building the bridges and culverts and grading said road, and filed with his report a plat which showed the owners of the land and the numbers thereof. Thereupon the court appointed J. L. Leonard, W.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

J. Wilson, and David Turner, commissioners, to assess damages on said road, and to report their findings to the August term of said court. The report of these commissioners was afterwards filed, in which it appeared that John Halter, the plaintiff herein, was allowed damages to the amount of $30 by the running of the said road on the south side of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 6, township 56, range 34. The record then shows that the report of the commissioners was approved by the court, and exceptions were filed by the plaintiffs Halter et al., a jury waived, and the plaintiffs' exceptions overruled; and thereupon the plaintiff on behalf of himself and others was granted an appeal to the circuit court of Buchanan county. Pending the said appeal in the circuit court the plaintiffs commenced this suit in the circuit court of Buchanan county to obtain an injunction against the judges of the county court and the county surveyor and Peter Olson, the road commissioner, to enjoin and restrain them from taking or attempting to take any part of the plaintiffs' lands for the purposes of said proposed roads as described in said petition in the county court. On January 20, 1906, the defendants filed their answers, in which they denied each and every allegation complained of in the plaintiffs' petition, and prayed that the temporary injunction issued be dissolved. Thereupon the cause was heard in the circuit court, and on March 10, 1906, the court found for the defendants, and ordered that the restraining order theretofore made in the cause should remain in force pending the appeal to this court; plaintiffs having taken the proper steps for prosecuting this appeal to this court.

1. The plaintiffs rely upon practically two grounds only for the reversal of the judgment of the circuit court dissolving the temporary injunction and dismissing the bill. The first insistence is that the county court acquired no jurisdiction of the proceedings to establish the public road in question for the reason, as alleged, that the petition did not contain the names of all the persons owning land which would be taken for the said public road. By reference to section 9414, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4327), it will be noted that there is a proviso therein in these words: "Said petition shall be accompanied by the names of all resident persons owning land through which said proposed road or change of road shall run, with the amount of damages claimed by them so far as can be ascertained and also the names of those who are willing to give the right of way of said proposed road or change of road." In the petition filed in this case for the opening of this road it was alleged: "This petition is accompanied by the names of all residents and other persons owning land through which said proposed road shall run with the amounts of damages claimed by each of them so far as can be ascertained, and also by the names of all those who are willing to give the right of way for said proposed public road." And the county court, upon the final hearing of this petition and application, found as a matter of fact that said petition was accompanied by the names of all the resident persons owning land through which said proposed road would run. There is no warrant in the statute for the contention that the petition itself should contain these names. Full and complete jurisdiction was conferred upon the county court to pass upon the sufficiency of this petition, and to find as a matter of fact that it was accompanied by the list of landowners, as provided by the statutes. As said in Bauble v. Ossman, 142 Mo., loc. cit. 505, 44 S. W. 339: "The county court having the exclusive jurisdiction for the laying out and opening public roads, and having acquired jurisdiction in this particular case by the notice and petition, its findings and judgment are not open to collateral attack, and its judgment is entitled to every presumption in its favor. Lingo v. Burford, 112 Mo. 149, 20 S. W. 459; Snoddy v. Pettis County, 45 Mo. 361; Rose's Guardian v. Kansas City, 128 Mo. 135, 30 S. W. 518."

2. The contention that the proceeding was void and open to this collateral attack because the report of the county surveyor was made by his deputy in the name of his principal, and not by the principal himself, is equally untenable. By section 10194, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4629), it is provided that "deputies may be appointed by any surveyor, who before they proceed to discharge their duties shall take an oath well, truly, and faithfully to discharge the duties of deputy surveyor." It is a well-settled rule of law that all official acts done by a deputy should be done in the name of the principal. "A deputy is one who by appointment exercises an office in another's right having no interest therein but doing all things in his principal's name and for whose misconduct the principal is answerable." 5 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 623; Carter v. Hornback, 139 Mo. 238, 40 S. W. 893. In regard to the assignment found in the brief for the first time that the allowance for attorney's fees to the respondents was unauthorized, it is sufficient to say that no such ground was assigned in the motion for new trial or in the regular assignments of error. Nor do we see any objection any way to the allowance of this fee because it was only allowed after a final judgment had been rendered after a full hearing of the cause, and after all the damages, including the attorney's fees, had accrued up to that time.

It follows that the judgment of the circuit court dissolving the injunction is sustained and affirmed, and that the final order continuing said injunction in force until the disposition of this appeal should be, and is, set aside, and the judgment in all other respects affirmed.

ANCELL et al. v. SOUTHERN ILLINOIS & M. BRIDGE CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2. June 29, 1909. Rehearing Denied July 13, 1909. Motion to Transfer to Banc Denied Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 79*)—PROPERTY OF WARD—SALE OF "REAL ESTATE."

The homestead right of minors in land of their deceased father is "real estate" within Rev. St. 1899, § 3504 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2000), permitting the probate court to order the sale of a minor's real estate when the personal estate is insufficient for his maintenance, etc., and section 3510 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2002), permitting the court to order a sale of a ward's real estate when it would be for his benefit; the homestead being an estate in land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. § 331; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 5989-5991; vol. 8, pp. 7778-7779.]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 49*)—PROPERTY TAKEN—HOMESTEAD RIGHT OF MINORS.

The homestead right of a minor in land can be taken by eminent domain.

3. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 87*)—SALE OF WARD'S LAND—NOTICE OF SALE—NECESSITY.

No notice of the guardian's application to sell a minor's real estate for his maintenance and education need be given to the minor under Rev. St. 1899, § 3505 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2000), providing that sales of a minor's real estate shall be made by the same proceedings as in cases of the sale of a decedent's realty for debts, except that there shall be no publication to parties in interest before making the order of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. § 345; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

4. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 84*)—GUARDIAN AD LITEM—SALE OF WARD'S LAND—PRESUMPTIONS.

There is no presumption of law that a guardian is so interested personally in a proceeding to sell the ward's real estate that a guardian ad litem should be appointed to represent the minor; every presumption being indulged that the guardian will protect the ward's interest until the contrary is shown.

5. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 88*)—SALE OF WARD'S LAND—TIME OF SALE.

That the order of sale of a minor's land was made the same day the petition therefor was filed by the guardian, and not at the next term of court, was at most an irregularity, which did not go to the jurisdiction of the probate court to order the sale and did not invalidate it; Rev. St. 1899, § 148 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 386), providing that, when the petition for the sale of a decedent's land for debts is filed, the court shall order a sale unless it be shown on the first day of the next term of court that the sale is not necessary, applying to administrator's sales, and not to a guardian's sale, notwithstanding section 3505 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2000), providing that the sale of a minor's real estate shall be made by the same proceedings as in cases of the sale of a decedent's realty for debts, except that there shall be no publication to parties in interest before making the order, that section not requiring notice to the ward of the obligation to sell.

6. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 105*)—SALE OF WARD'S LAND—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—SETTING ASIDE SALE.

Since the probate court had jurisdiction of the sale of a ward's real estate for his maintenance, etc., the question of the sufficiency of the guardian's petition for the sale was for it to determine, and its action in approving the petition cannot be reviewed in absence of fraud, so that the question of the invalidity of a sale because the guardian's petition was not sworn to will not be reviewed.

7. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 105*)—SALE OF WARD'S LAND—PROCEEDINGS TO VACATE SALE—GROUNDS—PROOF OF APPRAISEMENT.

A sale of a ward's land will not be declared invalid because the appraisers, who the guardian's certificate of appraisement showed had appraised the land, could not remember years afterward, upon testifying in proceedings to set aside the sale, of having appraised the land.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1012*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIONS—EQUITY CASES.

While the Supreme Court can weigh the evidence in equity cases, where the evidence is mostly oral, it will defer largely to the judgment of the trial court upon questions of the weight and credibility of the testimony; it having a better opportunity to determine those questions, and its findings will not be disturbed in absence of a showing of abuse of discretion.

9. CORPORATIONS (§ 388*)—ULTRA VIRES ACTS—PURCHASE OF LAND—ESTOPPEL TO ASSERT.

If a sale of minors' land to a corporation upon petition by the guardian was otherwise valid, and the minors have received the consideration of the sale, they cannot assert want of power in the corporation to take and hold the land as a ground for vacating the sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1566; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Scott County; Henry C. Riley, Judge.

Action by Alonzo W. Ansell and others against the Southern Illinois & Missouri Bridge Company and others. From a judgment dismissing the petition, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

R. G. Ranney and Jno. A. Hope, for appellants. W. H. Miller, for respondents.

GANTT, P. J. This is a suit by Alonzo W., Florence A., and Thornton A. Ansell, the latter a minor child of Thornton Ansell, deceased, by his guardian and curator, Thomas M. Williams, to set aside a certain deed made by their former guardian, Samuel Tanner, to 9.1 acres of land particularly described as follows: "Beginning at a point 1,030 feet west of the northeast corner of section 4 at the intersection of the south right of way line of the Gray's Point Terminal Railway and the west line of the public road lying in the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 4, township 29, range 14 east, and extending in southwesterly along said right of way line, 1,280 feet, more or less; thence south, 310 feet; thence northeasterly parallel to said right of way line, 1,280 feet, to said public road; thence north, along said road, to the point of beginning, containing 9.1 acres, more or less, in Scott county, to the Southern Illinois & Missouri Bridge Company"—and also to set aside all the proceedings in the probate court of said county in relation to the sale of said real estate to the said bridge company, and to divest the said bridge company of all right and interest and title in said real estate and vest the same in plaintiffs.

The petition states the minority of the plaintiff Thornton Ancell and the appointment of Mr. Williams as his guardian and curator in May, 1903, by the probate court of Cape Girardeau county. It is then alleged that Thornton A. Ancell left surviving him at his death his widow, Margaret J. Ancell, and the three minor plaintiffs, as his only heirs at law; that the widow elected in the manner provided by law to be endowed absolutely of a share of the real estate in lieu of her dower therein, and afterwards conveyed her one-fourth share of the real estate above described to the said bridge company. It is then alleged that the plaintiffs were entitled to a homestead in the 40-acre tract of which said 9.1-acre tract is a part during their minority, and, in addition thereto, they were each entitled to one undivided one-fourth thereof in fee simple. It is then alleged that on the ——— day of November, 1897, the defendant Samuel Tanner at the request and instigation of the Gray's Point Terminal Railway Company, which desired to obtain a right of way through said land for its railroad, induced the probate court of Scott county to appoint him, the said Tanner, guardian and curator of the estate of these minors, and that thereafter said Tanner, by means of fraudulent representations, obtained from the said probate court a fraudulent and pretended order of sale, in pursuance of which he pretended to sell and convey ——— acres of said real estate to said Gray's Point Terminal Railroad Company for its said right of way, and thenceforth, until these plaintiffs selected Thomas M. Williams as their guardian and curator, said Tanner was constantly scheming and contriving with the Southern Illinois & Missouri Bridge Company and with the railroad companies that own and are interested in said bridge company to cheat and defraud plaintiffs out of their said real estate and vest the title of the same for a nominal consideration; that, in pursuance of said fraudulent scheme, said Samuel Tanner on May 28, 1902, at the May term thereof, filed in the probate court of Scott county a pretended petition for an order to sell 9.1 acres of said real estate as above herein described, and falsely represented to said court that there was no personal estate belonging to plaintiffs; that the rents and profits of said lands were insufficient to pay the charges and expenses necessary to support and educate them, and that it would be to the interest of plaintiffs to sell said real estate and reinvest the proceeds at interest; that on said May 28, 1902, said probate court made and entered its order directing said Samuel Tanner to sell said real estate at private sale for cash, and thereafter said Samuel Tanner, in pursuance of said pretended petition and order of sale, sold said real estate to the defendant for the sum of $500.50, and reported said sale to the said probate court on the 25th day of August, 1902, and wrongfully and fraudulently induced said court to approve said sale, in pursuance of which said order and approval said Samuel Tanner, acting as guardian and curator of plaintiffs, executed and delivered to defendant a deed, whereby he undertook to convey said real estate to defendant, which deed the defendant bridge company caused to be recorded on September 20, 1902, in book 45, pp. 336, 337, in the office of the recorder of deeds in Scott county. It is then alleged in general terms that the allegations in the petition for the sale of said lands were false and fraudulent, and that plaintiffs were not in need of any funds for support and maintenance or education, and that there was no occasion for selling the same at that time; that at that time said land was a most advantageous and profitable investment of plaintiffs' estate, and the said 9.1 acres was then and still is of the value of $10,000. Various irregularities are then alleged as to the proceedings in the probate court, and a general allegation that the court had no jurisdiction to order the sale of real estate, for the reason that the same was the homestead of the widow and children of said Thornton A. Ancell, deceased.

It is also charged that the defendant bridge company had knowledge of all the irregularities and illegalities attending the sale of said land and the false representations made by which the probate court was induced to order and approve said sale. It is then alleged that the defendant bridge company had no authority to own, condemn, or acquire property in Missouri for the purpose of its terminal yards; that its claim to this property is violative of article 5 of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and contrary to section 21 and section 30 of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the state of Missouri (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 148, 166). There is then an offer to return the money received from the defendant bridge company, and an allegation that the plaintiffs refuse to accept the same from their guardian. To this petition the defendant answered by general denial only.

The cause was tried at the October term, 1905, of the circuit court of Scott county, Mo., and resulted in a judgment dismissing plaintiffs' petition. After an unsuccessful motion for a new trial, the plaintiffs have appealed to this court. As to the charge of inadequacy of consideration paid for this nine acres by the bridge company, the circuit court found as a matter of fact "that the price paid by defendant corporation for said land was a reasonable and fair one, considering the circumstances then existing, and was in excess of the sum fixed by the appraisers, who were duly appointed by the probate court and in the manner provided by law made their report to said court." The court also found that the defendant bridge company in pursuance of said purchase expended large sums of money in good faith upon said property, and the court further found that there was no fraud or conspiracy entered into by any of said parties or between any parties in any way connected with the sale of said real estate, and that the defendant bridge company was the owner in fee of the said 9.1 acres of land. For convenience, the various assignments of error for which the plaintiffs ask a reversal of this judgment will be considered in the order of the brief of their counsel.

1. The first proposition advanced by the plaintiffs is that the sale of the lands in suit was void because the plaintiffs had a homestead therein. This assignment is double. In the first place, it is insisted that the land, being the homestead, was not subject to sale under the provisions of sections 3504 and 3510, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2000, 2002), because under this section the probate court was only authorized to order the sale of "real estate"; and, secondly, that, if a homestead should be construed to be real estate or land within the meaning of the statute, then it is insisted that there is no power in the probate court to sell the real estate of infants for reinvestment when the same consists of a homestead. In support of the first contention, to wit, that a homestead is not real estate, it is sufficient to say that it is at variance with the statutes and the construction thereof by this court on numerous occasions. In West v. McMullen, 112 Mo. 405, 20 S. W. 628, it was ruled by this court that, upon the death of her husband, the homestead vested in the widow for her lifetime with the right of the minor children to occupy and enjoy the same with her until their majority. In that case it was said: "We think the statute vested in the widow and minor children, if any, an estate for her life, and during their minority, and not a mere right of occupancy. Decisions upon statutes essentially different from ours throw no light upon the question. But our own decisions and those of the Vermont courts and of New Hampshire under the act of 1868 determine that the homestead is a life estate. The widow may use or rent it out as she sees fit during her life." In Hufschmidt v. Gross, 112 Mo., loc. cit. 657, 20 S. W. 679, the decision in West v. McMullen was expressly approved, and Kaes v. Gross, 92 Mo. 647, 3 S. W. 840, 1 Am. St. Rep. 767, was disapproved and overruled. In support of their position, the learned counsel cite us to Snodgrass v. Copple et al., 203 Mo. 480, 101 S. W. 1090, as holding that a homestead was not real estate, but this is a total misconception of the meaning of that case. Speaking for this court, Valliant, C. J., in that case said: "On the trial of the issues involved in this motion, the court will begin with the necessary concession on the part of both parties that the title to the property is well vested in the defendant. But the defendant says, if the plaintiff is to have his way, my title will be divested. That brings us to the very point of the controversy. Defendant's title will not be divested by the judgment in this case, but the judgment will leave the defendant's property exposed to the sheriff's levy and the result of that levy with the sequence may be to divest the defendant of his title. But that is the indirect, not the direct, effect of the judgment." There is nothing either in the majority or dissenting opinion that holds, or was intended to hold, that a homestead under our laws was not an estate in land.

This brings us to the second proposition involved in this first assignment, to wit, that the probate court is without jurisdiction to order the sale of lands belonging to minors for the purpose of raising funds for their education and for reinvestment. In the discussion of this branch of the case, learned counsel say that this is at least a doubtful question, and that this court has never passed on it directly. The argument in brief is that, while the statute (sections 3504, 3510, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2000, 2002]) provides for the sale of the real estate of minors by their guardian for support and maintenance and education and in the proper cases for reinvestments, the homestead statute deals with the particular subject, the homestead rights of the widow and children in the land, and that, applying a familiar rule of construction, the special statute should prevail over the general one, and that to hold that a homestead could not be sold at all for the education, maintenance, and support of a minor or minors would best subserve the purpose of homestead legislation. On the other hand, it is to be observed that sections 3504 and 3510 provide that the probate court for the proper education, support, and maintenance of minors according to their means and for such purposes may from time to time, when the money income and personal estate of such minor shall be insufficient or incapable of such object or purposes, order the lease or the sale of the real estate of such minor. There is an entire absence of any exemption of homestead estates from the scope of these sections. Like the learned counsel, we have not been able to find any case in which the present contention has been made and passed upon by this court. The nearest approach to it to which we have been cited is the case of the matter of the final settlement of the Estate of Christina Hesche, 73 Mo. App. 612. In that case the Court of Appeals says: "At the next term of the probate court after the sale, to wit, November, 1895, the administrator reported the sale as above shown. The report was continued until the next term. After the report was filed, an examination of the title revealed the fact that the deceased obtained title to the land through the will of her deceased husband, and that two of their children, who were minors, had a homestead right in the land. Thereupon the administrator, the guardian of the minors, and Mrs. Laville agreed upon the following settlement of the business: It was agreed that the value of the homestead right was $502.42; that Mrs. Laville should pay this sum to the guardian of her wards, and in full satisfaction of their interest in the land; and that the administrator should receive and accept from Mrs. Laville $2,522.58 as the amount due the estate on account of the purchase. This agreement was communicated to the probate court, and received its approval. It appears that, in order to consummate this arrangement, the probate court made an order authorizing the guardian of the minors to sell their interest in the land for the sum named. This settlement and adjustment was finally approved by the probate court." This action of the probate court met the approval of the St. Louis Court of Appeals without any suggestion that the probate court had no power to authorize the sale of the homestead estate of the minors. The reasons underlying the laws which permit the sale of the lands of minor children for reinvestment and for their support and education are very different from those which exempt such lands from sale for the payment of the debts of their ancestors. The homestead statute is a humane and salutary one, and has been liberally construed in behalf of those for whom homesteads were exempted from sale for debt. The probate courts of this state are the guardians and curators of minor children. The Legislature evidently had in mind that it must often happen that minor children should own a piece of real estate which was not a revenue producer, but, on the contrary, oftentimes an expense, and yet circumstances might arise that it could be sold for a good price and the proceeds invested in property producing good rentals. On the other hand, it must have occurred to the Legislature that a child might often be left with a piece of property which would not furnish revenue enough to educate and maintain it, and thus the child be compelled to grow up in ignorance for the want of power in a probate court to sell or lease the said land for its education, and therefore these provisions were made for the sale and leasing of their real estate in such circumstances. The Legislature not having made any exception to this power of the courts to sell the real estate of minors, the courts cannot import and read such an exemption into the statute. And we are of the opinion that this point is not tenable. There can be no doubt that this property could be taken by a resort to eminent domain. In case of condemnation, the infant owner of a homestead would have the protection of the judgment of three disinterested commissioners or of a jury, whereas, in the case of a proceeding like this through the probate court, the infant would have the benefit of three disinterested appraisers with the judgment of a probate judge back of them to approve or disapprove their estimate of the value, and thus the rights of the infant would be as safely guarded by a proceeding in probate court as in a proceeding by eminent domain. But in the absence of any exception or exemption by the Legislature over the general and unrestrained power conferred upon the probate court, we think the courts have no right to import such an exception into the statute, and in our opinion the failure to place such an exception in the statute is in consonance with the failure of the Legislature to make such an exception.

2. But plaintiffs insist that, even if the probate court had jurisdiction to order the sale of these nine acres, still the guardian's sale and deed should be set aside on account of numerous other irregularities. First, no notice of the guardian's application to the probate court to sell the land was given to or served on the plaintiffs or either of them, although they resided in Scott county with their mother at the time. Counsel seeks under this head to draw a distinction between the statute in force in 1855 and our statute of 1899 in regard to the proceedings for the sale of real estate of minors (section 3505, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2000]). This court in Pattee v. Thomas, 58 Mo., loc. cit. 172, we think disposed of this objection. Judge Napton, speaking for this court, said: "The objection that no notice of the intended application was given as required by the administration law is untenable. We presume that the act of 1851, in fact, intended to make the administration law no further applicable to guardians than would be consistent with the different positions occupied by administrators and guardians. To whom and for what purpose could a notice be required in the case of guardians? It would concern nobody but the minors, and they are in court already through their guardian, the only channel through which they can communicate with the court. The case of Overton v. Johnson et al., 17 Mo. 446, answers the objection of the neglect of the guardian to file an inventory which is required in applications by administrators to sell real estate on account of deficiency of personal estate. Judge Gamble in that case observes: 'It is true that the statute directs that when such petition and such lists and inventories shall be filed the court shall order that all persons interested in the estate should be notified,' etc. But the provision is only designed to carry out the direction of the previous section, and does not affect the question of jurisdiction. The jurisdiction is acquired by filing a petition praying the court to do an act or make an order, which, under the statute, the court is competent to do. Whether the petition be in proper form or set forth sufficient facts, or is accompanied with the proper evidence, the court will decide in the exercise of its jurisdiction." Under the statute of 1851 under which the Pattee Case was decided, there was no exception, but the sale was required to be in conformity to the rules and regulations governing sales of real estate of deceased persons, whereas, section 3505, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2000), after making this same general provision, provides: "Except that there shall be no publication to parties in interest before making the order." So that, while the statute now expressly dispenses with publication to parties in interest, it had already been decided under the act of 1851 which contained no such exception, that no notice was necessary to the minors of the application by their guardian. The decision of this court in that case has never been to our knowledge, criticised, or questioned. There is no presumption of law in this state that a guardian and curator is so interested personally that in a proceeding by a guardian to sell real estate a guardian ad litem should be appointed to represent the minor. On the contrary, every presumption is indulged by the law that the guardian and curator will faithfully guard the interest of their wards until the contrary is made to appear.

3. Another defect in the proceedings urged by the plaintiffs is that, because the petition was filed and the order of sale was made on the same day, therefore the sale was void; or, if not void, at least cogent evidence of fraud. It appears from the record that the petition for the sale of the nine acres was filed by the guardian, Tanner, on May 26, 1902, and that the order of sale was made on the same day and the appraisers appointed at that time. The report of the sale was made at the next August term, and the deed ordered to be executed. This report of sale was accompanied by the certificate of the appraisers. The purchase of the mother's interest was consummated on the 29th of July, 1902. In support of the proposition that the fact that the court ordered the sale on the same day the petition was filed rendered it void, we are referred by learned counsel to Hutchinson v. Shelley, 133 Mo. 412, 34 S. W. 838, and to sections 148, 3505, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 386, 2000). But it is obvious, as said by Judge Napton in Pattee v. Thomas, that these provisions of the administration law were intended to apply to administrators, and not to the case of a guardian applying for a sale of his ward's land. This whole subject has been so often examined, reviewed, and discussed that we can do no better than adopt the language of this court in Henry v. McKerlie, 78 Mo., loc. cit. 429: "When the sale had been prematurely approved in the probate court, it was by the earlier decisions regarded as no approval at all. The sale was regarded as absolutely void and passing no title either legal or equitable. Wohlien v. Speck, 18 Mo. 563, and a number of cases. Whatever equity inured to the purchaser depended upon such facts as are described by us in the second conclusion recited by us as applying to void sales. But by the most recent decisions of the Supreme Court this doctrine which first arose in the case of Speck v. Wohlien, 22 Mo. 310, and which for a long time prevailed in this state, has been overruled; and such sales are now held to be as valid as if the approval had been in the circuit court, on the ground that the same presumptions of validity must be entertained in respect to the judgments and orders of the probate court in the matters of administration of estates as are accorded to the judgments or orders of the circuit court—citing Johnson v. Beazley, 65 Mo. 250, 27 Am. Rep. 276; Sims v. Gray, 66 Mo. 614; Wilkerson v. Allen, 67 Mo. 502. It thus appears that the doctrine of Speck v. Wohlien is a thing of the past, and has given place to a more just and rational doctrine which cannot fail to have a good effect upon this class of litigation. While the doctrine prevailed that a premature approval in the probate court was not an approval at all, the courts, in their efforts to escape the injustice of the doctrine, commenced to hold that the sale might be approved 12 and 13 years after it had taken place, so as to pass a valid title to the purchaser. McVey v. McVey, 51 Mo. 406. The approval of the sale by the court need not necessarily appear by formal entry of an order. It is sufficient if the approval can be gathered from the whole record." Inasmuch as the law did not require service of a notice upon these minors of the application for the sale of this land, we hold that a failure to continue the case from the May term to the August term before making the order of sale was, at the most, an irregularity which did not go to the jurisdiction of the probate court, and therefore did not render the sale void.

4. It is next insisted that this sale should be set aside because the guardian's petition for the order to sell was not sworn to. But the probate court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this application, and the question of the sufficiency or insufficiency was one addressed to that court, and upon which it was competent to pass, and; in the absence of fraud, its action in approving that petition is not open for review by this court or by the circuit court. It is next insisted that the land was not appraised. As to this the guardian filed his report of sale and certificate of appraisement showing that Vancient Helserchler, Casper Miller, and Joseph Miller on the 26th day of May, 1902, appraised this land at $40 per acre, and on the trial of this case these appraisers were sworn as witnesses, and, when their attention was called to their appraisement, their recollection was that at the time they had appraised a 27-acre tract, and did not recollect that they had appraised the 9-acre tract. But the fact that they had forgotten that they appraised this 9-acre tract did not in the least overthrow their appraisement. Upon being re-examined, they still testified that this land at that time was worth $40 per acre for farming purposes, and clearly a sale ought not to be overturned because an appraiser years afterwards should forget that he had been called upon to state the value of a piece of land in his immediate neighborhood. Any one might forget a matter in which he had no more interest than this witness had in the appraisement of that land. He testified that he was selected as an appraiser by Mrs. Rafferty, the mother of these children. He had no occasion to go back to look at the land after having been appointed as an appraiser, for the reason that he had lived within a mile and a half of it all of his life, and we are inclined to think that there is little merit in this objection. The evidence shows that Mrs. Rafferty received $90 per acre for her one-fourth interest in this land and her right to possession during her lifetime, and that the children received $500 for their three-fourths interest in the nine acres, subject to their mother's life estate. So the nine acres brought the family a sum largely in excess of the value which the neighbors who lived in the immediate vicinity, and who were themselves landowners, appraised it to be worth. The probate court approved that sale, and, upon a rehearing in this case, the circuit court expressly approved that sale, and found that the land brought its reasonable and fair value under all the circumstances. While this court has often ruled that it would not abdicate its right in a cause in equity to weigh the evidence for itself, yet it has often ruled that in a case like this, where the evidence was largely oral and the circuit judge had exceptional opportunities to see and hear the witnesses and to hear their testimony, this court would defer largely to the judgment of the local court. It would serve no good purpose to repeat in this opinion the testimony of the various witnesses on both sides, and it must suffice to say that in our opinion the great weight of the fair and impartial testimony was to the effect that this land was sold by the guardian, Tanner, for a fair and reasonable price. And we think that the learned circuit judge, who heard this case, was competent to make all due and proper allowances for the expert testimony as applied to the actual facts of the case. And we find nothing in the judgment which calls for a reversal by this court on that question. And the same observation can be made in regard to the question of fraud. Circumstances which appear to learned counsel for the plaintiffs to indicate a fraudulent purpose on the part of the guardian of these children to sell this land for less than its value to the defendant bridge company have been marshaled and presented with great ability, but, on the other hand, it appears in evidence that this bridge company having obtained its charter to build its bridge over the Mississippi river and having received the permission of Congress to construct said bridge, at once took steps to acquire land for its approaches on the Missouri side of the river, and for this purpose it bought lands for its right of way for its tracks and yards from various landowners in the immediate vicinity of this land, and, its engineer having indicated this nine acres as a part of the land which it should acquire, negotiations were had with Mrs. Rafferty, the mother of these plaintiffs, which resulted in her agreeing to take $90 per acre for her interest in the said nine acres, and then the guardian of these minors made his application to the probate court in the usual way for permission to sell the interest of the minors in said land at private sale. It was developed upon the trial that this particular nine acres was not absolutely essential to the bridge company, but that the tracks and yards could have been very easily moved to other lands without taking this land, but the order of sale was made, and the appraisement, and the company purchased the shares of these minors for $500. The company entered in possession of the property, graded it, and put it in condition for use as a part of its yards. Three years afterwards and two years after the oldest child had attained his majority this action was brought and the circuit court found there was no fraud or conspiracy between the parties connected with this sale, and, having read this testimony, we are of the opinion that this judgment is well supported by the testimony.

The learned circuit judge was in a far better position to pass upon the question of the adequacy of the consideration paid by the defendant bridge company for this land at the time and under the circumstances than this court can possibly be. His acquaintance with the witnesses and his opportunity to observe their manner of testifying, their interest in the cause, and their connection with the several parties to the suit also made him the proper tribunal to pass upon the charges of fraud; and, in the absence of something to indicate that his judgment was the result of a prejudice or was the exercise of an unwise discretion, this court ought not to set it aside.

Finally, it is insisted that the bridge company had no corporate power to purchase and take the title to the land in controversy. In regard to this proposition, this court has now passed upon it three times, and we must decline to again enter upon an investigation of that question. If we are right in affirming the judgment upon the other propositions, which have been advanced and discussed in this opinion, then we are clearly of the opinion that these plaintiffs having sold this land to the bridge company through their lawfully appointed guardian and curator, and having received the consideration above named on the merits of the question of the corporate capacity of the defendant bridge company to purchase and hold this land, it does not lie in the mouth of the plaintiffs to assert that want of corporate power. We have carefully gone through all the assignments of error and the record in this case, and are of the opinion that the judgment should be, and is accordingly, affirmed.

BURGESS and FOX, JJ., concur.

OFFENSTEIN v. GEHNER.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 372*)—ACTION FOR ACCOUNTING—BURDEN OF PROOF.

A petition merely alleged a conveyance by plaintiff to defendant of certain real property in trust to sell the same and pay certain notes, and that the defendant had sold the property, and paid the notes, leaving a balance in his hands which he refused to pay plaintiff. It did not set out the terms of the trust nor show the amount of the debt, interest, and costs, and furnished no substantial basis on which to determine the surplus, but the answer set forth the full purport of the deeds, the property, the amount of the debt, the interest, and the covenant of plaintiff that, if the holder or holders of the notes or the defendant or his successors should pay out moneys to protect the title, all such moneys would be secured by the deeds. He then showed that there had been a default in payment of the notes and interest, and a request of the holder that defendant should sell the property to satisfy the said notes, and that he did so in pursuance of his power as trustee stating the amount received for each piece, and then set forth a full itemized account of the debt, interest and taxes, both general and special, and struck a balance from which it appeared that, after applying the proceeds, there was still a specified sum unpaid on the principal note secured by the second deed of trust. Held, that this was not a plea of payment by the trustee, but an accounting by him, that the remedy, if any, against defendant, was to surcharge and falsify the items thus rendered, and the burden was on plaintiff to establish a breach of the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 372*)—ACTION FOR BREACH OF TRUST—PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

The presumption is that a trustee has acted in good faith and has done his duty, and the burden is on one suing him for a breach of trust to allege and prove the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

3. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 11*)—VOLUNTARY NONSUIT—CONDITION OF CAUSE.

A contention that plaintiff should have been allowed to take a nonsuit is without merit, where he had ample time to do so before final judgment against him, but made no request therefor.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel D. Fisher, Judge.

Action by Adam Offenstien against August Gehner. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry B. Davis, for appellant. Kehr & Tittmann, for respondent.

GANTT, P. J. This is an action in two counts, in the first of which plaintiff states that by his deed of trust of the 22d of July, 1896, he conveyed certain real estate in the city of St. Louis to the defendant, Gehner, in trust to sell the property and pay to the holder or holders of certain notes the sum of $15,000, with interest and costs of sale; that Gehner subsequently sold the property for $25,000, "leaving after the payment of said notes in said deed of trust and the costs of sale a balance of $5,000 which defendant has declined and refused to pay, although demanded." The second count alleged that on the 4th of August, 1897, plaintiff conveyed to the defendant in trust for plaintiff and others a large tract of real estate in the city of St. Louis; that said conveyance was made to said defendant for the purpose of selling said property, and paying certain notes in said deed of trust described, amount not stated; that defendant in June, 1904, sold the property for $7,700, paid the notes in the deed of trust described, and costs of sale, amount not stated, leaving a balance of $5,000 in his hands, which he neglects and refuses to pay plaintiff although demanded. The answer was a general denial of each and every allegation in the petition and the two counts thereof. As a further defense, defendant alleges that the deed of trust executed by the plaintiff and his wife dated the 22d of July, 1896, was in trust to secure the payment of a principal note for $15,000 and six interest notes for $450 each, with a covenant therein on the part of the mortgagor to cause all taxes and assessments, general and special, to be paid whenever imposed upon the property, and that all sums, with interest, which the trustee or the holder of the notes should expend to protect the title or possession of the premises, should likewise be secured by the deed of trust; that subsequently the plaintiff and his wife executed a second deed of trust on the property to secure a principal note of $10,000 and interest; that plaintiff made default in the payment of the notes secured by the said deeds of trust, allowed the taxes, general and special, to become delinquent, and judgments to be rendered thereon; that for the protection of the title the holder of the notes advanced the money to pay the taxes, liens, and judgments, and that sale was made under the first deed of trust according to its terms. The trustee then sets forth an itemized account charging himself with the amounts realized for the property, and taking credit for the payments made under the terms of the deed of trust, each item of credit being set forth in detail, and showing as the result of the account that more than $2,000 of the debt secured by the deeds of trust remained unpaid, and is still due the creditors by the plaintiff. In his reply the plaintiff did not surcharge and falsify a single item of the account so set forth, but made a general denial. The cause was referred, and, when called for a hearing before the referee, the plaintiff declined to introduce any evidence, whereupon the defendant also submitted the case upon the pleadings, and asked for judgment in his favor. The referee made the following report and judgment: "There being an utter failure to offer any evidence whatever of the matters, or any part thereof, set out in the petition, and there being no allegations in the answer which can be construed or tortured into an admission upon which the plaintiff would be entitled to judgment, and inasmuch as all matters alleged in the petition are met with a general denial in the answer, there is in the judgment of the referee but one finding that can be made, and that is that judgment be entered in favor of the defendant and the costs awarded against plaintiff." The plaintiff filed exceptions in the circuit court to the report of the referee, but the court overruled his exceptions, confirmed the report, and rendered judgment for the defendant. In his motion for new trial the plaintiff does not specifically refer to his exceptions to the referee's report, nor does he assign the overruling to his exceptions as a ground for new trial. He does assign that the judgment "is against the pleadings in the case" and "against the law." The plaintiff appeals.

1. The only ground upon which the plaintiff seeks to reverse the judgment of the circuit court is his assumption that the defendant stood in the relation of an ordinary debtor to him, and that the disbursements by the defendant as pleaded in his answer amounted to a plea of payment, and therefore the burden was on the defendant to prove the correctness of his account as trustee in the first instance.

We think the circuit court unquestionably was right. As meager as the plaintiff's petition is, it discloses that the defendant stood in the relation of trustee to the plaintiff and the holders of the notes secured by the two deeds of trust. The petition did not set out the terms of the trust, did not show the amount of the debt, interest, and costs, and furnished no substantial basis upon which to determine a surplus. But the defendant in his answer set forth the full purport of the two deeds of trust, the property, the amount of the debt, the interest, and the covenant on the part of the plaintiff that, if the holder or holders of the notes or the defendant or his successor in said trust should pay out moneys to protect the title to the said premises, then all such moneys should be secured by the deeds of trust. The defendant then showed that there had been a default in the payment of the notes and interest, and a request upon the part of the holder that defendant should sell the said property to satisfy the said notes, interest, and charges, and that he did sell the said premises in pursuance of his powers as trustee, stating the amount received for each piece of property, and then set forth a full itemized account of the debt, interest, and tax charges, both general and special, and struck a balance, from which it appeared that, after applying the proceeds, there was still $2,000 unpaid upon the principal note secured by the second deed of trust. The contention of the plaintiff is and was that this was a plea of payment. We do not so understand the law. We think it was an accounting by a trustee, and that plaintiff's remedy, if any, against the defendant, was to surcharge and falsify the items of the account thus rendered, and that the burden was upon him to establish a breach of the trust on the part of the defendant. The presumption is that the trustee has acted in good faith, and has done his duty, and the burden is on the plaintiff to allege and prove the contrary. In 27 Amer. & Eng. Ency. of Law (1st Ed.) 293, it is said: "In drawing a bill against the trustee the pleader must bear in mind that there is a presumption that the trustee has performed his full duty, and he must set forth specifically all facts necessary to rebut this presumption." We think that the plaintiff had the laboring oar, and that, when he failed to offer any evidence to substantiate the allegations of his petition, the referee correctly held that he had failed to make his case, and therefore found against him. And we think the circuit court properly confirmed the report of the referee, and that plaintiff has no cause to complain whatever. The contention that the plaintiff should have been allowed to take a nonsuit is without merit, as the plaintiff had ample time to take a nonsuit before the final judgment was rendered against him, but made no request to be allowed to do so.

The judgment of the circuit court is therefore affirmed.

BURGESS and FOX, JJ., concur.

BUFORD v. GRUBER et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. WILLS (§ 38*)—COMPETENCY OF TESTATOR—"INSANE DELUSION"—"DELUSION."

Where a person imagines something extravagant to exist which really has no existence, and he is incapable of being reasoned out of his false belief, he is in that respect insane, and if his "delusion" relates to his child, and he imagines that the child is not his, when there is no foundation for such conception, and is incapable of being reasoned out of the same, he is possessed of an "insane delusion" as to his child, and, if his will is found to be the fruit of such false conception and disinherits the child, the jury may find against the paper writing purporting to be the will, though it may develop that he was rational on other subjects and capable of transacting ordinary business (quoting Words and Phrases, vol. 2, p. 1971 et seq.).

2. WILLS (§ 400*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

An action to contest a will on the ground of the insanity of the testator is an action at law within the rule that, where the evidence is conflicting, the Supreme Court will not undertake to reconcile it.

3. WILLS (§ 400*)—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action by a disinherited child to contest the parent's will on the ground of insanity, there was competent evidence of the insanity of testator, in that he possessed an insane delusion that his child was not his, and that the will was the fruit of such delusion, the Supreme Court would not disturb the verdict by undertaking to say that the jury placed an improper estimate on the weight of evidence.

4. WILLS (§ 53*)—CONTESTS—INSANITY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action to contest a will on the ground of the insanity of testator, in that he possessed an insane delusion that a disinherited child was not his child, evidence of the condition of testator's mind long prior to and closely approaching the time of the execution of the will, and of the condition of his mind shortly subsequent to the execution of the will, is admissible to indicate whether testator, when the will was executed, had sufficient capacity.

5. WILLS (§ 55*)—CONTESTS—INSANITY—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action by a disinherited daughter to contest her father's will on the ground of insanity of the father, in that he had an insane delusion that she was not his child, evidence held to justify a finding that his false belief amounted to monomania, or an insane delusion.

6. WILLS (§ 52*)—CONTESTS—INSANITY—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the insanity of testator is the result of a temporary cause, there is no presumption of continuity; but, where an insane condition of mind exhibiting its peculiarities for a long period of years is shown, continued insanity will be presumed, and the burden of establishing a subsequent lucid interval at the time of the execution of a will is on him who asserts it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 105; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lafayette County; Samuel Davis, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth E. Buford against Robert Gustav Gruber and others to contest the will of Gustav Gruber, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This action was instituted by respondent, Elizabeth E. Buford, against Robert Gustav Gruber and Casper William Gruber, minors, and Walter B. Waddell and John Chamberlain, executors, having as its purpose the contest of the last will and testament of Gustav Gruber, the father of Elizabeth E. Buford, Robert Gustav Gruber, and Casper William Gruber.

It is charged in the petition filed by respondent that Gustav Gruber, on the 14th day of October, 1903, in form did sign a paper writing purporting to be his last will and testament, by which he gave to respondent, Elizabeth E. Buford, his daughter, $1, and to his two minor sons, Robert Gustav Gruber and Casper William Gruber, all the remainder of his estate. It was further alleged: That at the time of making his will Gruber was, and for a long time prior thereto had been, afflicted with dipsomania, which had destroyed his mind and memory; that he was subject to and labored under the insane delusion that his daughter, the respondent, was not his child; and that his wife was unfaithful to her marriage vow. It is further alleged that the will in question was not executed by Gruber in sound mind and disposing memory, but that at the time of its execution, and for a long time prior thereto, he was mentally incapable of making same and was devoid of testamentary capacity on account of said disease and said insane delusion, which insane delusion operated upon and controlled his mind and induced him to sign said paper, and thereby to attempt to disinherit the respondent. On the issue presented by the pleadings, two trials were had. At both trials a jury found the paper writing proposed not to be the last will of Gustav Gruber. The first verdict was set aside by the learned trial judge because it was against the weight of the evidence, and the controlling question now before this court is whether the second verdict can be sustained.

As demonstrated by the instructions given, the only question submitted to the jury was whether or not, at the time of the execution of the will in question, Gruber, the testator, was laboring under the insane delusion that his daughter was not his child, and that his disinheritance of her was the result solely of such delusion. Proponents having interposed proper demurrers at the close of respondent's evidence, as well as at the close of all the evidence, and having saved proper exceptions to the action of the court in overruling said demurrers, it devolves upon this court to critically examine the evidence with a view of determining whether or not either of such demurrers should have been sustained. This will involve an extended statement of the facts.

Gustav Gruber married Mary M. Boulware, at Lexington, Mo., some time in 1880. Their married life was spent at that place. Gruber was in the insurance business and was quite successful. At the time of his death, his property amounted in value to about $15,000. In 1884 the respondent, Elizabeth E. Buford (née Gruber), was born. Casper William Gruber, one of the proponents, was born in 1888, and the other proponent, Robert Gustav Gruber, was born in 1895. Mrs. Gruber died in March, 1901. Up to about the year 1899 the relations of Mr. Gruber's family had been happy. He was prosperous and was affectionately devoted to his wife and children. To the respondent, his daughter, who was known as and called "Bessie" (and who will be so termed hereafter), he was especially devoted, and as between her and his two young boys he was partial to Bessie. Mrs. Gruber was an exemplary lady and had the respect and esteem of all their acquaintances as a refined and virtuous woman and an affectionate wife and mother; but testator had formed the habit of drinking intoxicating liquor, and some time during the year 1899 the habit had developed to such an extent that he became intoxicated nearly every day. At this time, and continuing up to the time of the death of Mrs. Gruber in March, 1901, he invariably returned home in the evening in an intoxicated state. The drinking habit evidently increased, and he reached the point where, when he returned home in the evening, he acted like a maniac, cursed, swore, whooped, yelled, tried to imitate the voices of beasts, and, as the testimony shows, formed, without a reason, an intense aversion to his wife and his daughter Bessie. About 18 months or two years before Mrs. Gruber died, he became impressed with the notion that his wife had been untrue to him, and that Bessie was not his child. This notion gradually formed in his mind as a fixed conviction, which his wife and others were unable to reason away. In the presence of his wife, he would tell Bessie that she was not his child, and he would tell his wife that Bessie was not his daughter. He would make these charges both when he was drunk and when he was sober, in the morning, at noon, and in the evening, and continued to do so almost daily up to the time of Mrs. Gruber's death. When Mrs. Gruber protested and remonstrated with him and tried to reason him out of his unfounded delusion, he became very much excited, flew into a passion, raved, and uttered oaths and imprecations. There is no question, and it is conceded, that Mrs. Gruber was a virtuous lady and a loyal, devoted, and dutiful wife. It is further conceded that Bessie was his daughter, and that there was no reason or foundation for the belief or delusion that she was not. Mr. Gruber's habits of drinking and his intense aversion to Bessie continued to increase up to the time of the death of Mrs. Gruber. In the meantime Gruber was attending to his business, which he continued to manage fairly well, although it fell off considerably on account of his intemperate habits. He kept bank and other accounts correctly. In short, the evidence shows that he continued to conduct his insurance business, but not with the same push and success as he had prior thereto.

Mrs. Gruber died early in the evening. Gruber had been gone that day, as usual, to his office. He came home shortly before her death. The scene that occurred at the death-bed beggars description. He would not believe that she was dying, but insisted that she was hungry and forced potted ham into her mouth. After her death, a few moments later, he poured raw whisky into her mouth, claiming that she was not dead, and that he possessed the hypnotic power to restore her to health. When the neighbor ladies who were presented protested, he threatened to throw them out and became almost violent. After the death of Mrs. Gruber, Bessie, who was then 17 years old, took charge as Mr. Gruber's housekeeper and assumed the motherhood of her two little brothers. She was fondly devoted to them both, and especially Robert, who was then only about 6 years old. She did all the cooking, mending, sewing, and other housework for her father and brothers; but Mr. Gruber's habits of becoming intoxicated continued after his wife's death. His attitude towards Bessie did not change. He still harbored in his mind the conviction that she was not his child, repeatedly told her so, and some time during the summer of 1901 he drove her from his house, telling her that she was not his child, and he did not want her there. He began before the death of his wife, and kept it up after her death, to tell Bessie that she would not get any of his property because she was not his child, and when Casper, her brother, remonstrated with him, he became very angry and acted like a maniac, tearing his hair, wildly demonstrating, etc. Some time after driving Bessie from home in the summer of 1901, he sent for her and had her come home. He treated her nicely for a few days, and then began to treat her as before, only worse. He accused her of trying to poison him, would go into her room at night and abuse her while she lay in bed, order her not to lock her door, continued almost daily to tell her that she was not his daughter, that she would not get any of his property, and would refuse to drink the coffee she made or eat the victuals she cooked. This conduct on his part continued until January 1, 1902, when, on his return that evening from his office, he found her preparing the evening meal. He threw his meat, cakes, and other things Bessie was cooking out and drove her away into a very cold night, without wraps and without a home to go to, ordering her never to return, and telling her at the time she was not his daughter, and that he would see that she had trouble in getting any of his property. She never returned; but on the 9th of February, 1902, she was married to Mr. Buford. She met her father one time after that in Lexington, and, when she spoke to him and addressed him as father, he denounced her as no daughter of his and refused to have anything to do with her.

The foregoing facts were testified to by the respondent, Elizabeth E. Buford, known as "Bessie," one of the proponents, Casper, her brother, Belle Lewis and Hub Hayden, a couple of negro tenants who lived in the yard of Mr. Gruber and who were about the house every day, and George Parks, a neighbor. These persons saw more of Mr. Gruber, especially during the time he was drinking, than did the other witnesses who testified in the case. After Bessie left home on January 1, 1902, Mr. Gruber made arrangements for his boys and placed them in school. He took up his living quarters in rooms adjoining his office. On the 14th day of October, 1903, Gustav Gruber made and executed a will, in the presence of J. Q. Plattenburg, Henry C. Wallace, and D. W. B. Tevis, as witnesses, which will, omitting formal parts, is as follows:

"Item First. After the payments of my debts, including burial expenses, I do dispose of my property, both real and personal in the following manner: To my daughter, Bessie E. Buford, I bequeath one dollar ($1.00) and direct my executors to pay such sum of one dollar to her in full, of her share of my estate. To my sons, Casper William Gruber and Robert Gustav Gruber, I bequeath all the rest and residue of my property and estate, both real and personal.

"Item Second. I hereby nominate, constitute and appoint Walter B. Waddell and John Chamberlain as executors of this, my last will and testament."

At the time of executing his will, testator was about 55 years old. After its execution he continued to use intoxicating liquor to a greater excess than before. He died in a hospital in Kansas City, Mo., on April 5, 1904, presumably from the effects of the excessive use of intoxicating liquors. Shortly after making the will, Gruber, upon becoming dissatisfied with the manner in which his son was sweeping out his room, told him that he was sweeping the same as Bessie did and was trying to run him out, then remarked: "I have her fixed now; I have made my will and cut her out. She is not my child, and I have got everything settled." Casper's testimony was that continuing on up to a few days before his death, or the last time he saw him, whenever Bessie's name was mentioned he would fly into a passion and declare that she was not his daughter, and that he was not going to give her any of his property. He made these statements to Casper before he went to Kansas City, and a few days afterward died. George Parks, a neighbor, testified: That he heard Gruber at home cursing, swearing, and apparently abusing his family; that Gruber talked to him about Bessie before and after she left, and stated that he was not going to give her anything; that she was not straight and was not his child. Both Hub Hayden and Belle Lewis testified about the conduct and drinking habits of Gruber and his treatment of his family, especially his wife and daughter, Bessie. Belle Lewis, a negro woman, who did the washing for the Gruber family and was at the house considerably, heard Gruber, on many occasions before Mrs. Gruber died, tell her (Mrs. Gruber) that Bessie was not his daughter, and that he did not intend to leave her any of his property. Also, after the death of Mrs. Gruber, she testified: That she heard Gruber tell Bessie she was not his child, and that she would never get anything; that he became infuriated about Bessie's cooking, would throw the meat and vessels out the door and accuse Bessie of trying to poison him. Casper Gruber, one of the proponents and brother of Bessie, also testified fully and freely about the conduct of his father, his drinking habits, and his numerous denials of Bessie being his daughter, both before and after the death of Mrs. Gruber, and after Bessie left her home in January, 1902, as well as the numerous declarations that she would get none of his property.

It was shown that, after the death of Mrs. Gruber, Bessie desired to attend school and take music lessons, but that her father would not allow her to do so. Several of her friends, especially lady school teachers, intervened and tried to induce him to let her go to school. He would promise to do so, but afterward would not allow her. Altogether respondent introduced 33 witnesses, and, outside of those above referred to, who knew most about his home and domestic life and of his treatment of his wife and Bessie, the other witnesses were his social friends and business associates, and they testified in a general way of his excessive habit of drinking; that during the latter part of his life he transacted but lit-the business and was intoxicated most of the time. He was inclined to stand upon the streets, and did not appear to want to talk with any one, was quiet and morose. When he did talk his conversation was not connected and usually had no point to it. His condition from May to November, 1903, is best described by Robert Hicklin, an attorney at law, who had offices near the office of Mr. Gruber in the Commercial Bank Building at Lexington, from the spring of 1903 to November of that year. He says that he had known Mr. Gruber, and that they had been friends for a long time before, and that previously he had been a quiet, successful business man. During 1903, when Mr. Hicklin would be in town, he would be with Mr. Gruber more or less every day and converse with him. He stated: That a decided change had come over him for the worse; that his health had become seriously impaired and broken down, and he was under the influence of liquor all the time; that he never saw him sober during the year 1903; says that Gruber did not converse anything at all as he did formerly; that he was of a retiring manner when he was not under the influence of whisky; that he was formerly a quiet, gentlemanly man. When witness officed near him last time, he would talk and undertake to engage in conversation, but there was absolutely nothing to his conversation. His talk was silly and disconnected, no point to it. This witness, together with some 10 or 12 others, after describing his excessive drinking, his appearance and conduct, was of the opinion that he was not a man of sound mind. On cross-examination this witness says that he apparently was a man broken down by the excessive use of liquor.

The defendant introduced the subscribing witnesses to the will, who testified that Mr. Gruber signed the will in their presence, declaring it to be his last will and testament, and that he was of sound mind at the time, so far as they observed. Mr. Wallace, the attorney who wrote the will, in describing the circumstances under which the will was written, said: "He came in and said he was ready to have his will made. I drew it on the typewriter. I put the paper in the machine and began to write, and asked him what he wanted in the will, how he wanted it to be made, and he said he wanted his debts paid, and that he wanted to give his property to his two little boys, Robert and Casper; that he did not want Bessie to have any of his property, and he only intended to give her $1; that he wanted it put in that way; that she was to have a dollar of his estate. He said the reason he was not going to give her anything was because she had run away and married against his will." Mr. Wallace says that Mr. Gruber selected the executors, who were leading business men of Lexington.

The testimony of numerous leading business men of Lexington, among whom were presidents and cashiers of banks, school teachers, merchants, lawyers, druggists, etc., tended to show that Mr. Gruber, especially during his early married life, was an excellent business man, a fine penman, and a man who kept his books in excellent shape and attended strictly to his business. While most of these witnesses concede that in his latter life he became addicted to excessive drinking and was very often intoxicated and unfit for business, yet his accounts with banks and merchants and other business men were correctly kept, and that he had no business trouble of serious consequence. Nearly all of these witnesses were of the opinion that he was a man of sound mind and well fitted for business when he was not drinking. Some evidence introduced tended to show the declarations of Mr. Gruber that he disinherited his daughter because she was disobedient, would not go to school, and married against his wishes. On the other hand, the recorder, to whom the application was made for the license when Bessie was married, called upon Mr. Gruber for his consent, and he neither gave nor withheld his consent, but expressed himself that he did not care what she did nor whom she married.

As this cause must eventually be determined upon the question as to whether or not there was evidence tending to show that testator, at the time of executing his will, was laboring under the insane delusion that Bessie was not his child, and that such delusion prompted him to disinherit her, the above statement of facts sufficiently presents the record of the trial of this cause. At the close of the evidence, the court instructed the jury upon every phase of the case to which the testimony was applicable. We do not deem it essential to reproduce the instructions given, but will during the course of the opinion give them such attention as we deem necessary. The cause was then submitted to the jury, and they returned their verdict as heretofore indicated, finding that the paper writing propounded as the last will of Gustav Gruber, deceased, was not the will of said Gustav Gruber, deceased. Time-ly motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed and by the court taken up and overruled. From the judgment entered in conformity to the verdict as returned by the jury, the defendants in due time and proper form prosecuted this appeal to this court, and the record is now before us for consideration.

H. C. Wallace and William Aull, for appellants. John I. Burden and Clarence Vivion, for respondent.

FOX, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. The record discloses numerous objections and exceptions to the admission and rejection of testimony during the progress of the trial. The record in this cause is quite voluminous, embracing 500 or 600 pages. However we have examined in detail the preservation of the objection and exceptions to the admission and rejection of testimony, and in our opinion the testimony as offered and introduced, to which objections were made, had a tendency to at least throw some light upon the issue presented by the pleadings, and the ruling upon that proposition must be adverse to the appellants.

2. This brings us to the consideration of the instructions given in this cause. Three instructions were given for plaintiff and nine for the defendants. Due exceptions were saved by defendants at the time to the giving of plaintiff's instructions. In substance, the court instructed on the part of plaintiff that an "insane delusion" is a conception originating spontaneously in the mind, without evidence of any kind to support it, which can be accounted for on no reasonable hypothesis, having no foundation in reality, and springing from disease or a morbid condition of the mind, and the person laboring under same cannot be reasoned out of such conception; that whenever a person imagines something extravagant to exist which really has no existence whatever, and he is incapable of being reasoned out of his false belief, he is in that respect insane; that if the delusion relates to his child, and the jury further believe that plaintiff was the child of Gustav Gruber, that he imagined that she was not his child, that there was no reason or foundation in fact for such conception, and that he was incapable of being reasoned out of same, then said Gruber was possessed of an insane delusion as to his said child; that if the jury believed from the evidence that said will was the fruit or offspring of such delusion or false conception, then they would find for plaintiff, although they might believe that said Gruber was sane and rational upon other subjects and capable of transacting ordinary business. Again, that if the jury believed from the evidence at the time said Gruber executed the will he was laboring under an "insane delusion" as defined in the instructions, and that such delusion affected the disposition of his property in regard to the plaintiff, and that it was the offspring or fruit of such delusion, then he was at the time without testamentary capacity.

At the request of the defendants, the jury were instructed, in substance, that if they believed from the evidence that, at the very time Gruber signed said will, he had sufficient understanding and intelligence to, and did, know that he was disposing of his property by will, and the disposition he was making of his property, and to whom he was giving it, then he had sufficient mental capacity to make a will, and the finding would be for defendants, unless the plaintiff had shown by a preponderance of the evidence that at the very moment he executed the will he was laboring under the insane delusion that plaintiff was not his child, and that solely by reason of such delusion and belief at the very moment he signed such instrument, and for no other reason, he did not give the plaintiff the portion of his estate he otherwise would have given her. The jury were further instructed that, although they might find that Gruber possessed said insane delusion about his child when he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor, yet this would not be sufficient, and they must further find that he entertained such delusion when sober, and that his will was the fruit or offspring of such delusion.

The determination of the correctness of the instructions will depend upon the state of the law concerning delusions or partial insanity. "A delusion which might incapacitate a person from making a will is the conception of the existence of something extravagant which has no existence whatever, but of which the person entertaining it is incapable of becoming permanently disabused by argument, reason, or proof. * * * All delusions are not insane delusions. The difference between the two species is that one is the product of the reason, and the other a figment of the imagination. Thus, on an issue as to the insanity of testator, the question is not whether a certain view of his was sound, but whether he imagined or conceived something to exist which did not in fact exist, and which no rational person, in the absence of evidence, would have believed to have existed. * * * In order that the testator may comprehend the relations which he holds to those having claims upon him, no insane delusion should influence his will. Unreasonable prejudice against relatives is not ordinarily a ground for invalidating a will; but it may be set aside where the testator's aversion is the result of an insane delusion and his conduct cannot be explained on any other ground." Words & Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1971-1973. "And to invalidate a will it must appear that the testator was subject to a delusion, as to the facts within his own observation, in the existence of which he actually believed, which a rational man, from the use of his senses under the same circumstances, would have known not to exist. To invalidate a will a delusion upon the part of the testator must have been not only the inducing cause of it, but also an existing one at the time the will was made." Knapp v. Trust Co., 199 Mo., loc. cit. 668, 98 S. W. 70. Insanity in the form of a delusion was exhaustively treated by Judge Wagner in the case of Benoist v. Murfin, 58 Mo. 307. The conclusion reached by Judge Wagner, after an examination of the authorities, was that "the correct principle is that whenever a person imagines something extravagant to exist, which really has no existence whatever, and he is incapable of being reasoned out of his false belief, he is in that respect insane, and, if his delusion relates to his property, he is then incapable of making a will." The case of Benolst v. Murrin has been followed and repeatedly affirmed by a long line of decisions in this state. The principle is also recognized in that case that a man may have excellent business capacity, manage his estate with skill and vigilance, and yet be incapable of making a will by reason of an insane delusion possessed by him which relates to and controls the disposition of his property.

Insanity, such as will render a person incapable of making a will, may be general, or it may be partial. It may be termed "monomania" or a "delusion"; but the authorities agree in holding, as embodied in the instructions given in this cause, that where a person imagines something extravagant to exist which really has no existence whatever, and he is incapable of being reasoned out of his false belief, he is in that respect insane, and if his delusion relates to his child, and he imagines, believes, or conceives that she is not his child, when there is no foundation for such conception, and being incapable of being reasoned out of same, then the testator would be possessed of an insane delusion as to his child, and if the will made is found to be the fruit or offspring of such false conception, then the jury may be warranted in finding against the paper writing proposed by proponents, although it may develop that the testator was sane and rational on other subjects and capable of transacting ordinary business. The above principles seem to be well established as the law of this state, and, so holding, we are of the opinion that the instructions, taken as a whole, were fair and liberal to defendants, and clearly and tersely presented the law as applicable to the facts of this case. We are therefore fully convinced that the objections urged by appellants to the instructions given by the court are not well taken. Therefore the action of the trial court in this respect must be sustained.

3. Having found that the trial court committed no reversible error in the admission and rejection of testimony and in the declarations of law given the jury, we are now confronted with the proposition as to the sufficiency of the evidence developed upon the trial to authorize the submission of the cause to the jury. This being an action at law, the same rule applies as in other actions. If the evidence is conflicting, this court will not undertake to reconcile it. If there is any competent evidence tending to show the insanity of Mr. Gruber, in that he possessed an insane delusion that his daughter was not his child, and that the will in question was the fruit or offspring of such delusion, this court cannot disturb the verdict of the jury by undertaking to say that they placed an improper estimate upon the weight of evidence. Knapp v. Trust Co., 199 Mo., loc. cit. 663, 98 S. W.

70, and authorities there cited. Therefore the only question remaining for this court to determine is whether or not there is sufficient evidence disclosed by the record to authorize the submission of the cause to the jury by the trial court and give support to the action of the court in overruling defendants' demurrer interposed at the close of respondent's testimony, as well as that asked at the close of all the testimony. It will be observed that the testimony in this case took a wide range. It began with the marriage of the testator to his wife in about the year 1880. It disclosed their family relations, especially the treatment of his family by Mr. Gruber from the time his first child, Bessie, was born, up to the time of the death of Mrs. Gruber in March, 1901, and continuing from that time up to the time of the death of Mr. Gruber in the early spring of 1904. His business habits, as well as his social relations, were gone into from the time of his marriage to the time of his death. Such latitude of investigation was proper and was justified under the law. Where a charge of insanity is made against a testator, evidence is competent to show the condition of his mind long prior to and closely approaching the time of the execution of the will, as well as the condition of his mind shortly subsequent to its execution. The purpose of such testimony is to indicate the state of his mind at the very time of the execution of the will. The condition of his mind is tried as of that time. All such evidence is receivable for the purpose of indicating to the jury whether or not the testator, at the time the will was executed, had sufficient mental capacity to fill the requirements of the law. Von De Veld v. Judy, 143 Mo., loc. cit. 363, 44 S. W. 1117; Knapp v. Trust Co., 199 Mo. 640, 98 S. W. 70; Holton v. Cochran, 208 Mo., loc. cit. 426, 106 S. W. 1035.

After carefully analyzing in detail the whole record of the evidence in this case, we have come to the conclusion that the verdict rendered by the jury ought to be sustained for the following reasons: From about the year 1880, when Mr. Gruber married, up to about 1899, he lived a happy life with his wife and children. He had a prosperous business and accumulated property. He was affectionately devoted to his family, and the respondent, Bessie, was his favorite. The family stood high in the community where they lived, and there was never a breath of suspicion, so far as the evidence shows, against the marital loyalty of Mrs. Gruber. Some time, presumably after the birth of his children, Mr. Gruber began drinking, and the habit grew upon him until it reached an excessive state. He then began regularly to come home in the evening from his office work in a state of intoxication, grew irritable, cross, and fault-finding with his family, and especially Mrs. Gruber and his daughter Bessie. About this time, without any reason whatever, so far as the evidence discloses, he conceived the false belief that Bessie was not his child, and by innuendo at least accused his wife of not being true to her marriage vows. The witnesses describe the first time that he made the charge that Bessie was not his child. He then continued nearly every day to make the same charge, and evidently formed a great aversion to his daughter Bessie. So far as the evidence shows, he never after that treated her kindly and as a daughter. Mrs. Gruber remonstrated and reasoned with him, and so did his children and the old colored woman who lived in the yard; but, instead of listening to them, he became insanely angry and raved like a madman. This conduct continued up to the time of the death of Mrs. Gruber in March, 1901. There is no doubt but that his habits of intoxication and his treatment of his wife and daughter hastened her death. After the death of Mrs. Gruber, passing by his unnatural conduct which occurred at her deathbed, he continued to keep up his excessive habits of drinking and intoxication, and his treatment of his daughter Bessie, instead of improving, grew worse, and he continued repeatedly and often to accuse her of not being his daughter, and to tell her that she would not get any of his property. The evidence shows that Bessie was dutiful and obedient to her father and very solicitous for his welfare; that she kept house for Mr. Gruber and her two little brothers; that she was very much devoted to her brothers and did all for them and her father she possibly could. There is no evidence showing that she was rebellious or disobedient, or that she refused to go to school, outside of one or two indefinite statements that should have been made by Mr. Gruber. In the summer of 1901, without any cause, so far as disclosed by the evidence, Mr. Gruber drove Bessie away from his house, telling her that she was not his child and to leave his home. Afterward, upon being sent for by him, she returned and remained with him until January 1, 1902; but his intemperate habits continued. His treatment of Bessie was the same as before. He insisted that she was not his child, and that he would not leave her any property, although she and her brothers, especially the older one, Casper, tried to convince him to the contrary. Their home life with Bessie as housekeeper and foster mother of her brothers terminated and ended on January 1, 1902, when he drove her from his house on a cold night, admonishing her never to return or to darken his door again, with curses and imprecations, and charging her that she was not his daughter, and he would give her none of his property, at the same time telling her to go and get married if she wanted to. The following month she was married to Mr. Buford, her present husband. Bessie saw her father only once after that. Some time during 1903, in the spring of the year, she met her father in Lexington. He refused to recognize her as his daughter, told her that she was not his child, and refused to have a conversation with her.

The foregoing outline of facts was testified to by those who were close to him and saw him every day, and who were in the most favorable position and had the best opportunity of knowing and observing his conduct and actions. Appellants introduced quite a number of witnesses—business men of good standing, who occasionally had business transactions with Mr. Gruber—who testified to his good business qualifications, and that, so far as they had observed, he was a man of sound mind. They had no opportunity to observe his conduct at home and his treatment of his wife and daughter. Possibly Mr. Hicklin was closer to Mr. Gruber and saw more of him from the spring of 1903 to November, 1903, than any other person, except the sons of Mr. Gruber. He says that he was drunk about all the time; but, while he was talkative, he could not carry on a connected conversation, and there was no point to anything he said. Mr. Hicklin officed near him, and saw him every day, and had a better opportunity of observing his conduct during that time than any other outside witnesses who testified. It is well to note the circumstances under which the will was made. It will be observed that the provisions of the will made no change in the statutory devolution of the property, except to disinherit his daughter. It is quite evident that the only object he had in making the will was to deprive Bessie of any benefit of his estate. It will also be observed from the testimony of Mr. Wallace, who wrote the will, that while he spoke of Robert and Casper as his two boys, he spoke of Mrs. Buford as Bessie, and did not use the word "daughter," telling Mr. Wallace that he did not want Bessie to have any of his property, that he only intended to give her $1, and that he wanted it put in that way. While it is true that he did not tell Mr. Wallace that he was disinheriting Bessie because she was not his daughter, yet it is difficult, in view of all the facts proven, to conceive how the jury came to any other conclusion than that at the time of making the will he entertained the false belief and delusion that Bessie was not his daughter, and that he was impelled by that false notion to execute the will. At least we are of the opinion that the jury was justified in reaching that conclusion by the evidence offered. There can be no question but that for a time, extending from about the year 1890 to January 1, 1902, Mr. Gruber entertained the fixed and false belief that Bessie was not his child, and that there was ample evidence to justify the characterization of such belief as "monomania" or an "insane delusion."

It is said in the case of State v. Lowe, 93 Mo. 547, 5 S. W. 889, that: "The rule of law, as I understand it to be, is that, where insanity is the result of some temporary cause, as a fit of sickness, or the like, then no pre-sumptions of continuity flow from such temporary cause; but, on the other hand, when you establish, as the evidence tended to do in this case, an insane condition of mind, existing and exhibiting its peculiarities for a long period of years, I incline to think that an instruction embodying the principle evidently intended to be contained in the one asked should have been given. * * * This habitual * * * state of insanity being shown to exist, its continued existence will be presumed, and the burden of establishing a subsequent lucid interval at the time of the act, either civil or criminal, being done, lies on him who asserts it." In State v. Wilner, 40 Wis. 304, where the circumstances tended to show insanity or delusion, it was held error to refuse an instruction which embodied the idea of the presumption of continuance of such delusion. In the case at bar, the insane delusion having been shown to exist, taken in connection with the conduct of Mr. Gruber during the years 1902 and 1903, especially the condition of his mind growing out of his habit of the excessive use of intoxicating liquor, as well as the facts surrounding the execution of the will, we think the jury warranted in finding that at the time, and at the very moment when the will was executed, Mr. Gruber was laboring under the insane delusion that respondent was not his child, and that the will in question was the fruit or offspring of such delusion.

So holding that the verdict rendered by the jury in this cause finding that the paper writing propounded as the last will and testament of Gustav Gruber was not his will was justified by the evidence, and that the trial court acted correctly by submitting the cause to the jury upon proper instructions, the judgment of the trial court setting aside the will of Gustav Gruber, deceased, is affirmed, and it is so ordered. All concur.

MOWRY et al. v. NORMAN.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1195*)—SUBSEQUENT APPEALS—FORMER DECISION AS LAW OF THE CASE.

In a will contest, the court directed a finding that the writing was the last will and testament of deceased, and on appeal the Supreme Court held that such a direction was error. Held that, on a subsequent trial of the case on the same evidence, the trial court properly refused to give this instruction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4661-4665; Dec. Dig. § 1195.*]

2. WILLS (§§ 53, 164*)—CONTESTS—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

It is the purpose of the law in will contests to place the jury in the position of the testator, especially as to his relations with those who are the natural objects of his bounty, and evidence is admissible to show the financial condition and relative situations and needs of those having a claim upon testator's bounty; such evidence bearing upon the issue of undue influence and mental capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 129, 405, 406; Dec. Dig. §§ 53, 164.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—ESTOPPEL TO ALLEGE ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a will contest, where the court, at the request of defendant, instructs the jury that one of the questions to be determined is the capacity of testator to make a will, he cannot complain of a proper instruction given at the instance of plaintiffs bearing upon the same issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3602-3604; Dec. Dig. § 882.*]

4. WILLS (§ 50*)—CONTESTS—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in a will contest, that in determining the issue as to the soundness of mind and testamentary capacity of testator, before the jury can find in favor of the will, they must believe from a preponderance of the evidence that, at the signing and execution thereof, testator had sufficient understanding to comprehend the nature of the transaction that he was engaged in, the nature and extent of his property, and to whom he desired to give it, and was giving it, without the aid of any other person, and unless the proponent of the will has shown, by such preponderance of evidence, that he did possess all these requisites, they should find that the writing introduced was not his will. Held, that the instruction was correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 96-100; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

5. WILLS (§ 52*)—CONTESTS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a will contest, the burden is on the proponent to establish the mental capacity of the testator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 101-110; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

6. WILLS (§ 155*)—CONTESTS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a will contest, an instruction that if the jury believe that at the time of the execution, deceased was of sound and disposing mind and of sufficient memory to execute a will, and if they further find from the evidence that, when it was executed, his mind was, from disease or other cause or causes, subject to the control of the beneficiary in the will, and that said beneficiary unduly exercised such control at the time of the execution of such paper, so as to destroy the free will of deceased in the disposition of his property, or so as to induce him to sign a paper making a different disposition of his property from what he would have made if uninfluenced, so that such disposition was not the free will and desire of deceased, then their verdict should be against the will, properly states the law.

7. WILLS (§ 103*)—CONTESTS—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in a will contest, that if the jury believe from the evidence that the beneficiary of the will, who was testator's son, at the time of the making of the will, and for several years prior thereto, sustained confidential and fiduciary relations towards his father, and that he resided with his father until his death, and had complete control of the household affairs, had the close and implicit confidence of his father, that his father looked to him for advice, counsel, and direction, that he had sole control over his father's business, and that he is the only substantial beneficiary in the will, then the law presumes that the will is the result of the undue influence of the beneficiary over the testator, and, unless such presumption is rebutted by preponderance of the evidence, the jury should find against the will, and that the burden of overcoming such presumption is on proponent, is a correct statement of the law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 388-402; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

8. STIPULATIONS (§ 14*)—CONSTRUCTION.

A stipulation that either party on the second trial of a case might read the evidence of any witness given on the former trial is broad enough to include witnesses who were present at the second trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Stipulations, Cent. Dig. § 32; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 549*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—NECESSITY.

Where it is stipulated, in the second trial of a case, that the evidence given at the first trial may be read at the second trial, and counsel for plaintiffs criticise defendant, who was present, for not testifying in person, an objection to such criticism cannot be considered on appeal, where it is not shown by the bill of exceptions that objections were made to the remarks in the course of the trial, or that exceptions were taken thereto, as such an objection cannot be preserved by setting out the remarks in the motion for new trial and sustaining such averment by an affidavit.

• Appeal from Circuit Court, Nodaway County; F. A. Cummins, Special Judge.

Action by Irena Mowry and Mary Kettering against Marion Norman. The court, at the request of plaintiffs for their second instruction, told the jury that although they may believe from the evidence that, at the time of the execution of the writing read in evidence as the last will of the deceased, he was of sound and disposing mind and memory and of sufficient mental capacity to execute a will, yet, if they further find and believe from the evidence that, at the time of the execution of such paper, his mind was, from disease, age, decrepitude, bodily or mental decay, or other cause or causes, subject to the control of the beneficiary of the will, and that said beneficiary unduly exercised such dominion, power, and influence over his mind at the time of the execution of said paper as to destroy his free will in the disposition of his property, or as to induce him to sign a paper which made a different disposition of his property from what he would have made if uninfluenced, and so that such disposition was not the free will and desire of the said deceased, then their verdict will be against the will. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cook & Wright, W. W. Ramey, and Shina-barger, Blagg & Ellison, for appellant. John Kennish and John M. Dawson, for respondents.

GRAVES, J. This case is here for the second time. It stands admitted that the facts are practically the same as before. In fact, the greater portion of the evidence was read from the previous record, and that offered, in addition, does not substantially change the case or the questions involved therein. Upon this point, the present appellant says: "The evidence at the last trial was, as per stipulation duly filed, mostly, read to the jury from the bill of exceptions filed in the first appeal, there being but few witnesses introduced in person; and this very commendable method of procedure, adopted for the purpose of saving costs, gives rise to one of the important points urged by appellant as ground for reversal, viz., the misconduct of counsel for respondents as appears in the bill of exceptions, and presented in our brief." At the first trial, at the close of all the testimony, the learned trial judge, by peremptory instruction, directed the jury to find that the paper writing was the last will and testament of Wesley Norman. A verdict was returned in accordance with such direction from the court, and upon that verdict judgment was rendered, from which the plaintiffs (contestants) duly appealed. Mowry v. Norman, 204 Mo. 173, 103 S. W. 15. This judgment we reversed and remanded the cause. The pleadings and facts are fully set out in the opinion there given, and it would be a trespass upon time and space to reiterate them here. We were then fully possessed of the facts and in the opinion stated them. The inquiring mind can gather them from this first opinion.

Upon a retrial before a special judge, the cause was submitted to a jury, and this jury found that the paper writing was not the last will and testament of Wesley Norman, upon which verdict judgment was in due form rendered, and from this judgment the proponent of the will has now appealed. Whilst the facts in the case proper are practically the same, some new questions are raised upon the instructions, as well as some matters occurring during the trial. In the former opinion we held that the case should have at least gone to the jury upon the question of undue influence; but, as to the question of mental capacity, we declined to pass upon that issue in express terms either one way or the other; but from the opinion in general it may be gathered that the testimony upon absolute mental incapacity was somewhat scant and questionable in view of some of the Missouri cases. These cases we did not then go into because we had reached the conclusion that the case would have to be reversed and remanded upon the other ground. So that it will only be necessary to note the new questions in this record, leaving the summary of the evidence to be gathered from the former opinion. Such portions of the new record, as well as the old, as may be necessary to a disposition of the present legal questions, now urged, will be noted in the course of the opinion, and this on the theory that both opinions will be read together in order to get the full scope of this opinion.

1. At the close of all the evidence in the case, the defendant or proponent of the will, in this trial, as in the previous trial, asked a peremptory instruction, directing the jury to find that the paper writing was the last will and testament of Wesley Norman, deceased. Although given in the first trial, it was refused in this trial. This refusal is urged as error. In refusing such an instruction, the trial court was but following the mandates of this court. We examined the record on the former appeal and were satisfied that there was a case for the jury. Contestants' case has not been weakened by the facts presented in the last trial. This peremptory instruction was therefore properly overruled.

2. It is further urged that error was committed in permitting the plaintiffs (contestants) to show their financial condition, a condition thoroughly shown to have been within the knowledge of the testator. In will contests, the purpose of the law is to place the jury in the position of the testator. Especially is this true as to the relations of testator with those who are the natural objects of his bounty. If it be shown that one child has been successful in life, and further shown that this child bore a confidential or fiduciary relationship to the testator, and further shown that the testator was in position to know, and did know, the financial situation of the other children (natural children of his bounty), and, under these circumstances, a will is made giving all the property to the one who was in no way (financially speaking) dependent upon the bounty of the testator, such evidence is competent to show that the testator was either incapacitated to make a will by not being able to fully contemplate and know the objects of his bounty, or it is competent as tending to show undue influence upon the mind of the testator in the execution thereof. Such evidence bears upon the issue of undue influence and mental incapacity. Thompson v. Ish, 99 Mo. 160, 12 S. W. 510, 17 Am. St. Rep. 552; Schouler on Wills (3d Ed.) p. 263; 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) pp. 106, 107. By the latter authority, with citations from many states, it is said: "The character of the provisions, however, as being just or unjust, reasonable or unreasonable, may be considered by the jury as tending to throw light on the capacity of the testator. Evidence is therefore admissible tending to throw light on the question of the justice or reasonableness of the will. Such evidence usually relates to the relative situations and needs of those having a claim on the testator's bounty, and to the relations between the testator and those receiving or claiming to have been unfairly deprived of this bounty." And this court, in the recent case of Meier v. Buchter, 197 Mo., loc. cit. 90, 94 S. W. 883, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 202, has expressly approved this language. The writer hereof did not sit in that case, because not argued in his presence, but fully concurs in the doctrine therein announced. There can be no question of evidence as to the relative situations and needs of those having a claim upon the bounty of a testator being proper evidence. You can show the relationship as to whether the testator was friendly or unfriendly to the natural objects of his bounty. The principle of law which admits this evidence admits the other, and for the same reason. Case after case might be cited; but we will not take further space. This contention is untenable.

3. Defendant complains of the action of the court in giving instruction No. 1 for the plaintiffs. This instruction goes to the question of mental incapacity to make a will. If it were not for the fact that defendant himself had asked several instructions on this same question, it might be debatable as to whether or not the instruction should have been given. At the previous hearing of this cause in this court, we did not pass upon that question, but contented ourselves by saying that a peremptory instruction to find that the written instrument was the last will and testament of Wesley Norman was properly refused, at least upon the ground that there was strong evidence tending to show undue influence. The burden is upon the proponent of the will, or the defendant in this case, to show the mental capacity of the party making the will, and so long and so recently has this doctrine been announced that citation of authority is not called for. Now in the present trial the proponent of the will, defendant herein, by his instruction No. 1, had the court to declare that there were three questions to be determined: (1) As to whether or not the will was formally executed; (2) as to whether or not the decedent was sound enough in mind and memory to make a will; and (3) as to whether or not the testator's mind was operating under the undue influence of Marion Norman. As to the first question, defendant asked a peremptory instruction which was given. As to the second question, i. e., that of mental incapacity, the defendant, instead of asking for a peremptory instruction, and thereby forcing the court to declare whether or not there was any evidence upon which to submit said question, assumed a different course; that is to say, he asked and had given instructions fully covering and submitting to the jury the question of mental incapacity. Now bearing in mind that upon this question the burden was upon defendant, the plaintiffs asked and the following instruction was given: "The court instructs the jury that, in determining the issue of the sufficient soundness of mind and testamentary capacity possessed by said Wesley Norman to make a will, before you can find in favor of said proposed will, you must believe from a preponderance of the evidence that, at the time of the signing and execution thereof, the said Wesley Norman had sufficient understanding to comprehend the nature of the transaction that he was then engaged in, the nature and extent of his property, and to whom he desired to and was giving it, without the aid of any other person, and, unless the defendant has shown by such preponderance of evidence that he did possess all these requisites, you should find that the paper writing introduced in evidence is not the will and testament of the deceased, Wesley Norman."

Defendant now says that this instruction is error, and in support thereof cites us to the cases of Couch v. Gentry, 113 Mo. 248, 20 S. W. 890, and Winn v. Grier, 217 Mo., loc. cit. 447, 117 S. W. 48. He also complains that it was indicated to the court in the previous trial that the question of testamentary incapacity was not shown by the evidence. The previous opinion in this court did not positively pass upon that question; but, in fairness to the defendant, it should be said that there was doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence upon that point. This, however, need not be discussed at this time. Under all the rules, the defendant (proponent of the will) must establish the mental capacity of the testator. When such defendant, by instructions submitted by him and approved by the court, presents that question to a jury, it cannot be said that the opposite party has committed error when they submit and have approved an instruction upon the same question, unless the instructions so given are absolutely at variance, so that a jury might be misled by either or all of the instructions. It has been continuously held that, where one side presents instructions upon certain points, the other side cannot be held as committing error in presenting similar instructions upon the same question. See Gordon v. Park, 219 Mo. 600, 117 S. W., loc. cit. 1166, and cases cited.

In this case the instructions asked and received by defendant were as broad as the law will permit, and he, having invoked the judgment of the jury upon the question of mental incapacity, is in no position to complain of a proper instruction upon the same question by the plaintiffs. Defendant having the burden cast upon him as to the question of mental incapacity asked and received instructions fully as broad, if not broader, than the case law of the state. With this situation, the plaintiffs asked the instruction quoted above. They now say this instruction was error because this court had indicated that such question was not in the case. We did not in direct terms so indicate; but, whether we did or not, the defendant, having asked instructions upon the same question, is in no condition to complain, unless the instruction given for plaintiffs is absolutely erroneous. Defendant might have asked a peremptory instruction upon this question, and thereby obviated the question here; but he did not seek so to do.

Defendant claims that such instruction as was given to the plaintiffs is condemned by the cases of Couch v. Gentry, 113 Mo. 255, 20 S. W. 890, and Winn v. Grier, 217 Mo. 447, 117 S. W. 48. The instruction we have set out above. In the Couch Case, Judge Black, in defining what he understood to be "mental incapacity," said: "If the testator understood the business about which he was engaged when he had prepared and executed the will, the persons who were the natural objects of his bounty, and the manner in which he desired the dispositions to take effect, he was capable of making a will. Schouler on Wills, § 68. Such is, in substance and effect, the rule as stated by this court in a number of cases. Brinkman v. Rueggessick, 71 Mo. 553; Benolst v. Murrin, 58 Mo. 307; Jackson v. Hardin, 83 Mo. 175; Myers v. Hauger, 98 Mo. 433, 11 S. W. 974; Thompson v. Ish, 99 Mo. 160, 12 S. W. 510, 17 Am. St. Rep. 552; Norton v. Paxton, 110 Mo. 456, 19 S. W. 807. We said in the case last mentioned that a person, though aged or infirm, who is able to transact his ordinary business affairs, and who has a mind and memory capable of presenting to him his property and those persons who come reasonably within the range of his bounty, has the capacity to make a will." In Winn v. Grier Judge Fox said: "The cases above cited have firmly settled the question as to the requisite test of mental capacity sufficient to execute a valid will. As was said by Gantt, J., in speaking for this court in Sayre v. Trustees of Princeton University [192 Mo. 95, 90 S. W. 787], supra, 'the standard of mental capacity required to sustain a will has been fixed so far as judicial utterances can settle a principle, and it is that the testator must have "had sufficient understanding to comprehend the nature of the transaction that he was engaged in, the nature and extent of his property, and to whom he desired to give it, and was giving it, without the aid of any other person,"' citing, in support of such rule, Crossan v. Crossan, 169 Mo., loc. cit. 641, 70 S. W. 136; Brinkman v. Rueggessick, 71 Mo. 553; Couch v. Gentry, 113 Mo. 248, 20 S. W. 890."

Comparing the instruction given with the discussions made by Judges Black and Fox, we are unable to discover any error in plaintiffs' instruction set out above. In fact, we are impressed that the instructions upon the other side, asked and obtained, go further than the cases in Missouri. This contention therefore will be ruled against appellant.

4. The next complaint is that the court erred in giving instruction No. 2 for the plaintiffs. This instruction is copied bodily from Moore v. McNulty, 164 Mo., loc. cit. 121, 122, 64 S. W. 159, and in that case it was approved. It was the third in a series of instructions asked by the plaintiff. All the instructions are set out, and the court then used this language: "These instructions, with the exception of the fifth for plaintiff, fairly submitted the issue to the jury. The fifth given for plaintiff is so involved and obscure that we opine it is improperly copied. As it now stands, its only effect would be to confuse and mystify the issue." This instruction, in exact terms, therefore had the express approval of this court, in a case wherein the questions raised were largely upon the instructions. We see no reason to depart from the opinion of Gantt, J., in the McNulty Case.

5. It is next urged that instruction No. 6, given for plaintiffs, was error. This instruction reads: "The court instructs the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that Marion Norman was the son of the testator, Wesley Norman; that, at the time of the making of the paper purporting to be his will, and for several years prior thereto, he sustained confidential and fiduciary relations towards his father; that he resided with his father until his death, and had complete control of the household affairs, had the close and implicit confidence of his father; that his father looked to him for advice, counsel, and direction; that he had sole control and management of his father's business, property, and affairs; and that he is the only substantial beneficiary in said will—then the law presumes that said purported will is the result of undue influence of the said Marion Norman over the said Wesley Norman, and, unless such presumption is rebutted by a preponderance of the evidence, you should find that said paper writing read in evidence is not the last will and testament of the said Wesley Norman, deceased, and the burden of overcoming such presumption is on the defendant." This instruction is along proper lines. It follows the opinion of this court upon the former trial. Some of the language might be judiciously changed; but, in substance, it is correct. It is predicated upon the facts in evidence, and simply says to the jury that, if they find from the evidence certain facts, then undue influence will be presumed, and, further, that it devolves upon the defendant to rebut by the proof the existence of undue influence. The question and the authorities bearing thereon were discussed in the prior opinion, and we shall not repeat here. There is nothing new in the evidence or the authorities cited. They were reviewed at the last hearing.

6. Another assignment of error is that counsel for plaintiffs made improper remarks to the jury under a stipulation filed in the case. By stipulation it was agreed that either party might read the evidence of any witness from the former trial from the former bill of exceptions, and this stipulation was broad enough to include witnesses who were present. Both sides acted under this stipulation. The defendant, although personally present, did not testify; but his evidence was read from the former transcript of the case. It is charged in the motion for new trial and a subjoined affidavit thereto that counsel for the plaintiffs took occasion to severely criticize the defendant for not having testified in person. This complaint is found for the first time in the motion for new trial and the subjoined affidavit. There is nothing in the bill of exceptions to show that any objections were made to these remarks through the course of the trial, or that any exceptions were taken thereto. That you cannot preserve a point on such remarks, by merely setting them out in the motion and sustaining such averment by an affidavit, has been often passed upon by this court. See Norris v. Whyte, 158 Mo. 20, 57 S. W. 1037, and the numerous cases therein cited.

The substantial and leading contentions of the defendant we have noted. We have read again the evidence in the record. We feel that the jury reached a righteous verdict in the cause, and, unless there was error upon the part of the court, it ought to be affirmed.

We discover no substantial error upon the part of the court, and the judgment is therefore affirmed. All concur, except WOODSON, J., not sitting.

STATE v. TIERNAN.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1900.)

1. ELECTIONS (§ 329*)—FRAUDULENT REGISTRATION—EVIDENCE.

The secretary of the board of election commissioners, or any other witness knowing the fact, could testify that there was a general registration of voters in a city at the time and place where accused was alleged to have illegally registered.

2. WITNESSES (§ 247*)—ANSWERS—REPETITIONS—ELECTION PRECINCTS.

Where a witness, in a prosecution for fraudulent registration, stated that there was a registration of voters on the days in question in all the election precincts of the city, and his attention was then called to the precincts by number, it was not necessary that he should repeat the word "election" every time he mentioned the precinct in order to establish that the offense was committed, as alleged, in the Eighth election precinct.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Geo. H. Shields, Judge.

William Tiernan was convicted of fraudulent registration, and he appeals. Affirmed.

C. Orrick Bishop, for appellant. E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Jas. T. Blair, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

GANTT, P. J. On the 21st day of September, 1908, the grand jury of the city of St. Louis returned an indictment charging defendant, William Tiernan, with fraudulently registering under a name not his own in the Eighth election precinct of the Fifteenth ward of the city of St. Louis. Defendant was arraigned and pleaded not guilty. A jury was impaneled and sworn to try the issue thus made. Their deliberations resulted in a verdict of guilty and the infliction upon defendant of a penalty of three years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. Motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were duly filed and overruled, judgment was entered upon the verdict, and defendant appealed.

In due time defendant filed his bill of exceptions. The state's evidence tended to show: That a general registration of voters was held in the city of St. Louis on the 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th of September, 1908; that the registration booth for the Eighth precinct of the Fifteenth ward in said city was at 819 North Twenty-First street; the registration judges in the precinct named were John J. Hickey, August O. Huesser, Fred Reitz, and Joseph Byrne, and the clerks were Louis Hoffman and John Gallagher, all duly commissioned except Byrne, who was sworn in to fill a vacancy. The judges were furnished with cards containing a form of oath to be administered to those applying for registration, and also furnished with a list of questions as to their qualifications, to be answered by such applicants. On one of the days mentioned, while the registration was in progress, defendant presented himself before the judges and clerks of registration of the Eighth precinct of the Fifteenth ward of the city of St. Louis at 819 North Twenty-First street, as charged. The prescribed oath was administered to him and the formal questions propounded as to his qualifications to vote at that place. His answers were such as, if true, to show him to be a qualified voter of said precinct and ward. Defendant stated, in answer to the questions of the judges, that his name was "Frank Clay." He then signed the name "Frank Clay" upon the registration books. He was arrested on the spot. Being asked his name by the arresting officer, defendant answered that it was "Frank Clay." He was taken to headquarters, there gave his name as "William Tiernan," and stated that he lived at 723 North Twenty-First street. It was shown that no such number in fact existed, and the occupant of the house at No. 721 had never seen defendant before the trial. Defendant was identified as William Tiernan. Defendant offered no evidence, but asked the court to direct an acquittal. The request was refused. The court instructed the jury as to the law in the case, including the presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, the credibility of the witnesses, argument of counsel, etc. To all these instructions defendant, by his counsel, saved his exceptions. He also saved certain exceptions to portions of the argument of the circuit attorney.

1. The indictment is not assailed. It is identical in its charging parts with the information approved by this court in State v. Cummings, 206 Mo. 613, 616, 105 S. W. 649, and correctly charges an offense under section 2120j of the act of March 24, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 153 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1373]). No error is suggested in the record proper, and we have been unable to discover any. The arraignment of defendant, the impaneling of the jury, the return of the verdict, and the sentence were all in the usual and regular form.

2. The defendant has assigned various errors, and they will be noted in their order. John Ellsperman, Jr., testified he was secretary of the board of election commissioners of the city of St. Louis, and identified the records of his office offered in evidence of the registration lists made on September 14, 15, 16, and 17, 1908, of persons residing in the Eighth precinct of the Fifteenth ward of the city of St. Louis. He also identified the ward lines or boundaries of the Eighth precinct of the Fifteenth ward. He was then asked if there was a general registration of voters in said city in all election precincts on the said dates, to which defendant objected as calling for incompetent testimony and not the best way to prove it. The objection was overruled, and properly so. Any witness who knew the facts could have testified there was a general registration on those days, and no one naturally was better able to testify to that fact than the secretary of the board under whose supervision the registration was made.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

3. There is no merit in the insistence that there was a failure to show that the offense was committed in the Eighth election precinct. The witness had stated there was a registration on said days in all the election precincts of the city, and his attention was then called to the precincts by number. It was wholly unnecessary to repeat the word "election" every time he mentioned the precinct.

4. As to the contention that the indictment was found without any evidence before the grand jury, and that the names of the registration officers were not indorsed upon the indictment, it suffices to say it is bottomed upon an admission of the circuit attorney which falls far short of the insistence of counsel for defendant. While the admission may disclose a practice which should be avoided in the future, it comes short of admitting that the indictment was found without evidence. Moreover, no complaint was made on this point either by timely motion to quash or in either the motion for new trial or in arrest.

5. Equally unavailing is the assignment now made against the practice of taking the defendant, when he was arrested, to the office of the circuit attorney to get him to make a statement, and the statement of the circuit attorney on that point, for the reason that no such grounds are assigned in the motion for new trial.

We have considered the whole record and find no reversible error.

The judgment is affirmed.

STATE v. EXNICIOUS.

1. ELECTIONS (§ 329*)—OFFENSES—FRAUDULENT REGISTRATION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction of fraudulent registration.

2. ELECTIONS (§ 328*)—OFFENSES—FRAUDULENT REGISTRATION—VARIANCE.

Where an indictment charged that defendant falsely registered under the name "Joseph Walters," which was not his true name, evidence that in signing the primary books on two occasions he misspelled the word "Joseph" and the word "Walters," by omitting the final letter of each word, did not constitute a fatal variance.

3. ELECTIONS (§ 329*)—OFFENSES—FRAUDULENT REGISTRATION—EVIDENCE.

The secretary of the board of election commissioners was competent to testify that there was a general registration of voters in the city of St. Louis on the 15th day of September, 1908, on which date it was claimed accused was guilty of fraudulent registration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 365; Dec. Dig. § 329.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel D. Fisher, Judge.

Harry Exnicious was convicted of fraudulent registration, and he appeals. Affirmed.

This cause is now pending before this court upon appeal by the defendant from a judgment rendered in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, convicting him of the offense of fraudulently registering as a voter of the Tenth election precinct of the Fifteenth ward of the city of St. Louis, under a name not his own. On the 21st day of September, 1908, the grand jury of the city of St. Louis returned an indictment, charging the defendant with the offense as above indicated. The sufficiency of the indictment is not challenged. Hence there is no necessity for burdening this opinion with a reproduction of it. The defendant was duly arraigned and entered his plea of not guilty to the charge contained in the indictment, and the case proceeded to trial before a jury, which had been regularly impaneled.

The testimony developed upon the trial of this case tended to prove, substantially, the following state of facts: That there was a general registration of the voters and electors in the city of St. Louis on the 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th days of September, 1908, and that the judges and clerks of such registration, after being duly sworn and qualified, proceeded in the discharge of their respective duties. All persons desiring to register as qualified voters were required to state, under oath, their place of residence, name, date of birth, age, occupation, and certain other matters touching their qualifications and right to register, and if their answers were satisfactory they were then permitted to sign their names on the register as qualified voters. Upon the 15th day of September, defendant appeared before the judges and clerks of registration of the said Tenth election precinct of the Fifteenth ward and requested that he be permitted to register. After being sworn to truthfully answer questions touching his right to register, he stated, among other things, that his name was Joseph Walters, his place of residence 2013 Olive street, which is in the Tenth precinct of the Fifteenth ward. These answers, together with others, were written by the clerk in the record kept for that purpose, and at the proper place in said books, and in the column for qualified voters, defendant signed his name, "Joseph Walters." His name, age, and residence, as given by him, were then entered on the registration books. When a patrolman, in accordance with directions from one of the judges, started to strike the defendant's name from the registration record, defendant tried to make his escape, and was apprehended only when he was shot in the leg. After his arrest, and on the 19th day of September, defendant signed a recognizance in the name of "Joseph Walters" and again gave his address as 2013 Olive street. The state's evidence also tended to prove that no one of the name of Joseph Walters had ever resided at 2013 Olive street, that defendant's name is Harry Exnicious, and at the time of his offense, and prior thereto, he resided at 821 or 823 Carr street, which was not in the Tenth precinct of said Fifteenth ward. At the close of the state's evidence, the defendant demurred thereto, but offered no evidence in his defense. At the close of the evidence, the court fully instructed the jury upon the charge embraced in the indictment, and upon the credibility of witnesses, and the necessity of establishing the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt. The cause was then submitted to the jury, and they returned their verdict finding the defendant guilty as charged, and assessed his punishment at imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of five years. Timely motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed and by the court taken up and overruled. Sentence and judgment was entered of record in accordance with the verdict, and from this judgment the defendant prosecuted this appeal, and the record is now before us for consideration.

C. Orrick Bishop, for appellant. E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Chas. G. Revelle, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

FOX, J. (after stating the facts as above). We have read in detail all of the testimony as disclosed by the record, and in our opinion it conclusively establishes the guilt of the defendant of the charge embraced in the indictment.

1. Learned counsel for appellant directs our attention to the testimony wherein it appears that the defendant signed four registration books in the presence of the officers, and specially directs our attention to the fact that his signature was not precisely the same upon some of the books; but that he did sign the registration books there is no dispute. The indictment charges that he registered under the name of "Joseph Walters," and that his proper name was that of Harry Exnicious, the name under which he was indicted. The testimony clearly shows that the original registration book was signed by him as "Joseph Walters." Upon the copy of the original registration book, the most that can be said of his signature was that he misspelled the name, both "Joseph" and "Walters." However, it is clear that, notwithstanding the improper spelling of the name, it was intended for "Joseph Walters." Upon one of the primary books there was simply a mistake in the spelling of the name "Joseph." In the spelling of that part of his name he omitted the letter "h," as well as omitting from the surname the letter "s," making it "Walter," in place of "Walters." The record discloses further that on line 21, and under the heading "Signature," he again simply misspelled his Christian name; that is to say, spelled it "Josph," instead of "Joseph." His surname, "Walters," was properly spelled in writing that signature. Upon another primary book we find the record disclosing the signature of "Joseph Walters." Upon these disclosures of the record, counsel insists that there was, by reason of the mistakes herein indicated in the spelling of the name Joseph Walters, in signing the registration books, a material variance between the allegations of the indictment and the proof as to how the appellant signed the alleged books of registration. In support of this insistence our attention is directed to the recent case of State v. Judd, 120 S. W. 780. We have carefully re-examined that case, and it is sufficient to state upon this proposition that it is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. In the Judd Case it is charged in the information that the defendant had answered that his name was "Chas. Cohn," and that the judges, clerks, and officers of registration had entered and written his name in said register as "Chas. Cohn." The pleading in that case then proceeds to charge and allege that the defendant unlawfully and feloniously did sign said registers and books of registration by writing the name of "Chas. Cohn." As was said in that case, it charges a registration under one name and a signature of an entirely different name. That is not this case. Here the charge is that the defendant, Exnicious, registered under the name of Joseph Walters, and did then and there unlawfully, feloniously, willfully, knowingly, falsely, and fraudulently pretend and represent to the said judges, clerks, and officers of registration of said Tenth election precinct of the Fifteenth ward of the said city of St. Louis that his name was Joseph Walters, and the proof showed that he signed, correctly spelling the name as Joseph Walters. We take it that the simple mistake in the spelling of the name in the one or two instances pointed out does not constitute a fatal variance between the allegation in the indictment and the proof offered in support of it. Again, it may be said, recurring to the Judd Case, that it was charged in that case that defendant signed the registration books under the name of "Cohen," when the witnesses on the part of the state absolutely negative any signing of that name by the defendant. There was absolutely no evidence that defendant signed the registration book as "Chas. Cohen"; but it was clearly shown by the state's own testimony that said name was signed by one of the judges. A casual reading of the Judd Case makes it manifest that it is clearly distinguishable from the case now under consideration.

2. It is next insisted that there was no evidence that this offense was committed in the Tenth election precinct of the Fifteenth ward of the city of St. Louis and at the place of registration of the said Tenth election precinct of the said Fifteenth ward. We are unable to give our assent to this insistence. We have carefully analyzed the testimony disclosed by the record, and the testimony of at least two of the witnesses clearly shows that this offense was committed in the Tenth election precinct of the Fifteenth ward of the city of St. Louis and at the place of registration of said election precinct of said ward; that is to say, at No. 1908 Olive street. This point must be ruled against the appellant.

3. Complaint is also made that the secretary of the board of election commissioners was permitted to testify, over appellant's objection, in a general way, that there was a general registration of voters in the city of St. Louis on the 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th days of September, 1908, without any evidence that the same was held in pursuance of any notice or official action on the part of the election commissioners, or pursuant to any law. There is no merit in this complaint, and it is sufficient to say that a similar objection was urged in the case of State v. Tiernan (handed down at the present sitting of this court) 122 S. W. 728, and it was there held that the objection was properly overruled, and that any witness who knew the facts had the right to testify that there was a general registration on those days, and no one was better able to testify to that fact than the secretary of the board under whose supervision the registration was made.

The testimony disclosed by the record is amply sufficient to show that the defendant's true name is that of "Harry Enxicious," and that he did fraudulently register upon the registration book under a name which was not his own, that of "Joseph Walters."

Finding no reversible error disclosed by the record, the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. All concur.

STATE v. SHELTON.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 127*)—MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE—SUFFICIENCY OF INFORMATION.

An information against two defendants for first-degree murder held to sufficiently charge the offense, and that an allegation therein that the offense was committed with an ax, "which they the said F. S. and H. K. then and there in their hands held," while not to be commended, did not render it fatally defective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 192-194; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1158*)—REVIEW ON APPEAL—WAIVER OF PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION—CONCLUSION OF TRIAL COURT.

Where it appears on appeal that the trial court heard the evidence on both sides, and decided that there had been a waiver of a preliminary examination as was recited in the transcript of a justice of the peace, and defendants were permitted to introduce evidence to contradict the conclusion of the trial court, its finding will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3074; Dec. Dig. § 1158.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1087*)—RECORD ON APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING.

An extreme doubt as to whether or not disclosures of the record on appeal as to the entry of a nunc pro tunc order, extending the time for filing a bill of exceptions, authorized the filing, will be resolved in defendant's favor; but the action of the court, after lapse of two terms, and without any notice to the prosecuting officer, and without any showing as to any memorandum made by the court, either on its docket or on the record, that error was committed in preparation of the record, cannot be approved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2780, 2781; Dec. Dig. § 1087.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1064*)—PRESERVATION OF QUESTIONS FOR REVIEW—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Whatever occurs during the examination and qualification of the panel of jurors from which the trial panel is to be selected must be preserved, not only in the bill of exceptions, but the court's attention must be directed to a complaint concerning the same in the motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2677; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 106*)—EVIDENCE—AS TO MOTIVE.

It is not improper to supplement evidence indicating that robbery was the motive for a killing, with proof that deceased usually had money in his possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 329; Dec. Dig. § 106.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 508*)—EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICE—ADMISSIBILITY.

That an accomplice not jointly prosecuted with the defendant is a competent witness for the state is clearly settled by Rev. St. 1899, § 4680 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2549), providing that "any person who has been convicted of a criminal offense is, notwithstanding, a competent witness."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1100, 1110; Dec. Dig. § 508.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 508*)—EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Any inducements held out to an accomplice, and the fact that he admitted that he was an accomplice, are questions which affect only his credibility and the weight of his testimony, which are matters for the jury's consideration, and do not affect his competency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1101, 1102; Dec. Dig. § 508.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 775*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTION AS TO AN ALIBI.

An instruction that, unless the jury found from all the facts and circumstances given in evidence, the presence of defendant at the place of the alleged murder, and his guilt beyond reasonable doubt, they should acquit him, sufficiently covered the defense of alibi.

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 780*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICE.

An instruction that the testimony of an accomplice, that is, the person who actually commits or participates in the crime, when not corroborated by some other person or persons not implicated as to matters material to the issues, that is, matters connecting defendant with the commission of the crime, ought to be received with great caution, and the jury ought to be fully satisfied with its truth before they convict on such testimony, and that the jury were at liberty to convict "on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice alone, if any, will establish defendant's guilt," held to substantially accord with uniform rulings of the Supreme Court on the subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1862, 1863; Dec. Dig. § 780.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

Where an instruction given fully covered the subject of the corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice, a requested instruction by defendant as to such matter was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 784*)—INSTRUCTIONS—"CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE."

An instruction, in a murder case, told the jury that the state sought to some extent to convict defendant on circumstantial evidence (that is, there is no evidence by any witness that saw the fatal blow struck); that evidence is of two kinds, direct and circumstantial; that circumstantial evidence is proof of certain facts and circumstances in a certain case in which the jury may infer other and connected facts which usually and reasonably follow according to the common experience of mankind; and that crime may be proven by circumstantial evidence as well as by direct testimony of eyewitnesses, but the facts and circumstances in evidence should be consistent with each other and with defendant's guilt, and inconsistent with any reasonable theory of his innocence. Held, that it declared the law substantially in harmony with the holdings of the Supreme Court.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1161-1163.]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 785*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES—WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY.

In a murder case, an instruction on the credibility of witnesses and weight to be attached to their testimony substantially told the jury that they were the sole judges thereof, that, in determining such credit, weight, and value to be attached to the testimony of any witness, they should consider the character of the witness, his or her manner on the stand and of testifying, his or her interest, if any, in the result; his or her relation to or feeling for defendant or deceased; the probability of his or her statement, as well as all other facts and circumstances detailed in evidence; and finally that, if they believed any witness willfully or knowingly swore falsely to any material fact, they were at liberty to disregard any part of his testimony. Held sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1891; Dec. Dig. § 785.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 755½*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—COMMENT ON FACTS AND CALLING ATTENTION TO PARTICULAR FACTS IN TESTIMONY.

The court should not comment on the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731-1765; Dec. Dig. § 755½.*]

14. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 811*)—INSTRUCTIONS—UNDUE PROMINENCE TO PARTICULAR FACTS.

The court should not call the jury's attention especially to particular facts developed in the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1787, 1960-1972; Dec. Dig. § 811.*]

15. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 811*)—INSTRUCTIONS—UNDUE PROMINENCE TO PARTICULAR MATTERS.

The manner and means of inducing an accomplice to testify with the view of getting a lighter punishment are matters of legitimate argument before the jury, but it would manifestly be erroneous to point out those facts, and say to the jury that they must specially consider them in weighing his testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1971; Dec. Dig. § 811.*]

16. HOMICIDE (§ 341*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DESIGNATION OF PUNISHMENT JURY MAY INFLICT—HARMLESS ERROR.

The jury having been required to find every essential element of murder in the first degree, and having found defendant guilty thereof, and fixed his punishment pursuant to Act March 18, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 235, § 1), amending section 1817, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1262), providing for decision by the jury of the punishment to be inflicted on conviction of murder in the first degree, defendant was not injured by the court's failure to designate the punishment they might inflict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 721; Dec. Dig. § 341.*]

17. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 741*)—TRIAL—WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Christian County; John T. Moore, Judge.

Frank Shelton was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

This cause is now before this court upon appeal from a judgment of the circuit court of Christian county, Mo., convicting the defendant of murder of the first degree. The amended information, upon which defendant was tried, and which was duly verified, was filed by the prosecuting attorney in the circuit court of Christian county on the 25th of August, 1908. Omitting formal parts, the charge upon which defendant was convicted was thus stated in the information: "Fred W. Barrett, prosecuting attorney within and for the county of Christian, in the state of Missouri, for an amended information, informs the court under his official oath and upon his best information and belief that Frank Shelton and Henry Killion on or about the 12th day of May, 1908, in the said county of Christian, in the state of Missouri, in and upon the body of one William Bowen, then and there being, feloniously, willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, and of their malice aforethought did make an assault, and with a dangerous and deadly weapon, to wit, an ax, of the weight of three pounds, which they, the said Frank Shelton and Henry Killion, in their hands then and there had and held, him, the said William Bowen, then and there feloniously, on purpose and of their malice aforethought, willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly did assault, strike, beat, and wound; and with the ax aforesaid then and there feloniously, on purpose, and of their malice aforethought, willfully, deliberately, and premeditatedly, did assault, strike, beat and wound him, the said William Bowen, in and upon the head of him, the said William Bowen, giving him, the said William Bowen, with the dangerous and deadly weapon aforesaid, to wit, the ax aforesaid, in and upon the head of him, the said William Bowen, one mortal wound of the length of two inches and the width of one-half inch, and the depth of one inch, of which said mortal wound the said William Bowen then and there instantly died. And the said Fred W. Barrett, the prosecuting attorney aforesaid, under his oath of office aforesaid, does say that the said Frank Shelton and Henry Killion, him, the said William Bowen, in the manner aforesaid, and by the means aforesaid, at the time and place aforesaid, feloniously, willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, on purpose, and of their malice aforethought did kill and murder, contrary to the form of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state."

The evidence developed upon the trial of this cause upon the part of the state substantially tended to show that the deceased, William Bowen, lived about two miles south of Nixa, in Christian county. He was 65 or 70 years old, and was a huckster by trade, collecting poultry and produce in the vicinity of his home, and making weekly trips to Springfield for the purpose of marketing his wares. Deceased was accustomed to carry sufficient money to transact his business; a considerable sum being required to purchase the produce which he hauled to Springfield on his weekly trips. The fact that he usually had money in his possession seems to have been known to a number of persons, including appellant's co-indictee. Deceased was last seen alive about dark on Tuesday, the 12th day of May, 1908, returning to his home after a trip to Springfield. Deceased's neighbors, attracted by the evident neglect from which his horses were suffering, on Thursday, May the 14th, visited deceased's premises and discovered the body. It lay, face downward, on the floor in a pool of blood. A bloody ax lay near the body. There was blood upon a trunk and chair, and the former gave evidence of having been rifled. Death was caused by a blow upon the head, inflicted by a blunt instrument, which shattered the skull. The wound was necessarily and almost instantaneously fatal. Bowen had been dead 36 hours, or more, when his body was discovered. On Tuesday night preceding the discovery of the body defendant and his co-indictee, Killion, and one Stewart, all of whom lived or worked in the vicinity of Bowen's home, went fishing. Soon after 9 p. m. Stewart left appellant and Killion and went home, the latter stating at the time that he and appellant were going to an old pond near by and continue fishing. They retained Stewart's seine, and it was found in his yard the following morning. Appellant on Tuesday morning had suggested to his codefendant that they rob Bowen. After Stewart left the fishing party Tuesday night, appellant renewed his suggestion, threatening to kill young Killion unless he acceded thereto. The latter finally agreed to aid in appellant's enterprise, and the two went to deceased's house. Appellant stationed Killion in the road near the house, approached the door, rapped upon it, and was admitted by deceased. Killion testified that he then saw some one leave and re-enter the house; that he heard a "lumbering and then a groan" in the house. Soon thereafter, appellant emerged from the house, stooped and washed his hands in a rivulet at the roadside, and said to Killion, "I got the money," adding an admonition to Killion "not to tell, whatever he done." Appellant and Killion then went to the latter's home and there spent the night. Appellant offered Killion part of the money taken from deceased. After the discovery of the body, in a conversation concerning the killing, appellant, when asked if he did it, replied: "I wouldn't say I didn't, but there was nobody ever seen me kill him, if I did kill him." In the same conversation he offered one Fonville $20 to leave the country, telling him that he, Fonville, was suspected. There was testimony to the effect that when appellant was arrested he said he "thought he could prove out of that," that there "was a little blood on his shirt," and "his shoes looked like they had blood or something on them." Appellant, after his arrest, was taken to view the body, and the officer who had him in charge testified that "he was nervous and shaky, turned white and pretty much every color a man could turn who was guilty of a crime."

When Killion, jointly indicted with appellant, was offered as a witness by the state, objection was made to his testifying. He was then permitted to plead guilty to manslaughter in the fourth degree. Appellant, still objecting to Killion's testifying, asked, and was granted, permission to offer testimony as to Killion's having been promised as an inducement to confess a light sentence in the Reform School. The evidence offered on this head was conflicting. Counsel for appellant upon cross-examination of Henry Killion, the accomplice, sought to discredit Killion, and, in addition to the cross-examination, he offered in evidence a confession signed by Killion. While this signed confession of Killion offered by counsel for appellant tended to contradict him upon some of the matters to which he testified in his oral examination, yet as to some of the material facts this signed confession of Killion substantially agreed with his oral testimony while on the witness stand.

Defendant testified in his own behalf, and substantially stated that on the Tuesday night on which Bowen was killed he went fishing as detailed by witnesses Henry Killion and Stewart, and that about 9:30 p. m. he and Killion left the pond, where they had gone after Stewart left them, and went to Killion's home; that he had two little fish in his pocket. These he put into a tub near the door, followed Killion into the house, and slept there that night. He positively denied being at Bowen's house at all, and stated that the testimony of Killion regarding his connection with the killing of Bowen was absolutely false. Defendant also contradicted and denied the testimony of witness Fonville, and also denied the conversation attributed to him by witness Ball on the occasion when Ball arrested him. The defendant, as an explanation as to the blood on his shirt, said that he "might have got it from cleaning fish or popping a snake's head off." He further stated that there was no blood upon his shoes, and what was seen upon his shoes "was not blood at all, but was from a snag or something." There was other testimony offered on the part of the defendant tending to show that the witness Henry Killion, who was charged as an accomplice, had about two months before the tragedy threatened to kill Bowen, the deceased. It was drawn out in the examination on this subject that this threat on the part of Killion against Bowen resulted from Killion's father teasing him about Sabbath breaking, and suggested that the deceased, Bowen, act as judge to pass upon young Killion's misdemeanors. It also appeared in evidence offered by the defendant that prior to Killion's confession the prosecuting attorney offered him, Killion, partial immunity if "he would tell him about the killing and all about where the money was, and that Killion subsequently denied the truth of his confession."

There was other testimony offered by the defendant which tended to show that the reputation of witness Fonville for truth and veracity was bad. It also appeared in evidence that $26.71 was found in some egg cases in Bowen's house after the killing. There was also evidence offered on the part of the appellant tending to show that a horseman who strongly resembled Shelton appeared on the road leading from Bowen's to Killion's at "half past 8 or 9 o'clock, or later," on the night of the killing, and that this horseman, after inquiring as to the road to Nixa, continued up the road. Another witness testified that he saw a horseman between 11 and 12 o'clock the same night riding rapidly northward along the Springfield road. There was other testimony offered by the defendant which contradicted the state's evidence as to the time Henry Killion and the defendant reached the Killion home on the night of the tragedy. The state, in rebuttal, offered proof tending to show contradictory statements made by some of appellant's witnesses in reference to the time when appellant and Killion reached Killion's house. This sufficiently indicates the nature and character of the testimony upon which this case was submitted to the jury. At least, it is entirely sufficient to enable us to dispose of the legal propositions presented by the record.

At the close of the evidence, the court instructed the jury upon the various subjects to which the testimony was applicable. We deem it unnecessary to here reproduce all the instructions given or refused, but will during the course of the opinion give them such attention as they require. The cause was then submitted to the jury, and they returned their verdict finding the defendant guilty as charged, and fixed his punishment at life imprisonment in the penitentiary of this state. Timely motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed, and by the court taken up and overruled. Sentence and judgment were rendered by the court in accordance with the verdict returned, and from that judgment the defendant prosecutes this appeal, and the record is now before us for consideration.

FOX, J. (after stating the facts as above). The record in this cause discloses numerous complaints on the part of the appellant upon which are predicated the reasons why the judgment in this cause should be reversed. We will give to the errors complained of such attention as we deem the importance of the questions presented demand and merit.

1. The information in this cause sufficiently charges the offense of which the defendant was convicted. While perhaps the form of the information wherein it is charged that the offense was committed with an ax, "which they, the said Frank Shelton and Henry Killion, in their hands then and there had and held," is not to be commended, such defect does not render the indictment fatally defective. State v. Dalton, 27 Mo. 13; State v. Payton, 90 Mo. 220, 2 S. W. 394; State v. Grimes, 29 Mo. App. 470. In State v. Dalton, supra, it was expressly ruled by this court that the manner in which the instrument is held by which the injury is inflicted is not material, and, even if it was material under the common-law rules of pleading, it is manifestly cured by the sweeping provision of our statute, which declares that "no indictment shall be deemed invalid on account of any defect or imperfection which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits." The rule as announced in that case was unqualifiedly approved in the later case of State v. Payton in 90 Mo. 220, 2 S. W. 394.

2. It is next earnestly insisted that the information in this cause upon which the defendant was tried and convicted should have been quashed for the reason that the defendant was not afforded a preliminary examination prior to the filing of such information. Upon this proposition, we find that the transcript of the justice of the peace shows that there was a waiver on the part of the defendant of a preliminary examination; but, aside from this, the trial court permitted learned counsel for defendant to introduce evidence tending to contradict the recitals of the transcript of the justice for the purpose of showing that, despite the recitals of the transcript, defendant Shelton neither had nor waived a preliminary examination. Upon this inquiry the trial court heard the evidence on both sides and found the facts against the defendant. In other words, that there had been a waiver of the preliminary examination. Upon this state of the record this court is not inclined to disturb the conclusions reached by the trial court. State v. Hathhorn, 166 Mo. 229, 65 S. W. 756; State v. Hunter, 181 Mo. 316, 80 S. W. 955; State v. Gordon, 186 Mo. 185, 95 S. W. 420.

3. The learned Attorney General presents the question upon the disclosures of the record as to whether or not there is anything before this court for review save and except the record proper. It is sufficient to say upon that proposition that it is extremely doubtful as to whether or not the disclosures of the record as to the entry of the nunc pro tunc order extending the time for the filing of the bill of exceptions authorized the filing of such bill, yet we are disposed to resolve the doubt in favor of the defendant, but will add that we by no means approve of the action of the court after the lapse of two terms, and without any notice to the prosecuting officer, and without any showing as to any memorandum made by the court, either upon its docket or upon the record that an error had been committed in the preservation of the record, in entering a nunc pro tunc order which would authorize the filing of the bill of exceptions. It follows from this that we will treat the bill of exceptions as filed within the proper time, and give to the questions preserved by such bill the attention we deem necessary.

4. Appellant makes complaint concerning the examination and qualification of the panel of jurors in this cause. It is sufficient to say upon this proposition that the appellant has failed to incorporate this complaint as one of the grounds in his motion for a new trial. Whatever occurred in the trial of this cause during the examination and qualification of the panel of jurors from which the trial panel was to be selected must be preserved, not only in the bill of exceptions, but the court's attention must be directed to that complaint in the motion for new trial. In State v. Tomasitz, 144 Mo. 86, 45 S. W. 1106, it was urged that the court erred in refusing to sustain defendant's challenge to one of the jurors upon the panel. The motion for new trial called the attention of the trial court to the error complained of in refusing to sustain defendant's challenge to the juror, but failed to give the name of the juror against whom the challenge was directed, and in that case it was said by this court, speaking through Judge Burgess, that: "We are therefore entirely at sea as to what juror was intended to be embraced in the motion, and must disregard this contention." In the case at bar the motion for new trial fails to assign any errors respecting the examination of jurors or the exceptions to those that were examined as being qualified to sit in the trial of the cause. Manifestly this complaint has not been sufficiently preserved to authorize this court to review the action of the trial court upon that subject. This cause presents a much stronger reason for declining to consider the complaint than the case above referred to, for in this case the motion for new trial is absolutely silent as to any complaint respecting the examination and qualification of jurors.

5. We have examined in detail the evidence disclosed by the record, and the objections and exceptions preserved during the progress of the trial interposed by the appellant to the introduction of such evidence. It is sufficient to say concerning the rulings of the court upon the admission of evidence that we find no substantial error; at least no such error as would authorize the reversal of this judgment. During the examination of witness Slane, the state, by her counsel, inquired whether or not he knew anything about the deceased having money, and how he kept it along about the time he was killed. There was an objection to this testimony upon the ground that it did not appear to have any connection with the defendant. It must, however, not be overlooked that during the progress of the trial there was testimony tending to show that the motive which prompted the killing of Mr. Bowen, the deceased, was that of robbery. With that view of the case, we have reached the conclusion that it was not improper to supplement the evidence indicating that robbery was the motive which prompted the killing with the proof that the deceased

ed usually had money in his possession. In State v. Donnelly, 130 Mo., loc. cit. 651, 32 S. W. 1124, it was ruled by this court that there was no error in permitting a witness to testify to the finding of the pocketbook of the deceased near the spot where he was found lying unconscious a day or two next thereafter; and also that it was not error to permit witnesses to testify that deceased had money on his person the day before his death. This testimony was in that case deemed appropriate for the purpose of supplementing the state's evidence indicating that the motive in the commission of the crime was that of robbery. There was no error in the admission of this testimony offered by the state along this line in the case at bar, and the action of the court in denying the motion of appellant's counsel to strike out all of Slane's testimony upon this subject was entirely proper.

6. Learned counsel for appellant earnestly insists that the court committed error in permitting the admitted accomplice of the defendant, Henry Killion, to testify against the defendant as a witness. The record upon this proposition discloses that the state offered Henry Killion, the accomplice, as a witness. When this offer was made, Killion was not on trial, and had not pleaded to the indictment. However, a severance had been granted. Defendant made the further objection to Killion's testifying on the ground that he had neither pleaded guilty nor been convicted, and, being indicted jointly with appellant, he could not therefore testify against him. Upon this objection being made, the accomplice, Killion, by his attorney, as is disclosed by the bill of exceptions, then pleaded guilty to manslaughter in the fourth degree. Counsel for defendant then interposed an objection to Killion's testifying in the case for the following reasons: First, because he had confessed the crime in writing; second, that the prosecuting attorney had agreed with Killion's counsel that, if he would turn state's evidence, he might plead guilty to manslaughter in fourth degree, and not be prosecuted for murder; third, that Killion made the confession and pleaded guilty by reason of hope and persuasion; and, fourth, because Killion was jointly indicted with the defendant. It further appears from the record that, after some controversy, defendant, through his counsel, suggested to the court that the jury be withdrawn, and the court then proceeded to make a preliminary examination as to whether he would permit this witness to testify. In the jury's absence, defendant introduced evidence tending to show that the prosecuting attorney, when Killion was first arrested, said to him: "If you will tell this straight, I know you are not, I will see that you go to the reform school; while, if you don't, I will see that your neck breaks." The prosecuting attorney in this preliminary examination testified that he promised Killion partial immunity if he would "tell where the money was, but he never made him any promise to get him to tell how this thing was done." The court then overruled the objection as to Killion's competency, and the defendant duly preserved his exceptions to the action of the court. The jury was recalled and the trial proceeded. Killion, the accomplice, was introduced, and the defendant objected to his testifying for the same reasons as heretofore stated. The objections as made were overruled, and defendant excepted. Upon this state of the record, we are simply confronted with the proposition as to whether or not this accomplice was a competent witness. We are unable to agree with counsel for the appellant that Killion, the accomplice, was not a competent witness, and, unless we are ready to overrule a long line of decisions in this state, there is no escape from the conclusion that the court did not commit any error in permitting him to testify. As was said in the case of State v. Myers, 188 Mo. 225, 94 S. W. 242: "It has been decided by this court that an accomplice not jointly prosecuted with the defendant is a competent witness for the state"—citing in support of that announcement State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 461, 22 S. W. 378; State v. Walker, 98 Mo. 95, 9 S. W. 646, 11 S. W. 1133; Wharton's Criminal Evidence, § 439; McKenzie v. State, 24 Ark. 636; 1 Bishop's Crim. Proc. (3d Ed.) § 1167; State v. Riney, 137 Mo., loc. cit. 104, 38 S. W. 718. This proposition is clearly settled by the provisions of the statute (section 4680, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2549]), which provides that "any person who has been convicted of a criminal offense is, notwithstanding, a competent witness." In the case of State v. Minor, 117 Mo. 302, 22 S. W. 1085, it was expressly held by this court that an accomplice jointly indicted with the defendant on trial was, after his own conviction, a competent witness for the state against his co-defendant on trial. In State v. Riney, 137 Mo. 102, 38 S. W. 718, it was expressly ruled that the mere fact that the witness expected a lighter sentence for his own confessed complicity in the crime because he had become a witness for the state did not affect his competency; that such fact could only be considered in determining his credibility and the weight to be attached to his testimony. State v. Stewart, 142 Mo., loc. cit. 417, 44 S. W. 240; State v. Black, 143 Mo., loc. cit. 172, 44 S. W. 340. To the same effect is State v. Wigger, 196 Mo. 90, 93 S. W. 390. In the treatment of the proposition now under consideration, this court in that case, speaking through Judge Gantt, said: "If anything is settled in the law of this state, it is that the evidence of an accomplice who confesses his own guilty participation in a crime is competent against his accomplice on trial for the same offense. And the credibility of such a witness is a matter for the consideration of the jury trying the case. State v. Hill, 96 Mo. 357, 10 S. W. 28; State v. Williams, 149 Mo. 496, 51 S. W. 88; State v. Franke, 159 Mo. 535, 60 S. W. 1053. And it is also the accepted doctrine that the evidence of an accomplice, even though uncorroborated, is sufficient to sustain a conviction if believed by the jury. State v. Williamson, 106 Mo. 162, 17 S. W. 172; State v. Black, 143 Mo. 166, 44 S. W. 340; State v. Tobie, 141 Mo., loc. cit. 561, 42 S. W. 1076; State v. Marcks, 140 Mo. 656, 41 S. W. 973, 43 S. W. 1095; State v. Harkins, 100 Mo. 666, 13 S. W. 830." In further treating of this proposition in the Wigger Case this court also said: "The failure of the state to produce the other witnesses to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice could have operated only against the state, and was a legitimate subject for discussion before the jury, but would not authorize this court, which has not the opportunity of seeing and hearing the witness testify, to interfere with the verdict of the jury which did see and hear the witness, and observe his manner of testifying, as well also the manner and testimony of the defendant and his witnesses. Accordingly it must be ruled that the court did not err in submitting the evidence to the jury."

We have thus indicated the rules of law applicable to this proposition that have been uniformly announced by this court. As heretofore stated, the record in this case discloses that the defendant and the accomplice, Killion, were jointly indicted; that there was a severance, and before the accomplice testified in the cause he entered his plea of guilty to manslaughter in the fourth degree. Upon the entering of such plea of guilty and the disposition of his case, clearly, if the rules as heretofore suggested are to be longer followed, he was a competent witness against the defendant in the case at bar. Any inducements held out to the accomplice, Killion, and the fact that he admitted that he was an accomplice in the perpetration of this crime, are questions which affect only his credibility and the weight to be attached to his testimony, which are matters for the consideration of the jury; but, under the well-settled rules of law announced in an unbroken line of decisions in this state, it does not affect his competency as a witness. Upon this proposition, the ruling must be adverse to the contention of learned counsel for appellant.

7. This leads us to the errors complained of by the appellant respecting the declarations of law given by the court in submitting the cause to the jury. The record before us discloses that at the close of the evidence defendant, through his counsel, moved the court to instruct the jury on all points of law in this case, and especially upon the law of an alibi, the use of the evidence of a codefendant and his confession, also on the law of circumstantial evidence, and on the impeachment of witnesses. The record then discloses that the court instructed the jury and that the defendant preserved his exceptions to the instructions given, and also excepted to the refusal of instructions offered by the defendant, but there is an entire absence from the record of any exceptions to the court's failure, if any, to instruct upon the subjects embraced in the motion above referred to. However, in our opinion, the instructions of the court fully covered the subjects to which counsel for the defendant directed its attention. Upon the subject of an alibi, to which the court's attention was directed by the defendant in his motion, the court instructed the jury as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury, unless you find and believe from all the facts and circumstances given in evidence the presence of defendant at the place of the alleged murder, and his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, you should acquit him." It was expressly held by this court in State v. Sanders, 106 Mo. 188, 17 S. W. 223, that an instruction substantially the same as this sufficiently covered the defense of alibi, and rendered the one asked by the defendant unnecessary.

Upon the testimony of an accomplice, the court, in our opinion, by instruction No. 7, directed the jury substantially in accordance with the uniform rulings of this court upon that subject. This instruction was as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury, the court instructs you that the testimony of an accomplice in the crime—that is, a person who actually commits or participates in the crime—when not corroborated by some person or persons not implicated in the crime, as to matters material to the issues—that is, matters connecting the defendant with the commission of the crime as charged against him—ought to be received with great caution by the jury, and the jury ought to be fully satisfied of its truth before they should convict defendant on such testimony. The court further instructs the jury that you are at liberty to convict the defendant, Frank Shelton, on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice alone if you believe the statements as given by such accomplice in his testimony in his testimony to be true, if you further believe that the state of facts sworn to by such witness, if any, will establish the guilt of the defendant."

Upon the subject of circumstantial evidence, in our opinion, the court by instruction No. 6 declared the law substantially in harmony with the uniform holdings by this court. That instruction was as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury, the state in this case seeks to some extent to convict the defendant of the crime charged on circumstantial evidence; that is, there is no evidence by any witness that saw the fatal blow struck. Evidence is of two kinds—direct and circumstantial. Circumstantial evidence is proof of certain facts and circumstances in a certain case in which the jury may infer other and connected facts which usually and reasonably follow according to the common experience of mankind. Crime may be proven by circumstantial evidence as well as by direct testimony of eyewitnesses, but the facts and circumstances in evidence should be consistent with each other, and with the guilt of the defendant, and inconsistent with any reasonable theory of defendant's innocence."

Upon the question of the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be attached to their testimony, to which the attention of the court was directed by defendant's counsel, that subject was entirely and properly covered by instruction No. 8, given to the jury by the court. We deem it unnecessary to reproduce the instruction in full, but it will suffice to say that it substantially told the jury that they were the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight and value of their testimony; that, in determining such credit, weight, and value to be attached to the testimony of any witness, the jury should take into consideration the character of the witness, his or her manner on the stand and of testifying, his or her interest, if any, in the result of the case; his or her relation to or feeling for the defendant or the deceased; the probability of his or her statement, as well as all other facts and circumstances detailed in evidence; and were finally told that, if they believed any witness had willfully and knowingly sworn falsely to any material fact in the case, they were at liberty to disregard all or any part of such witness' testimony. Manifestly the directions to the jury were sufficiently full upon that subject to properly guide them in considering the question treated of by the instruction.

Counsel for appellant further complains concerning the subject of instructions to the jury that the court erroneously and improperly declined to give instruction No. 10, requested by the defendant. This instruction was as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if you find and believe from the evidence that the evidence of Henry Killion, the codefendant of Frank Shelton, was obtained by threats and through fear from or by reason of any promise from the officers of the court or prosecuting attorney, you should weigh his evidence with great care and caution, as evidence obtained in this manner shows the vital interest of such codefendant, or accomplice, and could not be taken as a free and voluntary statement of such codefendant or accomplice given under and after such codefendant or accomplice had been cautioned that such statements may be used against him." It is sufficient to say upon that proposition that the instruction was properly refused. In our opinion instruction No. 7, as heretofore quoted, directing the jury respecting the testimony of an accomplice, fully covered that subject, and furnished ample directions to the jury necessary to an intelligent consideration of the testimony of an accomplice, and advising them of the caution with which such testimony should be received. Instruction No. 10, as offered by the defendant, would clearly be an argument to the jury in the form of a declaration of law. It is fundamental that the court in declaring the law upon any subject should not comment upon the facts or call the jury's attention especially to particular facts developed in the testimony. The manner and means of inducing an accomplice to testify in favor of the state and the fact that he testified with a view of getting a lighter punishment are matters of legitimate argument before the jury, but it would manifestly be erroneous to point out those facts, and say to the jury that you must specially consider these in the weighing of his testimony. The court in the instructions given upon that subject told the jury that they ought to receive the testimony of an accomplice with great caution, and that, before they convicted the defendant upon that character of testimony, they ought to be fully satisfied of its truth. In developing the testimony before the jury, it was legitimate and in entire harmony with appropriate cross-examination to show to the jury all the facts and circumstances which were held out as an inducement to the accomplice to testify. This was proper and a matter of legitimate argument before the jury upon that subject, but, as heretofore indicated, it would be clearly erroneous to undertake to embrace in an instruction the particular facts developed in the testimony as matters of inducement for the accomplice to testify.

It is further insisted by counsel for appellant that the court in its instructions failed to designate the punishment that the jury might inflict if they found the defendant guilty of murder of the first degree. It is sufficient to say upon this proposition that the court properly instructed the jury as to the essential elements necessary to be found by the jury in order to find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree. It is true that the court told the jury that, if they should find the defendant guilty of murder of the first degree, they should simply so state in their verdict. Doubtless the trial court was following the old form of instruction when there was no discretion in the jury as to the infliction of punishment for murder in the first degree. The act approved March 18, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 235, § 1), amending section 1817, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1262), provides substantially that the jury, if they find the defendant guilty of murder of the first degree, shall decide which punishment shall be inflicted, either death or imprisonment in the penitentiary during their natural lives. The jury in the case at bar returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty of murder of the first degree, and decided in accordance with the provisions of section 1817 of the Laws of 1907 that his punishment should be fixed at imprisonment in the penitentiary during his natural life. While the court did not designate the punishment that the jury was authorized to impose, yet the jury fixed the punishment that was authorized by the law, and we are unable to see how the defendant's rights were prejudiced by reason of the failure of the court to designate the punishment. They were required, as before stated, to find every essential element necessary to constitute the offense of murder of the first degree, and they found the defendant guilty of that offense and fixed his punishment at life imprisonment, and we repeat that we are unable to see upon what theory the defendant could have been injured by reason of the failure of the court to designate the punishment.

8. Finally, it is insisted by appellant that the evidence as developed upon the trial of this cause was insufficient to support the verdict. We have carefully analyzed the testimony as disclosed by the record. It was the exclusive province of the jury to determine the weight of the testimony introduced both by the state and the defendant. If they believed the testimony of the accomplice and some of the other witnesses who testified in the cause, we are of the opinion that such testimony furnished full support to the verdict returned. We are not unmindful that this conviction rests largely upon the testimony of an accomplice, but, unless we have reached that point in the administration of the laws of this state that we are to depart from the uniform rules announced applicable to the testimony of an accomplice and overrule an unbroken line of decisions upon that subject, then there can be no escape from the conclusion that at last it was a question for the jury, with all the facts before them, to pass upon the testimony of the accomplice, as well as the other witnesses, and return a verdict in accordance with the conclusions reached. The witnesses testifying in this cause were before the court and jury, and, as has been repeatedly said, jurors and the courts have opportunities of judging of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be attached to their testimony that are not afforded an appellate court. Hence our conclusion is that the verdict of the jury should not be disturbed by reason of the claim of the insufficiency of the testimony.

We have indicated our views upon the legal propositions disclosed by the record, which results in the conclusion that there was no substantial error such as would require this court to reverse and remand this cause. Therefore the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed; and it is so ordered. All concur.

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1114*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—ABSENCE OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW
ON RECORD PROPER.

Where, though the transcript of the record entries on a criminal appeal contained a paper signed by the trial judge with the customary recital in closing bills of exceptions, none of the testimony was preserved, and no exceptions appeared in the transcript, only the record proper will be reviewed, and, that being regular, judgment of conviction will be affirmed.

Appeal from Criminal Court, Buchanan County; A. W. Lincoln, Special Judge.

David F. Linn was convicted of mayhem, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Harl, for appellant. E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Jas. T. Blair, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

GANTT, P. J. On the 25th day of November, 1907, the grand jury of Buchanan county returned an indictment charging the defendant, David F. Linn, and another, with the crime of mayhem. On the same date defendant waived formal arraignment, and entered his plea of not guilty. A change of venue from the regular judge was taken, and Hon. A. W. Lincoln of the Greene county criminal court was called in to try the case. A jury was impaneled and sworn, and by their verdict assessed defendant's punishment at 15 years in the penitentiary. Appellant's codefendant was acquitted.

On January 29, 1908, defendant filed his motion for a new trial. This and a motion in arrest were overruled, and judgment and sentence rendered on the verdict, and defendant appealed to this court. By successive orders the time for filing bill of exceptions was extended until the 1st day of November, 1908, term of court. No bill was filed in time, but on December 23, 1908, court and counsel collaborated in an effort to construct an entry which would retroact and close the gap between the 1st day of the November and the 1st day of the March, 1909, term. No bill of exceptions, however, was ever filed; no further entries with reference to the subject appearing. On a separate page appears the court's signature to the customary recital with which it is the practice to close bills of exceptions, but this is the sole particular in which the transcript certified as a "transcript of the files and record entries" intimates that a bill of exceptions was filed.

The indictment was drawn under section 1864, Rev. St. 1890 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1285), and is a sufficient charge of mayhem. State v. Nerzinger, 119 S. W. 379; Neblett v. State, While there is a paper indicating that it is the closing of a bill of exceptions, in fact none of the testimony has been preserved, and none of the so-called exceptions appear in the transcript, and hence we have only the record proper before us for review, and, no error having occurred therein, the judgment is affirmed.

WITNESSES (§ 297*)—EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES—PRIVILEGE.

Under Const. U. S. Amend. 5, and Const. Mo. art. 2, § 23 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 158), providing that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to testify against himself, a witness before a grand jury is not compelled to answer questions as to whether he had made a bet on a horse race with a person named, or had given him money to be placed on such a race, or made him the custodian of any such bet, where the witness states that he cannot answer such questions without incriminating himself.

Tony Gauss brings habeas corpus proceedings against Louis Nolte. Petition granted.

T. J. Rowe, T. J. Rowe, Jr., and Henry Rowe, for petitioner. S. G. Jones, Circuit Atty., and F. G. Ferris, Asst. Circuit Atty., for respondent.

GANTT, P. J. The petitioner by this proceeding seeks to be discharged from imprisonment and the custody of the jailer of the city of St. Louis. It appears from the record that the petitioner was committed for contempt by the circuit court of the city of St. Louis for refusing to answer certain questions propounded to him by the grand jury of said city on the 27th day of September, 1909. It appears that in August, 1909, petitioner was arrested for making a wager on a horse race, and on September 30, 1909, he was summoned before the grand jury of the city of St. Louis, and was asked the following questions: "I want to ask you again, Mr. Gauss, on the day that you were arrested, which was some time in August, this year, had you, just prior to your arrest, made or placed a bet with Steve Pensa, at his place of business on Washington avenue, upon the result of a horse race? Q. Did you ever give Steve Pensa, or any other person in his place of business, any money to be placed upon a horse race to be run at any place within the state of Missouri, or without the state? Q. Have you, at any time within the last three years, made Steve Pensa the custodian of any bet upon the result of a horse race?" The petitioner refused to answer these questions because by so doing he might incriminate himself. Whereupon his refusal was reported to the judge of division No. 10 of the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, who ordered him to answer said questions, and upon his refusal to do so committed him to the jail of the city of St. Louis until such time as he would answer said questions.

The petitioner insists that he is entitled to be discharged from said imprisonment, because the effect of the said judgment and order was to violate section 23 of article 2 of the Constitution of this state (Ann. St. 1906, p. 158), which provides "that no person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal cause," and because said commitment is in violation of that part of the fifth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which says: "Nor shall any person be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." In State v. Young, 119 Mo. 495, loc. cit. 520, 24 S. W. 1038, 1045, it was said by this court: "The Constitution means more than the protection of the accused on his final trial when his rights are scrupulously guarded by the courts. It as clearly protects him from being forced to testify against himself in any and all preliminary investigation, whether before the coroner, grand jury, or the justice on his preliminary examination. The immunity afforded him by the Constitution is broad enough to protect him against self-incrimination before any tribunal in any proceeding." Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110; Cullen v. Commonwealth, 24 Grat. (Va.) 624; State ex rel. v. Hardware Company, 109 Mo. 118, 18 S. W. 1125, 15 L. R. A. 676. Learned counsel for the state insists, however, that it is the province of the court to judge whether any direct answer to the question that may be proposed will furnish evidence against the witness. If such answer may disclose a fact which forms the necessary and essential link in the chain of testimony, which would be sufficient to convict him of any crime, he is not bound to answer it, so as to furnish matter for that conviction; but if the question propounded does not disclose upon its face that it will have such tendency, and the witness fails to clearly show to the court how it will have such effect, he may be punished for contempt after he refuses to answer after being directed to do so by the court; and their contention is that the petitioner was not entitled to invoke the protection of the Constitution against answering these questions for the reason, as they say, that it is not, under this act of 1907 (page 223) against book making, and pool selling, nor any other law, made a crime for a person to make or place a bet on a horse race, or to make any other person the custodian of a bet upon the result of a horse race. This court, in Ex parte Arnot Carter, 186 Mo., loc. cit. 614, 66 S. W. 544, 57 L. R. A. 654, said: "It is reasonable construction of the constitutional provision that the witness is protected from being compelled to disclose the circumstances of his offense, or the sources from which evidence of its commission, or of its connection with it, may be obtained, or make effectual for his conviction, without using his answers as direct admissions against him."

Chief Justice Marshall, when engaged in the trial of Aaron Burr (1 Burr's Trial, 244, 25 Fed. Cas. 40, No. 14,692e), said: "If the question be of such description that an answer to it may or may not criminate the witness, according to the purport of that answer, it must rest with himself, who alone can tell what it would be, to answer the question or not. If, in such a case, he say, upon his oath, that his answer would incriminate himself, the court can demand no other testimony of the fact. * * * According to their statement (the counsel for the United States), a witness can never refuse to answer any question, unless that answer, unconnected with other testimony, would be sufficient to convict him of crime. This would be rendering the rule almost perfectly worthless. Many links frequently compose that chain of testimony which is necessary to convict any individual of a crime. It appears to the court to be the true sense of the rule that no witness is compellable to furnish any one of them against himself. It is certainly not only a possible, but a probable, case that a witness, by disclosing a certain fact, may complete the testimony against himself, and to every effectual purpose accuse himself as entirely as he would by stating every circumstance which would be required for his conviction. That fact of itself might be unavailing; but all other facts without it would be insufficient. While that remains concealed within his own bosom, he is safe; but draw it from thence, and he is exposed to a prosecution. The rule which declares that no man is compellable to accuse himself would most obviously be infringed, by compelling a witness to disclose a fact of this description. What testimony may be possessed, or is attainable, against any individual, the court can never know. It would seem, then, that the court ought never to compel a witness to give an answer, which would disclose a fact that would form a necessary and essential part of a crime, which is punishable by the laws."

Learned counsel for the state seem to conclude that the only possible prosecution that could grow out of an affirmative answer to the questions propounded to the petitioner in this case by the grand jury would be one for betting on a horse race; but the witness did not limit his reason to any particular offense, but stated that to answer the question would incriminate him. For aught that the court knew, the state may have been in possession of sufficient other evidence to have convicted the petitioner of some other crime if only it could fix upon him that he was present at Pensa's place at a given time, and then and there placed a bet with Pensa upon the result of a horse race, or gave Pensa money at that time to be placed upon a horse race. The meaning of this constitutional provision has time and again been held not to be merely a provision that a person shall not be compelled to testify in a then existing case against himself, but that he shall not be compelled, when acting as a witness in any investigation, to give testimony which may tend to show that he himself has committed a crime; and this court has approved a doctrine, announced by Chief Justice Marshall, that, if the question be of such description that an answer to it may or may not incriminate the witness, it must rest with himself, who alone can tell what it would be to answer the question or not. And if, in such case, he say upon his oath that his answer would incriminate himself, the court can demand no other testimony of the fact. This rule, we think, is entirely consistent with the doctrine generally held that where the court can say, as a matter of law, that it is impossible that a witness would incriminate himself by answering a question one way or the other, then the court can require an answer; but we think the question propounded in this case is not such a question, but one which the witness had the right to decline to answer, if, in his opinion, it would incriminate him. To hold that he must have explained all of the other testimony in the case, which would be sufficient to convict him, by an answer to this question, would render the rule entirely worthless. The language of the court in People v. Mather, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 252, 21 Am. Dec. 122, is, we think, very persuasive. Said the court: "When the disclosures he may make can be used against him to prosecute him for a criminal offense or to charge him with penalties or forfeitures, he may stop answering before he arrives at the question, the answer of which may show practically his moral turpitude. The witness knows what the court does not know, and what he cannot communicate without being a self-accuser, and is the judge of the effect of his answer, and if it proves a link in the chain of testimony, which is sufficient to convict him, he is protected by law from answering the question. If there be a series of questions, the answer to all of which would establish his criminality, the party cannot pick out a particular one, and say, if that be put, the answer will not criminate him. If it is one step having a tendency to criminate him, he is not compelled to answer." In State ex rel. v. Simmons Hardware Com- pany, 109 Mo. 118, 18 S. W. 1125, 15 L. R. A. 676, Judge Barclay, speaking for this court, said: "It is a reasonable construction of the constitutional provision that the witness is protected from being compelled to disclose the circumstances of his offense, the source from which, or the means by which, evidence of its commission or of its connection with it may be obtained or made effectual for his conviction without using his answers as direct testimony against him."

In our opinion, the petitioner having testified that he could not answer the questions without incriminating himself, and it not being entirely plain that his answers might not lead to a prosecution of himself, we think the circuit court erred in committing him for contempt in refusing to answer, and he is therefore entitled to be discharged from his imprisonment, and it is so ordered.

David Eichel brings habeas corpus proceedings against Louis Nolte. Petition granted.

T. J. Rowe, T. J. Rowe, Jr., and Henry Rowe, for petitioner. S. G. Jones, Circuit Atty., and F. G. Ferris, Asst. Circuit Atty., for respondent.

GANTT, P. J. The petitioner was committed to the jail of the city of St. Louis for contempt of court in refusing to answer a certain question before the grand jury of said city. He was brought before the judge of division No. 10 of the circuit court, and having been ordered to answer the question, and having again refused to do so, was committed to the custody of the jailer until he should answer said question. Thereupon he sued out a writ of habeas corpus in this court.

The question which he refused to answer was the following: "Did you ever make any bet with any person other than one Steve Pensa upon the result of a horse race to be run anywhere in this state, or without the state, at his place of business on Washington avenue?" The petitioner answered that he could not answer this question without incriminating himself, and the question now presented is whether he was guilty of pertinaciously refusing to answer a lawful question. While counsel for the state has endeavored to draw a distinction between the facts of this case and that of Ex parte Gauss, Petitioner (which has been heard and the opinion handed down at this sitting of the court) 122 S. W. 741, we have been unable to make any distinction in the principle which should govern in such a case. We think the witness was entitled to refuse to answer the question after he had disclosed under oath to the court that he could not do so without accusing himself of a crime.

For the reason given in Ex parte Gauss, supra, we think the commitment was wrongful, and, accordingly, the prisoner is discharged.

CORCORAN v. WABASH R. CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
Nov. 1, 1909.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 411*)—INJURY TO ANIMALS ON TRACK—FAILURE TO FENCE.

An action against a railroad company for injury to animals on its unfenced right of way in rural territory, under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 945), requiring railroads to fence their rights of way through uninclosed lands, and section 2867 (page 1649), giving an action for animals killed or injured by railroad cars without proof of negligence, not to apply where the accident occurred on a portion of the road inclosed by a lawful fence, must be bottomed on the omission of the railroad to inclose its track at a place where the law contemplates that it should be inclosed, an inclosure necessarily consisting of lawful fences on each side of the track and of lawful wing fences and cattle guards at the ends of the inclosure, and the intent was not to require a fence on one side of the track at places where it was impracticable to inclose the track, and hence no cause of action exists thereunder, based upon the mere failure of a railroad to inclose a tract of land it owns on one side of the track.

2. RAILROADS (§ 411*)—INJURY TO ANIMALS ON TRACK—BASIS OF LIABILITY.

It is the point at which stock injured by a railroad train enters the right of way that determines the liability or nonliability of the railroad under the statute, and, in the absence of other proof, the place on the track where the animals were injured will be taken as marking the point of entry.

4. RAILROADS (§ 446*)—CATTLE GUARDS—PLACE OF INSTALLATION—MENACE TO OPERATIVES—QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

Whether a cattle guard at a given point outside the limits of a town, but near a station, would be a menace to the safety of train operatives in operating trains at the station, is an issue of law where but one inference may be drawn from the evidence, but where essential facts are in dispute, or where the inference from conceded facts must be a subject of difference among reasonable minds, the question is for the jury.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Nodaway County; W. C. Ellison, Judge.

Action by John W. Corcoran against the Wabash Railroad Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff, which was set aside and a new trial granted, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. A. Cummins and P. L. Growney, for appellant. James L. Minnis and Shinabargar, Blagg & Ellison, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. A stallion and two fillies owned by plaintiff strayed to defendant's railroad track at a point near the incorporated town of Clyde and were killed by a passing train. Plaintiff brought this suit to recover single damages for the killing of the animals. The cause was tried to a jury resulting in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Afterward the court sustained defendant's motion for a new trial on the grounds: "First. That the petition is insufficient to sustain a judgment. Second. That while there was evidence tending to prove the recitals of alleged facts in plaintiff's instructions numbered 1, 2, and 3, each of said instructions erroneously declare the law applicable to the alleged facts therein recited." Dissatisfied with this ruling, plaintiff brought the case here by appeal. The evidence is not in the record before us, and the facts we must consider in the determination of the questions of law argued in the briefs are to be gleaned from the petition and the instructions mentioned in the order granting a new trial.

The petition is as follows: "Plaintiff for his second cause of action states that on May 13, 1906, defendant was, and now is, a corporation running and operating a railroad through Nodaway county, state of Missouri, and by and through a station designated Clyde on its said railroad in said county. That adjoining its depot grounds at said station to the west thereof and on the north side of its track or roadbed, defendant maintained a scope of right of way 150 feet by 200 feet, unused by defendant and unfenced, forming a pocket or cul-de-sac, and at date herein complained of was overgrown with succulent grasses, inviting to live stock, to graze thereon. That on said date, in said county, in close proximity to said station of Clyde, plaintiff was the owner of certain live stock, to wit, one iron gray stallion, two years old, and two mare colts one year old, commonly called 'fillies'; said stallion of the value of $300, and said fillies of the value of $100, each. That on said date said stallion and fillies strayed and went in and upon the right of way grounds and railroad track of defendant, at a point immediately west of said station on the 150 by 200 feet of unfenced right of way described as aforesaid, and from thence onto the unfenced track of defendant at said point and place, and were struck by a locomotive and train of cars, then and there run and operated by defendant, killing one of said fillies outright, and so injuring and maiming the said stallion that he died soon thereafter, and did cripple and injure the other filly so as to render her wholly worthless and valueless to plaintiff. That defendant might have fenced, and should have fenced, the space of right of way aforesaid so as to prevent horses and other live stock from going thereon, but had negligently failed to do so. That said portion of said right of way and track was not within the limits of any incorporated or platted town or village and not within necessary switch limits. That wholly by reason of said right of way being unfenced, said stock (stallion and fillies) did go thereon, and from thence onto the track of defendant, and were injured and killed as aforesaid, to plaintiff's damage in the value of the animals aforesaid, to wit, the sum of $500. Wherefore he prays judgment for said sum of $500 and costs of suit therefor."

The three instructions given at the request of plaintiff and afterward pronounced to be erroneous in the order granting a new trial are as follows: "(1) The court instructs the jury that, though you may believe from the evidence that plaintiff's horses were killed or injured within the switch limits of defendant's station of Clyde, and that said switch limits were not in excess of such reasonable length as to enable defendant to conveniently carry on its business at said station, yet you are instructed that, beyond the necessary station or depot grounds at said station, the defendant was required to fence its right of way on the sides of its lines of track so near to its line of track as not to interfere with its employes or endanger their safety in making switches and handling its trains, provided same is outside of the corporate limits of said station and not intersected by any platted streets or public crossing; and if you find from the evidence that, beyond the limits of reasonably necessary depot or station ground at said

station, and outside of the corporate line or limit, there extended a strip of right of way about 150 feet wide parallel with said track on the north side thereof to the west switch limit or cattle guard a distance of about 200 feet, and that the same, including the track, was unfenced and open, and said strip was not reasonably necessary for use in connection with its switch limits as aforesaid, and that said strip of right of way formed an inviting pasturage for stock on May 13, 1906, and that plaintiff's horses entered on such unfenced right of way at said date and from thence onto defendant's track, and were killed and injured, you will find for plaintiff and assess his damages at the value of the animals killed or injured, as you may believe from the evidence they were reasonably worth at the time, the ones killed at their reasonable value, and the one injured to the extent of the injury, not to exceed $300 for the stallion and $100 for the filly killed, and not to exceed $50 for the filly injured, not to exceed the total value of $450. (2) The court instructs the jury that defendant is not required to fence its track within reasonable switch limits at a station on its line of railroad, or to fence its right of way so close to said tracks as to endanger the safety of its employes in handling its trains and transacting the lawful business of the company at a station, but is not permitted to leave open right of way ground on the sides of its track that are unused and unnecessary for the purposes aforesaid; and if you find from the evidence in this case that defendant did leave unfenced right of way ground at the point complained of that was not used or necessary for the purposes aforesaid, and that solely by reason of such unfenced right of way grounds plaintiff's horses strayed or entered thereon and from thence onto defendant's track and were killed or injured, you will find for plaintiff in such sum as you may find from the evidence to be the value of such horses as were killed and any injured to the extent of the injury, not to exceed the total value of $450. (3) The court instructs the jury that defendant is not permitted to leave more unfenced track and right of way at its station than is reasonably necessary for depot and station ground for the convenient transaction of business between the public and said railroad, in the reception and discharge of freight and passengers at said point, and not more unfenced right of way and track for switch limits than is reasonably necessary for unimpeded use by its employes in making switches and handling its trains, and if you find from the evidence that defendant left more ground at said station outside of that used or needed for the purposes aforesaid, and outside of the corporate limits of said town, and that solely by reason of such unfenced ground and track plaintiff's horses strayed or entered thereon and were killed and injured by an engine or train of defendant operated thereon by defendant, you will find for plaintiff and assess his damages at the value of the animals killed, as you may find from the evidence, and damage to any animal injured to the extent of such injury, not to exceed the total value of $450."

From the facts stated in the petition and submitted in the instructions, as well as from the statements in the briefs of counsel, we assume that the subjoined plat copied from the brief of defendant's counsel correctly represents the locality in question:

The material facts collected from the sources of information to which we have referred thus may be stated: The railroad runs in an easterly and westerly direction through Clyde, an incorporated town. A station, station grounds, and switch tracks are maintained in the limits of the town; but the western apex of the switch tracks is about 200 feet west of the limits and is in rural territory. Immediately west of the switch apex is a cattle guard and wing fences, and from thence west, the track is inclosed. East of the cattle guard the track is not inclosed. Defendant owns a square of land just north of its track and west of the corporation line. This track is 200 feet east and west by 150 feet north and south. Defendant extended its wing fence to the northwest corner of this square to a junction with a fence from that point east to the corporation line. No fence is on the eastern or southern boundary lines. It is alleged that the animals of plaintiff strayed into the pocket thus formed, attracted by the grass and vegetation, and, no barrier being interposed, went onto the railroad track and were killed.

It will be observed that the gravamen of the cause of action pleaded in the petition and submitted in the instructions is not the failure of the defendant to inclose its track "where the same passes through, along, or adjoining inclosed or cultivated fields or uninclosed lands," but consists entirely of the omission of defendant to inclose a tract of land it owned on one side of the track. Under the theory of the cause of action asserted, it may have been impracticable, and therefore not required of defendant, to place the eastern end of its track inclosure at the point where the town limit bisects the railroad tracks, instead of placing it at a point 200 feet west of that line, and still defendant would be required by law to inclose its land on the north side of the track which intervened between the corporation line and the nearest practicable point for the inclosure of the track. We regard this theory as being without support either in the statute or common law. Where, as in the case before us, the place where the stock entered the right of way is in rural territory, the cause of action to be maintainable (sections 1105 and 2867, Rev. St. 1899 [pages 945, 1649, Ann. St. 1906]) must be bottomed on the omission of the defendant to inclose its track at a place where the law contemplates it should be inclosed. Now an inclosure necessarily consists of lawful fences on each side of the track and of lawful wing fences and cattle guards at the ends of the inclosure. There cannot be an inclosure if only one side of the track be fenced, and manifestly the Legislature in the statute dealing with the subject had no thought of requiring a fence to be built on one side of the track at places where it was impracticable to inclose the track. Such a practice, instead of affording protection to trains and live stock, would lay traps to catch and hold straying animals and put them in the way of passing trains. The law recognizes no such cause of action as that pleaded in the petition and submitted in the instructions, and the action of the learned trial judge in granting a new trial on the grounds stated was proper.

Notwithstanding the petition fails, as we have shown, to state a cause of action, we think it may be amended to state a good cause predicated on the absence of an inclosure where the track should have been inclosed. Though it appears from the facts before us that the switch tracks extended no further into rural territory than was necessary to the proper transaction of defendant's business at Clyde, the proof adduced by plaintiff might present that question as one of fact for the jury to solve; and, should it develop as a matter of law that the switch tracks as maintained were proper and necessary, the further issue might be raised by evidence that the east end of the track inclosure could have been placed as far east as the corporation line without endangering the lives and safety of train operatives. Such issue is to be treated as one of law for the court or as one of fact for the jury by the application of the following rules: It is the point at which the stock enters the right of way that determines the liability or nonliability in such cases. Kirkpatrick v. Railroad, 120 Mo. App. 418, 96 S. W. 1036; Snider v. Railway, 73 Mo. 465; Acord v. Railway, 113 Mo. App. 84, 87 S. W. 537. And in the absence of other proof the place on the track where the animals were killed will be taken as marking the point of entry on the right of way. No liability attaches to a railroad company for failure to put a cattle guard in a place where to do so would endanger the lives or limbs of its employees. Gilpin v. Railway, 197 Mo. 319, 94 S. W. 869; Bridges v. Railway, 132 Mo. App. 576, 112 S. W. 37; Edle v. Railroad, 133 Mo. App. 9, 112 S. W. 993. The issue of whether a cattle guard placed at a given point outside the limits of a town, but near a station, would be a menace to the safety of train operatives in performing necessary work in the operation of trains and cars, etc., at the station, is one of law for the court in cases where but one inference may be drawn from the evidence; but "where essential facts are in dispute, or where the inference to be drawn from conceded facts might be a subject of difference among reasonable minds, the question of whether a necessity did exist for the tracks to be uninclosed at the point in controversy should be sent to the jury as an issue of fact." Edle v. Railroad, supra.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment must be affirmed. All concur.

ENGLISH v. ROBERTS, JOHNSON &
RAND SHOE CO.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 18, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 30, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 149*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE IN GIVING ORDERS.

The master, superior servant, or vice principal may give such orders about the work as are essential to induce a prompt and attentive discharge of the duties imposed on the servant without breaching the obligation to exercise ordinary care for the safety of the servant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 291; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 149*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE IN GIVING ORDERS.

An order to hurry up the work is not negligence unless it tends to subject the servant to a hazard not ordinarily incident to the work, or operates to excite or disconcert him, so that he is unable to exercise due care for his own safety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 291; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 190*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ORDERS OF SUPERIOR SERVANT.

Where a servant is injured through the negligence of a superior servant in exercising the authority of the master by negligently directing the performance of a dangerous task, the master is prima facie liable for the injury if the injured servant was in the exercise of due care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 439; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 188*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF SUPERIOR SERVANT.

Where a servant is injured through the negligence of a superior servant in the performance of a duty of the master, a ground of action against the master is prima facie shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 436; Dec. Dig. § 188.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 216*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF SUPERIOR SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Where two servants are working together in the performance of a common task, and the inferior servant is injured by the negligence of the superior in the performance of an act incident to the common employment, the master is not liable, as the risk ordinarily incident to the employment was assumed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 570; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 103*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—DUTY OF MASTER AS TO PLACE FOR WORK.

It is an absolute duty of a master which he cannot delegate to furnish his employé a reasonably safe place in which to work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 175; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 188*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ACTS OF SUPERIOR SERVANT.

It is the character of the act complained of, and not the rank of the servant, which determines the master's liability for the acts of a servant occupying the dual capacity of fellow and also superior servant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 436; Dec. Dig. § 188.*]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 103*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—DELEGATION OF DUTIES.

Where the master intrusts to another a duty which he cannot delegate, and such other neglects the same and a servant is injured, the master is liable, irrespective of the character of the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 175; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

9. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 103*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—DELEGATION OF DUTY.

A master cannot delegate to another, so as to relieve himself from liability for a breach thereof, the duty to furnish a reasonably safe place to work, reasonably safe tools and appliances, reasonable rules governing the work, competent fellow servants, and proper direction and control of the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 175; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

10. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 190*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ACTS OF SUPERIOR AND INFERIOR SERVANT.

A servant injured by the acts of another occupying the dual capacity of superior and fellow servant cannot recover against the master without showing that the injury resulted from an act in the exercise of the authority of the master distinct from any manual act in the common employment, unless such act operated as a breach of a nondelegable duty of the master.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 450; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

11. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 190*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ACT OF SUPERIOR SERVANT.

The act of one occupying the dual capacity of superior and fellow servant in prematurely starting a machine at which both he and plaintiff worked, resulting in plaintiff's injury, was in the capacity of fellow servant for which the master is not liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 450; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Jesse A. McDonald, Judge.

Action for personal injuries by Arthur E. English, by his next friend, against the Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Merritt U. Hayden, for appellant. C. W. Rutledge, for respondent.

NORTON, J. This is a suit for damages accrued to plaintiff on account of personal injuries alleged to have been inflicted upon him through defendant's negligence while plaintiff was engaged in feeding a heeling machine in defendant's shoe factory. The plaintiff recovered, and the defendant appeals.

It appears that the plaintiff was a boy about 15 years of age. He had had several months' experience in feeding and operating a heeling machine in the defendant's and other shoe factories; that is, he had worked for a number of months with a machine identical with the one on which he was injured, and was entirely familiar with its construction and mode of operation. He applied to the defendant's foreman for a position a day or two before he was injured, and, upon being given employment, was assigned to feed a machine in charge of and being operated by one Thein. Thein, too, was a boy of about the same age as the plaintiff. He had been engaged for a considerable period in operating the machine referred to, and was entirely familiar therewith. There is no controversy in the case as to the competency of Thein. The evidence tends to prove that Thein, if not a vice principal, was at least a superior servant of the defendant, and as such had charge of the particular heeling machine mentioned, and was given authority to direct the plaintiff where to work and how to work, etc. The plaintiff was instructed to do what Thein bade him to do, and to assist him in and about the operation of the machine in Thein's charge. The machine was an appliance for the purpose of affixing heels to shoes in the course of manufacture. It was the duty of Thein to operate this machine by placing his foot upon a pedal, thereby causing a plunger to strike the heel of the shoe resting in the machine, and thus drive the nails essential to affix the heel thereto. It was the plaintiff's duty to insert the heel into the machine with his hand. It appears that the two operated the machine together, each performing manual labor concurrently to that end. While the plaintiff was in the act of inserting a shoe heel for the purpose mentioned, Thein, the superior servant, placed his foot upon the pedal, and caused the plunger or hammer to descend upon the heel, which act resulted in crushing plaintiff's fingers between the heel and the sole of the shoe. A short time prior to receiving his injuries the plaintiff informed Thein that he had been feeding a heeling machine at another factory, and that they only heeled about 18 cases of shoes per day where he had been working; that he was accustomed to feed a machine in heeling 18 cases a day. Thein replied substantially that the plaintiff would be required to work faster than that, as they were accustomed to heeling and turning out 60 cases of shoes per day in defendant's factory. About five minutes before the plaintiff received his injury, Thein instructed him to hurry up with the work, to the end that they might finish their task, and go out and walk around a while. This alleged order to hurry up, according to the plaintiff's testimony, was given about five minutes before the plaintiff was injured, and he says that he was hurrying with the work when he received the injury mentioned. The suit predicates, in part, upon the order of Thein to plaintiff to hurry up with the work and in part upon the fact that Thein negligently operated the machine at a rate of speed much faster than the plaintiff was accustomed to attend the same. The court refused to peremptorily direct a verdict for the defendant, and referred the case to the jury under instructions permitting a recovery for plaintiff if the jury found that he was exercising due care on his part, and that he received his injury through the negligence of Thein in ordering him to hurry up five minutes before his injury and in operating the machine more rapidly than the plaintiff was accustomed to work.

It is argued here on the part of the defendant that the evidence conclusively shows plaintiff received his injuries through the negligence of Thein in his capacity as a fellow servant of the plaintiff by the manual act of starting the machine while the plaintiff was inserting a shoe heel, and that there is no evidence tending to show that plaintiff received his injury through the negligence of Thein, the superior servant, in respect of any of the absolute duties of the master. It is said, too, that, conceding Thein to have been a vice principal, the mere order to hurry given five minutes before in no manner breached the obligation of the master to exercise ordinary care for the plaintiff's safety. Now, as a general proposition, the master, the superior servant or vice principal, may give such usual and customary orders in and about the business he is prosecuting and within the scope of the employment as are essential to induce a prompt and attentive discharge of the duties imposed by the contract of service, without breaching the obligation to exercise ordinary care for the safety of the servant. A mere order to hurry or to be quick in the performance of labor in and of itself is not negligence. Such, generally speaking, is a usual and proper exercise of authority. Coyne v. U. P. R. R. Co., 133 U. S. 370, 10 Sup. Ct. 382, 33 L. Ed. 651; Ruchinsky v. French, 168 Mass. 68, 46 N. E. 417; Herold v. Pfister, 92 Wis. 417, 66 N. W. 355. Indeed, on this question the authorities go to the effect that a mere order to hurry up with the task is not negligence unless it tends to subject the party to an extraordinary hazard; that is, a hazard not ordinarily incident to the employment or operates to excite, distract, or disconcert the employé to such an extent as renders him unable to exercise due care for his own safety. Sambos v. Cleveland, Cincinnati, etc., R. R. Co., 134 Mo. App. 460-467, 114 S. W. 567; Saller v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 130 Mo. App. 712, 109 S. W. 794. Now, there is not a word in the testimony in this case to the effect that the plaintiff became in the least excited, distracted, or disconcerted on account of the order referred to, and certainly nothing appears to the effect that his injury was received through any extraordinary hazard in the operation of the machine. Indeed, we are unable to perceive any causal connection whatever between the order to hurry with the work and the injury which plaintiff received five minutes thereafter. In truth, the injury befell him because his movement lagged, and not because he was hurrying. Had he inserted the heels in the machine as fast as his co-employé, Thein, operated the same, the injury would not have occurred. Now, the rule of liability announced in the plaintiff's first instruction is to the effect that the defendant should be held to respond for the injury if Thein directed the operation of the machine and operated said machine faster than the jury might believe from the evidence was safe to the plaintiff in performing his work. This rule seems to couple the fact that Thein, the superior servant, directed the operation of the machine, and the fact that he operated the machine faster than plaintiff was accustomed to work, as equivalent elements of liability. We do not so understand the law with respect to those injuries which befall one servant through the negligent act of another servant occupying a dual status of employment and collaborating with the injured party. There can be no doubt that the dual capacity doctrine obtains in this state, and it is true that, if one servant is injured through the negligence of a superior servant in exercising the authority of the master by negligently directing the performance of a dangerous task, a prima facie ground of liability may be established, provided the injured party exercised due care for his own safety. Fogarty v. St. Louis Transfer Co., 180 Mo. 490, 79 S. W. 664; Bane v. Irwin, 172 Mo. 306, 72 S. W. 522; Rigsby v. Oil Well Supply Co., 115 Mo. App. 297, 91 S. W. 460. And it is true, too, that where one servant is injured through the negligence of a superior servant or vice principal in the performance of a manual act which inheres with the authority of the master a ground of liability is prima facie shown. Such was the case of Fogarty v. Transfer Co., supra. However, where two persons in the employ of a common master are working together in the performance of a common task, as was the plaintiff and Thein here, and the inferior servant is injured through the negligence of the superior servant, in the performance of a mere manual act of service incident to the common employment, then no liability for the hurt obtains against the master, for the reason such is a risk ordinarily incident to the employment, and, as such, is assumed. Such a risk is assumed in contemplation of law as within the contract of service. Bane v. Irwin, 172 Mo. 306, 317, 72 S. W. 522. Indeed, it is true there are cases in this state which indicate that, when a servant is injured by the negligent manual act of a vice principal engaged in jointly performing labors with an inferior servant incident to the common employment, the master may be liable therefor. Such are the cases of Dayharsh v. H. & St. Jo. R. R., 108 Mo. 576, 15 S. W. 554, 23 Am. St. Rep. 900, and Hollweg v. Bell Tel. Co., 195 Mo. 149, 93 S. W. 262. Some of the language employed in the opinions in these cases purports the doctrine of the master's liability broader than it obtains. However, when these cases are carefully scrutinized, they may be reconciled with the established law on the subject by reference to the doctrine of a reasonably safe place to work; for it is one of the absolute duties of a master, which he may not delegate, to furnish his servant a reasonably safe place in which to perform his labor.

In Fogarty v. St. Louis Transfer Co., su- pra, the Supreme Court pointed out the fact that, although the language employed in the opinion in the Dayharsh Case purported a broader ground of liability, the judgment of the court therein should be hereafter treated as resting on the doctrine of the safe place. The same may be said with respect to Hollweg v. Bell Tel. Co., as was recently pointed out by Judge Goode in McIntyre v. Tebbetts (Mo. App.) 120 S. W. 621. Notwithstanding what was said in those cases, the doctrine is firmly established in this state with respect to the master's liability asserted on the grounds of negligence in a servant occupying a dual capacity to the effect that it is the character of the act, and not the rank of the servant, which determines the liability or nonliability in a given instance. Fogarty v. Transfer Co., 180 Mo. 490, 79 S. W. 664; Bane v. Irwin, 172 Mo. 306, 72 S. W. 522; Rigsby v. Oil Well Supply Co., 115 Mo. App. 297, 91 S. W. 460; McIntyre v. Tebbetts (Mo. App.) 120 S. W. 621; Baltimore & Ohio R. R. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 37 L. Ed. 772. Of course, this doctrine is limited in its application to those cases where there is no breach of a positive duty on the part of the master. There are certain nondelegable duties which the master owes to the servant, and, if the servant is injured through the failure of the master to exercise ordinary care with respect to these duties, then liability obtains therefor, even though the neglect was that of a servant; that is to say, if the master intrusts the performance of any one or more of his nondelegable and nonassignable duties to a servant and such servant neglects the same, or through negligent performance of such nondelegable duties injures another, liability obtains against the master therefor irrespective of the character of the act; this for the reason that the duty is a positive personal and continuing duty resting upon the master which he may not shift or escape by delegation to another. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 37 L. Ed. 772. See, also, a most instructive and lucid article on the subject by Judge John F. Dillon in 24 Am. Law Review, 175. Among these nondelegable duties of the master is the duty to furnish the servant a reasonably safe place in which to work and reasonably safe appliances with which to work; good and reasonable rules to govern the employment, competent fellow servants, and, it seems, too, in Missouri, although not generally, the doctrine obtains to the effect that it is a personal nondelegable duty of the master to direct and control the work, and therefore, if he gives one servant power and authority to direct other servants where to work and how to work and what to do in and about the work, the master thus commits to such servant the performance of an absolute nondelegable duty which rests upon himself. Miller v. Railroad, 109 Mo. 357, 19 S. W. 53, 32 Am. St. Rep. 673; Schroeder v. C. & A. R. R. Co., 108 Mo. 322, 18 S. W. 1094, 18 L. R. A. 827. Therefore the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this case only on its appearing that he received his injury as a result of the negligence of Thein, the superior servant, in exercising the authority of the master, separate and apart from the performance of a manual act of the common employment, unless such manual act operated a breach of a nondelegable duty of the master. Now, there is no claim whatever to the effect that the place in which the parties were working was unsafe or that the appliance was not reasonably sufficient for the purpose, or that Thein was an incompetent servant. In other words, there is no pretense that any nondelegable duty of the master was breached by Thein other than that he gave a negligent order to hurry which, operating together with his manual act of placing his foot upon the pedal and starting the machine before the plaintiff had removed his hand therefrom, after inserting a heel, resulted in the injury. As to the order complained of, it is obviously not a negligent one, for nothing whatever appears to indicate that it either disconcerted, distracted, or excited the plaintiff, or that its performance entailed upon him an extraordinary hazard; that is, a hazard not ordinarily incident to the service. In truth, the order amounted to no more than a remark by Thein to his companion to hurry up so that they might complete the task and go out and walk around a while. It therefore results that the plaintiff received his injury, not as the result of a negligent order, but, on the contrary, as a result of the manual act of Thein in placing his foot upon the pedal and prematurely starting the machine. This was an act of common service performed in his capacity as collaborator with the plaintiff, and, as such, was a risk ordinarily incident to the employment which the plaintiff assumed upon entering therein. The order referred to, even if negligent, was certainly not the proximate cause of the injury. In truth, we do not perceive that it contributed remotely to the plaintiff's injury.

The judgment should be reversed. All concur.

PHOENIX DUSTER & MFG. CO. v. LANDAU GROCERY CO.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals, Missouri. Nov. 17, 1909.)

SALES (§§ 359, 383*)—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action to recover the price of goods sold and delivered and to recover profits lost by reason of defendant's refusal to take a part of the goods ordered held sufficient to sustain the judgment for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1056-1059, 1097; Dec. Dig. §§ 359, 383*.]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Matt G. Reynolds, Judge.

Action by the Phoenix Duster & Manufacturing Company against the Landau Grocery Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nagel & Kirby, for appellant. Lee W. Grant and P. B. Kennedy, for respondent.

GOODE, J. Plaintiff is engaged in the manufacture of dusters, of its own patent, of manilla paper attached to handles either of wire or wood. The president of plaintiff, R. N. Fickett, called at defendant's place of business to sell defendant, which is engaged in the wholesale grocery business in St. Louis, some of the dusters. He sold defendant 100 gross; 75 gross being shipped at once; but, before the other 25 gross were shipped, defendant countermanded the order on the ground the sale had been induced by false representations in these regards: First, that the dusters were a novel article and never had been sold before in St. Louis, and, second, "were good sellers." Some correspondence ensued between the parties regarding the transaction, but, having failed to settle the dispute amicably, plaintiff instituted the present action in two counts, seeking in the first to recover $937.50, the purchase price of 75 gross of dusters actually shipped to defendant and received by it, and $250, the profit on the 25 gross which were not delivered. As instituted it was an action at law, but the answer filed by defendant was treated by both parties as converting the cause into one in the nature of a suit in equity. We will not say whether, in our opinion, the answer had this effect, being merely one to rescind the contract, but will treat the case as the parties did. The answer admitted the purchase of the dusters, and set up the contract was induced by fraudulent representations as stated, asked the court to decree its rescission, and tendered to plaintiff payment for some seven gross of dusters defendant had disposed of before it ascertained the alleged fraud in the sale. On the testimony the court entered judgment for plaintiff, finding against the defense of fraud. Defendant appealed, and contends the judgment was against the weight of the evidence, and, as the suit is in equity, this court ought to review the evidence and reverse it.

The main point of fact at issue was whether Fickett represented the dusters with wood handles, as all purchased by defendant were, were a novelty and never had been sold in St. Louis, as he asserted, or whether he represented that neither those with wood handles nor those with wire handles had been sold in the St. Louis market. It is conceded dusters of this pattern with wood handles had not been sold before in St. Louis, and that those with wire handles had for seven or eight years; and defendant contends, in substance, the latter species had proved so unsatisfactory that those with wood handles did not find a good market. Fickett testified the only representation he made regarding the novelty of the articles in St. Louis was that the dusters with wood handles never had been sold there. He testified, further, he distinctly told Landau, the purchasing agent of defendant, the wire handled dusters had been "variously" sold in St. Louis. On the other hand, the testimony for defendant tends to prove Fickett's representation related to both dusters, and that, when he made it, he had both kinds in his hands, was striking them against a chair to show how they worked, and while he did this said the dusters were a novelty, meaning both of them, and never had been sold before in St. Louis. Defendant wished to obtain an exclusive market in St. Louis, and bargained for this for four months. The contract between the parties, written on a blank form, with insertions and interlinings in pencil, is set forth: "This contract made this 7th day of Oct., 1907, between Phoenix Duster & Manufacturing Co., of Atlanta, Ga., party of the first part, and Landau Grocery Co., of * * * party of the second part, witness: Said party of the first part has this day sold party of the second part 100 gross of their 5½ oz. Phoenix patent dusters, at $12.50 per gross, f. o. b. Atlanta, Ga. The said party of the first part agreeing to sell or retail but no other wholesale houses in said St. Louis for 4 months from this date (sic). Party of the second part agrees in view of the concessions made in this contract to push sale of said dusters, and should they fail to do so then said party of the first part is privileged to sell other firms. It is distinctly understood that there are no other conditions, verbal or otherwise, not named in this contract. No agent or other person is authorized to make any statements or agreements that will affect this contract unless they are embodied in it in writing. It is further understood that this contract is accepted by party of the first part contingent to strikes, fires or inability to get stock. 75 Gro. once Bal. when order out. 1 Gro. Grats. [Signed] Landau Grocery Co., per L. Landau., Prest. Phoenix Duster & Manufacturing Co."

If the number of witnesses must control the decision of the point, the finding of the court below as to the representation made by Fickett would be against the weight of the evidence; for two or three witnesses testified the facts were as contended by defendant, whereas Fickett's testimony that his statement related only to the wood-handled dusters, and he advised defendant the wire-handled dusters "had been previously sold in St. Louis," was uncorroborated by any other witness. But it is to be remembered the witnesses who testified for defendant were its officials and employees, and we are not so convinced their narrative of the affair was correct as to overrule the court below, who had the advantage of seeing the manner of the witnesses on the stand. The discreeter policy in this cause is to defer to the judgment of the chancellor, as we find indications in the record that he weighed the testimony rightly. The impression we derive is that defendant became dissatisfied because it had overbought, as a panic came on in October, 1907, and money was scarce; the St. Louis banks refusing to cash checks. Defendant did not ask rescission of the contract when it first discovered it had been imposed on, as it now alleges, but in a letter dated October 30, 1907, one week after the contract was made, said, in effect, that had defendant known of the prior sales in St. Louis it would not have bought so many. This portion of the letter reads as follows: "Under the circumstances, we cannot use this large quantity. We would not have bought this large quantity, but he insisted that we had the exclusive sale here and same was never introduced here before, and same would be sold in thirty days. Had he told us the truth, we would have taken five gross, and we are willing to accept that many, and we hold the balance subject to your order. If this is satisfactory to you, we will remit for the five gross, and we will keep the balance here and you can dispose of them and forward them from here wherever you placed them, as we will not accept them since your representative had the audacity to come to our office and lie to us the way he did." It was not until November 12th defendant declared the contract rescinded. On consideration of the whole evidence, we will leave the decision as the court below rendered it.

The representation, regarding the duster being a good seller, was not proved to have been either false or fraudulent. Defendant sold six or seven gross of the dusters in a week, and at the same rate of sale would have disposed of about all it bought during the four months it was granted an exclusive market.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

4. BROKERS (§ 86*)—EVIDENCE OF AGENCY.

Evidence, in an action by plaintiff to recover of defendant one-half of the amount of a commission received by defendant for making sale of a quantity of steel rails, held to sustain a finding by the jury that there was an agreement between the parties to divide commissions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

5. BROKERS (§ 86*)—EVIDENCE OF RELATION—QUESTION OF FACT.

Evidence, in an action by plaintiff to recover of defendant one-half of the commission received by defendant for making sale of a quantity of steel rails, held to sustain a finding that plaintiff, who was president of a corporation, acted in the particular transaction for himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 237*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, on the preponderance of evidence, that plaintiff was required to establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence, that if the evidence was evenly balanced, and the jury were in doubt as to its preponderance, or if it favored the defendant, their verdict should be for the defendant, sufficiently covered the subject.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Matt G. Reynolds, Judge.

Action by Alexander H. Handlan against Joseph G. Miller. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is a suit brought by plaintiff, Handlan, against the defendant, Miller. The petition declares on an alleged contract to the effect that, if plaintiff would furnish defendant with information which would lead to the sale by or through defendant of steel rails and angle bars, defendant would divide with plaintiff equally whatever commission defendant made through such sale. Averring that plaintiff gave the information, and that defendant made the sale and had been paid a commission of $1,587.44 thereon, plaintiff sues for one-half thereof, averring demand and refusal to pay any part. The answer was a general denial. Trial before a court and jury.

There was testimony to the effect that plaintiff was connected with and an officer of a company known as the "Handlan-Buck Manufacturing Company," he being the president thereof, and while defendant's testimony was to the effect that plaintiff was not acting in this matter for himself, but for his corporation, and had so been understood by the defendant, plaintiff's testimony is to the effect that in the transaction involved he was acting for himself, and not for his corporation. There was testimony to the effect that plaintiff had sent an agent to the office of defendant to see whether an arrangement looking to a division of commissions on sales, made to any party whose name would be given to defendant's representative by plaintiff, could be made. Defendant himself was absent from the office at the time. There is no pretense of testimony that the arrangement was made with defendant direct, but whatever arrangement was made was made with a Mr. Irwin, a salesman for the defendant. There is testimony to the effect: That plaintiff's agent went to the office of defendant and stated the general object of his call to the man who was in charge of it. This man referred him to Mr. Irwin as the proper person to see about the matter in the absence of defendant. That plaintiff's agent or messenger saw Mr. Irwin there in defendant's place of business, and, telling him generally what he had come for, asked him to call on him and take up the matter with Mr. Handlan. That Irwin, accordingly, went to the office of the Handlan-Buck Manufacturing Company, and, seeing the agent who had before called on him, was referred by him to Mr. Handlan, who was sitting in the office, and that Irwin told him he had come there to take up the matter concerning which he had been approached, told Handlan that his (Handlan's) agent, Mr. Roubidoux, had referred him to him (Handlan) to figure on some rails with him that Handlan had an inquiry or customer for, and that Irwin said that if they—that is, defendant's firm—were not dealing with the same party, or did not have an inquiry from the same party, they would divide their commission with him (Handlan). That Handlan asked him if he would divide his commissions on these rails, provided they were not bidding on them, and he said they certainly would. Whereupon Handlan told Irwin what road it was that wanted the rails, and Irwin told Handlan that they—that is, defendant's firm—were not bidding with that railroad on these rails. The testimony on part of plaintiff further tended to show that, after the name of the party to whom a sale was ultimately made was given to defendant's agent by the plaintiff, the sale was made to that party by defendant, plaintiff co-operating, and that the commission received thereon by defendant was $1,587.44; one-half of which amount, $793.72, being claimed as plaintiff's share of the commission. The defendant himself and his agent, Irwin, were examined as witnesses for plaintiff, and while the witness Irwin gave testimony tending to show that he had held himself out as agent for defendant to plaintiff, and had acted for defendant in the matter, and had cards printed on which he described himself as "manager," defendant himself testified that Irwin had no such authority, had not told him of any arrangement as to commissions being made on his behalf with plaintiff, and that he (defendant) supposed that he was dealing in the transaction with plaintiff's corporation, and not with plaintiff as an individual. It was in evidence, however, that Irwin had authority to solicit for defendant, was in charge of his business when defendant was absent, and was interested in commissions earned in Miller's business, being on a guaranteed salary. Defendant himself had no part in this transaction, so far as making any arrangement with plaintiff was concerned; that all being done by Irwin. He admitted, however, that Irwin had called on Handlan with his knowledge and consent, to take up the matter with Handlan, but testified that, while Irwin had told him of his arrangement with Handlan, he had not told him of the part relating to a division of the commission.

The only evidence introduced on behalf of defendant, apart from what was developed in cross-examination of defendant and Irwin, who were placed on the stand by plaintiff, consisted of correspondence concerning the matter of the sale of the material to the customer designated by plaintiff. None of the letters relate or refer to the question of commissions. It all appears to have been on the letter heads of the corporation when written to defendant, and to have been signed in the name of the corporation, and to have been on the letter heads of the corporation, and, on behalf of the defendant, all of the correspondence appears to have been addressed to the corporation. Plaintiff, however, testifies that, after he made the arrangement, he turned the matter of filling the contract, and all attention and correspondence about it, over to his corporation, but that the arrangement or agreement he claimed to have made about division of commissions was his own private matter, in which the corporation had no interest.

The two points in controversy in the evidence were: First, as to whether an arrangement of the kind testified to had been made by an authorized representative of the defendant; second, whether the disputed arrangement was for plaintiff individually, or for his corporation. It is furthermore testified by defendant that he had never known of any arrangement being claimed as existing for a division of commissions, until some months after the close of the transaction, when he then repudiated it and denied liability to the plaintiff. Defendant asked an instruction for nonsuit, which was overruled.

The court of its own motion gave the following instructions: "The court instructs the jury, if you find and believe from the evidence that the defendant, through or by his duly qualified agent, entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to divide any commissions which defendant might receive by reason of the sale of angle bars and steel rails, provided plaintiff furnished information to defendant relative to a railroad which was in the market to purchase steel rails and angle bars, and provided that you further find that defendant did succeed in selling the railroad, the name of which was at the time given to defendant's agent by plaintiff, then your verdict will be for plaintiff for such sum as you find and believe from the evidence to be one-half of the commissions which defendant did receive by reason of such sale. The court instructs the jury that you will, in considering of your verdict, disregard all testimony in the case except that which either tends to prove or disprove the alleged verbal contract on the part of the defendant by which it is claimed that defendant agreed to divide his commissions with the plaintiff. The issue involved is whether or not there was or was not such a contract between plaintiff and defendant." It also gave the usual instruction as to the number of jurors necessary to concur in a verdict. Defendant excepted to the giving of these instructions.

At the instance of defendant, the court gave to the jury six instructions. The first told the jury that plaintiff was required to establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence before he could recover; that if he had not done so, and the evidence was evenly balanced, and the jury was in doubt as to its preponderance, or if the preponderance is in favor of defendant, then the verdict should be for defendant. In the second instruction the jury were told, in effect, that before plaintiff can recover he must prove either direct authority given to the person claimed to have made the arrangement, or that, knowing of the acts of the party, defendant had ratified them, or that the defendant knowingly and voluntarily permitted such person to hold himself out to the world as his agent for the purpose of doing either the act in question or similar acts pertaining to the same subject-matter. By the third instruction the jury were told that, even if plaintiff proves, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the relation of principal and agent existed between the defendant and Irwin on the date of the alleged transaction, the mere fact that Irwin was in the employ of defendant is not, in itself, sufficient to establish the agency; but they must believe and find from the evidence that the contract was made by Irwin, and that the defendant directed or authorized him to make it, or that he had ratified and approved it after it was made, or that in making it Irwin was acting within the apparent "scope of his authority" as such agent as defined by the instruction. The fourth instruction was on the credibility of the witnesses, and is in the usual form. The fifth instruction told the jury that if they found from the evidence that plaintiff entered into the contract for the benefit of or in the name of the Handlan-Buck Manufacturing Company, and that with his knowledge and consent that company assumed the contract, and through its agents and officers "led the defendant to believe that his dealings in regard to the subject-matter of the contract were with the Handlan-Buck Manufacturing Company, then the plaintiff cannot recover in this action." The sixth instruction told the jury that in law a corporation is an artificial person, entirely distinct from any of its officers or stockholders, and that no stockholder or officer has the right to institute a suit in his own name upon a cause of action belonging to the corporation; that in this action plaintiff is suing in his own name, and that even if they believe from the evidence that the contract was entered into between defendant and the Handlan-Buck Manufacturing Company, and that the defendant was indebted to the Handlan-Buck Manufacturing Company upon the contract, then plaintiff cannot recover. The defendant also prayed several instructions which were refused; two of them specifically and with great particularity defining what "burden of proof" meant, another defining what "apparent scope of authority" meant, and two others for nonsuit. Defendant duly excepted to the refusal of these instructions. Plaintiff asked three instructions. The court refused to give them, substituting one of its own, heretofore set out, therefor.

There was a verdict for plaintiff for $793.74, and judgment accordingly. A motion for new trial was duly filed and overruled, and exceptions duly saved to that refusal, as well as to various rulings adverse to defendant. Defendant thereupon appealed.

Fordyce, Holliday & White, for appellant.
John S. Leahy, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). We have set out the facts with some particularity, out of deference to the very earnest argument and full and able brief of counsel for appellant, as that counsel insists there was no evidence in the case justifying its submission to the jury. We cannot agree to this. The statement shows that there was evidence, contradictory to be sure, but some substantial evidence, in support of the allegations in the petition, to which petition a mere general denial was interposed by way of answer. We do not say that a general denial did not properly put the case at issue. It did, and was sufficient; but it put the affirmations of the petition in issue, those affirmations were supported by evidence, and, while that evidence was conflicting, it rested with the court and jury to weigh it. The jury found for plaintiff, and the court held that there was evidence to support that finding, and that the finding was not against the weight of the evidence.

That concludes us on that phase of the case; we holding, on reading all the testimony, that it cannot be said there was an entire absence of substantial evidence to sustain the verdict. We must so hold, to reverse on that ground. This disposes of two of the thirteen propositions made by counsel for defendant.

The remaining propositions cover the law of agency and proof thereof; as to the latter, it being argued that proof of agency is not established by the declarations of the agent to third parties. There is no doubt of the correctness of this proposition. Agency must be established aliunde the agent's declarations. In the case at bar, we think this was done. Irwin was a general soliciting agent for defendant. Defendant had knowledge of the fact that the deal by which he was making the sale came to his house through Irwin's arrangement with plaintiff. He received the benefit of the arrangement. It is clear from Irwin's own testimony that plaintiff gave him the name of the prospective customer with whom the deal was made, and, while Irwin's testimony tends to deny the arrangement as to division of commission, the testimony of plaintiff and his agent, who first took up the matter with defendant's agents, is emphatic and clear that division of commission was the very foundation of the transaction. The jury evidently took this view of it. Their verdict is conclusive. Whether plaintiff was acting for himself or his corporation was a question of fact, on which there was diversity of evidence. The jury found for plaintiff on that issue.

It is urged that the conduct of counsel for plaintiff, in the presence of the jury, was improper. Much allowance must be made to counsel, and their conduct must be very improper to cause their clients to suffer from it. Reading the record here, we do not find this assigned error sustained.

Error is particularly assigned to the refusal of the court to instruct with more particularity than it did as to the preponderance of evidence. We think the instruction given was ample on this branch of the case. The instructions given by the court, taken as a whole, and in connection with that given by the court at its own motion, fairly and correctly put the law of the case to the jury and surely in a very favorable light for defendant.

Error is assigned to the expression, in the instruction given by the court at its own motion, to the effect that the jury, in considering its verdict, will "disregard all testimony in the case except that which either tends to prove or disprove the alleged verbal contract on the part of the defendant by which it is claimed that defendant agreed to divide his commissions with the plaintiff." This has some tendency to submit the question of relevancy of testimony to the jury, which should not be done; but considering it in connection with the rulings made by the court at the trial, when evidence was offered, and in connection with this instruction as a whole, as well as in connection with the instructions given for defendant, we are not prepared to say that the use of this phrase is reversible error.

Nor, reviewing the whole case, do we discover error in the exclusion or admission of testimony so serious as to work to the manifest prejudice of defendant. The issues as made by the pleadings are the ones, and the only ones, to be tried. Evidence must be kept within those issues, and, examining the record, we think that is what, and is all, the learned trial judge endeavored to do.

Finding no reversible error, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed. All concur.

WEWNER v. GRAY.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 17, 1900.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1082*)—OBJECTIONS IN TRIAL COURT—NECESSITY—OBJECTION TO ACCOUNT.

An objection that the account, required by Rev. St. 1899, § 3852 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2135), providing that formal pleadings are not required in justice courts, but that plaintiff shall file with the justice a statement of the account upon which the suit is founded, etc., was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction, must be taken previous to or during the trial, and comes too late on appeal.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Virgil Rule, Judge.

Action by William Wegner against Stella Gray. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edw. N. Robinson and Stephen Rogers, for appellant. Jos. P. Vastine, for respondent.

GOODE, J. Action begun before a justice of the peace on an account for plastering and papering at No. 511 Clark avenue. The case proceeded to the circuit court, where plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appealed.

Plaintiff is a dealer in wall paper at No. 618 South Fourth street, St. Louis, and defendant resides at No. 521 Clark avenue. He testified she sent for him about September 1, 1905, and said she wanted some work done at No. 511 Clark avenue. Plaintiff went there with her and a man named Gus Stieglitz, who intended to run a restaurant in the first story of the house, No. 511. Plaintiff testified defendant showed him what work they (defendant and Stieglitz) wanted done. He gave her an estimate of what the work would cost. She selected the paper, and made suggestions about it, and was at the building every day during the progress of the work. An attempt was made to prove the work was ordered by Stieglitz, and he was the person to whom plaintiff extended credit, afterwards charging the bill to defendant, because she was financially responsible, whereas Stieglitz was not. Suffice to say, as to this defense, the evidence was conflicting, but warranted a finding that the work was done by plaintiff for defendant and on her credit.

The case was tried and disposed of by the court without a jury, and no declarations of law were asked. It is now contended the account was insufficient under the statutes to give the court jurisdiction. Rev. St. 1899, § 3852 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2135). There is nothing in this point worthy of examination, except as regards the name of the creditor in the account, which, as made out and sued on, named defendant as debtor to the American Wall Paper Company, of No. 618 South Fourth street, but also had the name of Wegner above that of the company. Perhaps the account as filed before the justice had better be set forth:

W. Wegner. St. Louis, Mo. Dec. 10, 1907.
Miss Stella Gray, to American Wall Paper Company, Dr.

618 South Fourth Street.

Kinloch, Central 4610.

Terms Cash.	Estimates Furnished.
To plastering as per agreement at 511
Clark Ave.....	$18 00
To papering 6 rooms, hall, toilet, and store at 511 Clark Ave.....	58 00
	$76 00

Counsel for defendant attempts to explain the account being in the name of the American Wall Paper Company from some testimony plaintiff gave that, about three years before the trial, he had bought out a man named Woerhli—had "bought everything, accounts and all, from Woerhli." We do not see how that circumstance explains the matter; for there is no proof Woerhli, more than Wegner, did business as the American Wall Paper Company. Moreover, plaintiff testified he was by himself when the work in controversy was done. The account describes the American Wall Paper Company as of 618 South Fourth street, which was plaintiff's place of business; and, though he did not testify he did business under the style of the American Wall Paper Company, from the form in which the account was made out, it is likely he did.

The question is whether the judgment is to be reversed because of the form in which the account was filed as a statement. If the sufficiency of the account had been challenged by an objection to the reception of evidence, or in any other proper mode, likely it would have been held insufficient as a statement of a cause of action, in failing to disclose a demand in favor of plaintiff. datz, 28 Mo. App. 210; Smith v. Zimmermann, 29 Mo. App. 249. Nothing of the kind was done, but the case was tried on the single issue of whether plaintiff, Wegner, had extended credit to defendant or to Stiglitz. The account stated defendant in the face, and the proper time to object to it was previous to or during the trial. As this was not done, we must hold the error now assigned is not well taken. The exact point was decided in New England, etc., Co. v. Brown, 59 Mo. App. 461, 466. See, too, Trustees Warrenton v. Schwengerdt, 8 Mo. App. 572; Hammons v. Renfrow, 84 Mo. 332; Fowler & Wild v. Williams, 62 Mo. 403.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

BANK OF HOUSTON v. DAY et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals, Missouri. Nov. 16, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 30, 1909.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 60*)—SIGNATURE OF BLANK NOTE—RIGHT OF HOLDER.

One signing a blank negotiable paper is bound by the law merchant, where the paper is completed by the holder, he having implied authority to fill in the blanks essential to complete the instrument, but the original payee, or a subsequent holder, with notice, has implied authority to fill in the true date only, or such date as is contemplated by the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 86; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 34*)—UNDATED NOTES—VALIDITY.

An undated promissory note may be valid under either the law merchant or under the negotiable instrument law (Laws 1905, p. 243 [Ann. St. 1906, § 463-1]).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 368*)—BONA FIDE HOLDER—DEFENSES.

Where an improper date is inserted in a note by the payee of a note issued without a date, and the note is thereafter negotiated to a bona fide holder, without notice, the latter may enforce the note notwithstanding the improper date.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 950; Dec. Dig. § 368.*]

4. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 60*)—BLANK—RIGHT OF ORIGINAL HOLDER TO FILL IN BLANKS—"ISSUE."

Under Negotiable Instrument Law 1905, pp. 244, 245, 246, 285, §§ 6, 12, 13, 17, 191 (Ann. St. 1906, §§ 463-6, 463-12, 463-13, 463-17, 463-191), declaring that the validity of a note is not affected by the fact that it is undated, that the instrument is not invalidated because antedated or postdated, providing that, where an instrument expressed to be payable at a fixed date after date is issued undated, any holder may insert therein the true date of issue, but the insertion of a wrong date does not avoid the instrument in the hands of a subsequent holder in due course, and defining the word "issue" to be the first delivery of the instrument complete in form to the one taking it as a holder, the original holder of an undated accommodation note may not postdate the note and bind the accommodation indorsers; and, where the original holder postdates the note, he cannot recover from the accommodation indorsers, and this is especially true when the accommodation indorsers notified the holder when delivering the undated note that they would not lend their credit to a further extension of the debt.

5. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 368*)—DEFENSES AGAINST BONA FIDE PURCHASER—INSERTION OF DATE—HOLDER IN DUE COURSE.

To make one a holder of commercial paper in due course within Negotiable Instrument Law 1905, p. 245, § 13 (Ann. St. 1906, § 463-13), providing that the insertion of a wrong date in a note issued undated does not avoid the instrument in the hands of a subsequent holder in due course, the element of good faith with respect to the same is essential.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Texas County.

Action by the Bank of Houston against John R. Day and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lamar & Lamar and W. E. Barton, for appellant. Dooley & Salyer, for respondents.

NORTON, J. This is a suit on a promissory note against the defendants, who were accommodation indorsers thereon. The finding and judgment were for the defendants, and the plaintiff prosecutes the appeal.

It appears that Keel & Hoover, the makers of the note, were partners doing business under the firm name of Keel & Hoover. About April 27, 1905, Keel & Hoover executed their promissory note to one J. R. Day for the sum of $550, payable four months after date, with interest from maturity, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. This note was indorsed by the payee J. R. Day, and by J. T. Chilton, C. H. Baumgardner, J. C. McCaskill, Levi McCaskill, and Jack McCaskill for the accommodation of the makers, Keel & Hoover. Being so indorsed, it was negotiated to the plaintiff Bank of Houston. The discount thereon was paid in advance for the four-month period, specified in the note. The note fell due on August 30, 1905, and the makers, Keel & Hoover, not being prepared to pay the same, forwarded to the Bank of Houston their check for $14.65 to cover the discount on the amount of $550 for an additional four months' period. They also executed a new note—that is, the note in suit, payable four months after date—to the order of J. R. Day for the sum of $550, and requested Mr. Day to procure the indorsement of the several other parties as accommodation indorsers. J. R. Day, the payee, himself indorsed the note, and devoted something near three months' time in procuring the indorsements of the several other parties. The same persons as before indorsed this second note at the request of Day for the accommodation of the makers. The names indorsed on the back thereof besides J. R. Day are J. T. Chilton, C. H. Baumgardner, J. C. McCaskill, Levi

McCaskill, and Jack McCaskill. This note was filled out properly in every respect other than the date thereof which was blank; that is, a blank for the day and month were unfilled. The cashier of the plaintiff bank afterwards inserted the date December 30th therein, and, so dated, the note in suit is in the following form: "Houston, Missouri, Dec. 30, 1905. Four months after date, for value received, we promise to pay to the order of J. R. Day, $550.00, Five Hundred and Fifty 00-100 Dollars, at the Bank of Houston with interest from maturity at the rate of eight per cent. per annum. Keel & Hoover, by V. M. Keel." The note is indorsed as follows, on the back: "J. R. Day. J. T. Chilton. C. H. Baumgardner. J. C. McCaskill. Levi McCaskill. Jack McCaskill. All of the parties having signed or indorsed the note, the same was intrusted to Jack McCaskill, one of the indorsers thereon, for the purpose of negotiation to the plaintiff bank in liquidation of the prior note dated April 27, 1905, executed by the identical parties. Jack McCaskill delivered the note to the plaintiff bank about the 1st of December, 1905, without any date of execution mentioned therein; that is to say, with the date line blank. Jack McCaskill gave testimony to the effect that at the time he delivered the note in suit to the plaintiff bank he instructed Mr. Davidson, the cashier, to insert the date August 30, 1905 (that is, to date the present note on the date which the prior note fell due), and further to notify Keel & Hoover, the makers, who resided in the Indian Territory, that the other accommodation indorsers and himself would decline to lend their credit to any further renewal thereof in the future, and that the makers would be expected to pay the note on maturity. Mr. Davidson, the cashier of the plaintiff bank, gave testimony to the effect that Jack McCaskill, upon delivering the note to him, about December 1st, said he and the other indorsers would decline to indorse for the makers again, and that, when the note matured, the bank should call on the makers for payment, but he insisted that McCaskill gave no instructions whatever touching the matter of the date to be inserted in the note; that is to say, that he delivered the note to him as cashier of the bank with the date line blank and without any instructions whatever as to what date should be inserted therein. It will be remembered that about August 30, 1905, when the first note fell due, Keel & Hoover, the makers thereof, had paid to the plaintiff bank $14.65 as discount on the amount involved for the period of an additional four months. This being true, the discount was paid until December 30, 1905, or about one month after the note, which is the subject of the present controversy, was delivered to the bank; that is to say, about three months of the discount theretofore paid on August 30th had been earned prior to the delivery of the note in suit to the bank on December 1, 1905.

This being the state of the case at the time the bank received the undated note in suit, the cashier of the bank, Mr. Davidson, wrote the makers, Keel & Hoover, in the Indian Territory, as the discount theretofore paid was practically earned before the present note had been negotiated, it would be well for them to send the bank an additional remittance to cover the discount for four months in the future; that is, for the period of four months after December 30, 1905, on which date the prior discount period would expire. Keel & Hoover complied with this request and remitted to the plaintiff bank their check for $14.65 to cover the discount on the amount of money involved for an additional four months; that is to say, to cover the discount from December 30, 1905, to April 30, 1906. Upon receiving this second remittance from Keel & Hoover, the cashier of the plaintiff bank, Mr. Davidson, inserted the date December 30th in the blank space on the date line of the note which had been delivered to him by McCaskill about the 1st of December. As thus dated, the note would fall due about April 30, 1906, and concurrent with the period for which discount had been paid by the last remittance from the makers. It is conceded throughout the case that the date December 30th was inserted in the note by the cashier without any express authority whatever from either the makers or the indorsers thereon; and, if the testimony of Jack McCaskill is to be believed, it was inserted contrary to his instructions on delivery of the note to the bank. McCaskill testified that he instructed the cashier at the time of delivering the note to insert the date August 30, 1905. Be this as it may, the plaintiff bank does not rely upon any express authority from any one to date the note December 30, 1905, but, on the contrary, relies upon the fact that the note was undated, and that there was a blank left therein for date at the time of its delivery and the implied authority which, in the absence of express instructions, is assured by the law to the holder of a note, to fill in such blanks as are necessary to either make the obligation complete or render it an appropriate instrument as commercial paper.

In this connection, it will be remembered that the cashier, Mr. Davidson, testified that no express directions whatever were given by McCaskill as to when the note should be dated. The accommodation indorsers only defended the action, and the finding and judgment of the court were for them to the effect that in the absence of directions from McCaskill who delivered the note to the cashier of the bank, or an agreement of some kind to that effect, the cashier was without authority to postdate the note December 30, 1905; in other words, the instructions go to the effect that in the absence of a direction from or agreement with McCaskill, who delivered the note to the bank, which might be regarded as express authority therefor, there is no authority implied by law authorizing the cashier to postdate the note December 30, 1905. The question, therefore, presented for decision is the soundness of the proposition of law announced in these instructions.

The defendant invokes section 13 and other provisions of our negotiable instrument law approved April 10, 1905. See Laws Mo. 1905, p. 243 (Ann. St. 1906, § 463-1), in support of the instructions. It is provided substantially in section 13 of the act referred to that, where an instrument expressed to be payable at a fixed period after date is issued undated, any holder may insert therein the true date of issue, and the same shall be payable accordingly. A further provision of that section is to the effect that the insertion of a wrong date does not avoid the instrument in the hands of a subsequent holder in due course, but, as to him, the date so inserted is to be regarded as the true date. Now, it is argued by the defendant on this section that the holder of an undated instrument is authorized only to insert the true date of issue thereon, and that, while it is not so provided in express terms, it is at least implied that, although the insertion of a wrong date does not avoid the instrument in the hands of a subsequent holder in due course, it does avoid it in the hands of the holder who inserts a date other than the true date, and is thus possessed of full knowledge of the fact that the date is not the true one. Section 196 of our new negotiable instrument law provides that for any case not provided for in this act the rules of the law merchant shall govern. In view of this provision, it is argued by the plaintiff that section 13, referred to, does not expressly inhibit the insertion of a date other than the true one, and that, therefore, we are remitted to the principles of the law merchant for a rule to ascertain and determine the controversy. In this connection it is argued that parties often loan their mercantile credit to others by signing their names to blank papers to be afterwards filed as bills of exchange or promissory notes written over their signatures as drawers or makers or by signing their names in the appropriate manner to indicate that they desire to bind themselves as acceptors or indorsers of the instrument which it is contemplated to complete upon such blank papers. And it is a settled principle of the commercial law that, when such instruments are afterwards completed by the holder of such blanks to whom they are loaned, such parties become as absolutely bound as if they had signed them after their terms were written out, and, further, that the presence of their names upon blanks purports an authority granted to the holder to fill them for any sum and for any terms as to time, place, and conditions of payment. Indeed, in his admirable work on Negotiable Instruments (5th Ed.) § 143, Mr. Daniels says: "The authority implied by a signature to a blank, and the credit granted, are so extensive that the party so signing will be bound to a bona fide transferee in due course, though the holder was only authorized to use it for one purpose, and has perverted it to another, though authorized to be filled for a certain amount and a greater is inserted; and though the authority was limited to time which has expired, or was only to be exercised upon a condition which has not happened." It will be observed, however, that the doctrine thus stated by the learned author relates more particularly to a bona fide transferee in due course. Now, a promissory note may be a valid instrument either under the law merchant or under the negotiable instrument law even though it is undated. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 255, and section 6, Negotiable Instrument Law April 10, 1905. It is true there is an implied authority under the law merchant in the holder of a note signed in blank and delivered to another, for the purpose of negotiation, to fill in such blanks as are essential to make it a complete instrument for the purpose intended. National Bank of Paris v. Nickell, 84 Mo. App. 295; Daniels, Negotiable Instruments (5th Ed.) 144; Schooler v. Tilden, 71 Mo. 580; Ivory v. Michael, 33 Mo. 398; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 255 et seq. It not being essential to the validity of a promissory note that it shall express a date (that is, although a promissory note undated may nevertheless purport a valid obligation, the date of which may be inquired into and ascertained), we believe the implied authority touching the date may not be so broad and comprehensive as that pertaining to such blanks therein as are essential to rendering the instrument a complete obligation. Whatever authority there is in the law merchant for filling in the date of a note we believe rests more particularly upon the fact that it is essential to the free and uninterrupted negotiability of the instrument that it should be dated, and upon the presumption that all parties to a note intended for circulation obviously consented that a proper person to whom the same was intrusted for the purpose of raising money might fill the same with the proper date. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) and cases cited.

Now, there is no doubt where a note is issued without a date and an improper date is inserted therein by the payee and the note is thereafter negotiated to an innocent party or bona fide holder without notice that such bona fide holder may enforce the same notwithstanding the improper date. This follows for the reason that one who signs such an instrument furnishes the means of fraud, and is estopped to deny his liability thereon. Mitchell v. Culver, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 336; Frank v. Llienfeld, 33 Grat. (Va.) 377; Redlich v. Doll, 54 N. Y. 224, 13 Am. Rep. 573; Joyce, Defenses to Commercial Paper, § 22;

Daniels, Negotiable Instruments (5th Ed.) § 143; Androscooggin Bank v. Kimball, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 373. Be this as it may, the date of a negotiable instrument is important in many respects. Although it may be valid and enforceable without an expressed date, it is nevertheless an inconvenient instrument in the commercial world if undated and likely to produce much confusion and evil results. It would, indeed, be difficult to ascertain and determine the rights of the parties to an undated instrument in circulation expressing an obligation payable four months or six months after the date thereof. If no date appears, how is the bona fide innocent holder without knowledge of the date of issue to determine when the obligation is due and notice of dishonor should be given. These considerations would obviously authorize the payee or other proper person to insert the proper date as between the immediate parties. However, many reasons suggest themselves why the payee ought not to be allowed as between himself and the makers and indorsers, to insert an improper date, for by so doing he might materially increase the obligation to be paid. For instance, if a four-month note is issued, as was the one in suit, on the 1st of December, 1905, by antedating it December 1, 1904, the payee could, according to its face, increase the obligation a full year's interest, and at the same time render the note eight months past due at the time it was issued. On the other hand, if the payee is allowed to accept a note on the 1st of December, 1905, signed by several parties, as was this one, and postdate it to December 30, 1905, it may be that the makers and each of the indorsers thereof would die during the interim between the 1st of December and the 30th, the date of the note, and thus would be presented the anomaly of having a note dated the 30th of December, bearing genuine signatures of several gentlemen who are dead. It is no doubt true that a note issued bearing the month of its issue and the year, with a blank for the day of the month, may be enforced by a subsequent holder, although the day of the month is filled in by him without express authority therefor. Such was the case of Page v. Morrel, 3 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 433. In such a case it is obvious that the subsequent holder filling in the day of the month is not aware of the particular day on which the note was issued, for he knew nothing of its issue. The paper having come into his hands for value in due course, bearing date the month of June and the year in which it was issued, in the absence of any knowledge whatever as to the date of issue, authority was implied to him to insert any date during the month mentioned. However, that authority is not in point here for the reason that in that case the subsequent bona fide holder of the note had no knowledge as to what was the true date of the instrument; whereas, in the present controversy, the subsequent holder of the note (that is, the plaintiff bank), who, it may be said purchased it from Day, the payee, in fact an accommodation party only, knew the day and date of its issue, and, indeed, with such knowledge occupied the same position in respect of that matter as an original payee who knows the true date of issue; that is, the plaintiff bank knew that it acquired the note about the 1st of December, and not December 30th, for such was the date of issue under the facts in this case. Having this knowledge as between it and these accommodation indorsers, whom McCaskill represented when he delivered the note, it became the duty of the cashier of the bank to insert the date August 30, 1905, as instructed by McCaskill, if his testimony is to be believed. On the contrary, if no instructions whatever were given, then it became the duty of the bank to insert the true date of issue identically as though it were an original payee. Mr. Daniels says: "Any holder has a right to insert the true date; and, should he insert an improper date, the parties will still be bound to a bona fide holder for value and without notice of the impropriety"—thus implying, of course, that the holder who has notice of the facts may not enforce a note when other than the true date has been inserted. See Daniels, Negotiable Instruments (5th Ed.) § 143. And we believe the following cases cited in the note support the text: Redlich v. Doll, 54 N. Y. 234, 238, 13 Am. Rep. 577; Frank v. Lillienfeld, 33 Grat. (Va.) 373; Overton v. Matthews, 35 Ark. 147, 154; Page v. Morrel, 3 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 433. In the same section Mr. Daniels also says that a party, having notice that other than the true date has been inserted, cannot recover on the note unless he acquired it from one who took it bona fide without notice. This doctrine is supported by the case of Emmons v. Meeker, 55 Ind. 329. See, also, Goodman v. Simonds, 19 Mo. 107; 2 Cyc. 163; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 255. If it be true, as declared in the authority above cited, that a subsequent holder having notice of the fact that an improper date has been inserted by the original payee cannot recover on the note, it is certainly true that although this plaintiff, a subsequent holder of the note from Day, the payee, may not recover against these indorsers after having actually itself with full knowledge of the date of issue dated the note otherwise than in accordance with the true date. The case is distinguishable from some in the books, inasmuch as the element of good faith does not obtain in favor of the subsequent holder here as it does in some other cases, for the reason that in the particular instance now in judgment the present holder actually knew the date of issue, and instead of acting upon the implied authority to insert the true date, if, as the cashier said, no instructions were given by McCaskill to antedate the note to August 30th, inserted the date which was untrue in every respect. When the matter is examined on principle touching the rights of these indorsers, it must be remembered that, if the note were not paid when due, they were entitled to notice of dishonor, at any rate, when the note fell due, four months after the date of issue, which was December 1, 1905; whereas, as the note was dated by the cashier, their rights were infringed upon in this respect, so that, instead of being entitled to notice of dishonor in the event of nonpayment about April 1, 1906, they did not receive such notice until 30 days thereafter in accordance with the tenor of the note bearing a false date.

After much careful reading and reflection on the subject, we believe as a general rule between the original parties to the instrument or subsequent holder with notice the original payee or such subsequent holder with notice has implied authority by virtue of the blank contained in the note only to fill in the true date or such a date as was directed or contemplated by the parties. Daniels, Negotiable Instruments (5th Ed.) § 143a, 144; 2 Cyc. 163, 164; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 255; Overton v. Matthews, 35 Ark. 146, 37 Am. Rep. 9; Emmons v. Meeker, 55 Ind. 329. It is obvious that what has been said is in accord with the public policy of this state as declared in the new negotiable instrument law approved April 10, 1905. See Laws of 1905. And the note in suit is in all respects subject to that enactment. Section 6 of the act referred to declares that the validity of a negotiable instrument is not affected by the fact that it is not dated. Section 12 declares that the instrument is not invalid for the reason only that it is antedated or postdated, "provided this is not done for an illegal or fraudulent purpose. The person to whom an instrument so dated is delivered, acquires the title thereto as of the date of delivery." This section seems to contemplate instruments which are antedated or postdated by the parties in accordance with a mutual agreement to that effect, as is frequently done, and declares that they are not invalid because of such fact, provided no illegal or fraudulent purpose is intended. Section 13 of the act is as follows: "Where an instrument expressed to be payable at a fixed period after date is issued undated, or where the acceptance of an instrument payable at a fixed period after sight is undated, any holder may insert therein the true date of issue or acceptance, and the instrument shall be payable accordingly. The insertion of a wrong date does not avoid the instrument in the hands of a subsequent holder in due course, but, as to him, the date so inserted is to be regarded as the true date." It will be observed that this section authorizes the holder of an undated instrument to insert the true date of issue therein and makes the instrument payable accordingly. It provides, too, that the insertion of a wrong date does not avoid the instrument in the hands of a subsequent holder in due course, and, as to him, the date so inserted is to be regarded as the true date. This is in affirmance of the doctrine which obtains in the law merchant, and it implies, at least, that the insertion of a wrong date in an undated instrument by one having knowledge of the true date of issue would avoid the instrument. Such we understand to be the settled doctrine of the cases hereinbefore cited, expounding the principles of the law merchant; that is, that such amounts to an alteration. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 142. Now, for one to be a holder of commercial paper in due course, the element of good faith with respect to the same is essential. More v. Finger, 128 Cal. 313, 60 Pac. 933-935; Reese v. Bell, 138 Cal. xix, 71 Pac. 87-89. Therefore, the present plaintiff, having inserted an untrue date in the instrument when it was possessed of knowledge of the true date of issue, is not a subsequent holder in due course within the meaning of the statute. It is proper, too, to invite attention to section 17 of the negotiable instrument law. That section, in treating of the question as to when interest shall commence on undated instruments, provides that, where the instrument is not dated, it will be considered to be dated as of the time it was issued. Section 191 defines the word "issue" to be the first delivery of the instrument, complete in form, to a person who takes it as a holder. It therefore appears that the note in suit was issued about the 1st of December, 1905, when it was delivered as a completed obligation in form to the plaintiff bank as the holder, for it was never delivered to Day, the original payee; he being an accommodation party only. It will be observed that the thought runs throughout the various sections of the negotiable instrument act to the effect that the true date of issue of an undated instrument is the date which controls, and is the date which under the provisions of section 13 any party holding the same is authorized to insert. Although we have thus given attention to the arguments presented in the briefs, the court is nevertheless of the opinion that the case was properly decided on the admitted facts. It will be recalled Mr. Davidson, the plaintiff's cashier, admitted that Jack McCaskill said, when he delivered the note, the indorsers would not lend their credit for a further extension of the debt. The cashier's testimony in that respect is as follows: "Well, he did say that when the note matured that they would not sign for them any more; that they would have to call on them for payment."

The note on its face expressed an indebtedness due four months after date. This statement of McCaskill to the cashier regarding the intention and attitude of the indorsers was obviously a direction to the effect that the indorsers did not intend to lend their credit to a five months' obligation; that is, it amounted at least to a direction that they would not extend their credit for a period beyond four months after December 1st without the bank demanding payment from the makers at the expiration of that period.

The judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered. All concur.

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 190*)—ALLOWANCES TO SURVIVING WIFE—LIMITATIONS.

Rev. St. 1899, § 185 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 399), barring demands against an estate not presented in two years from the granting of letters of administration, does not apply to the demand of the widow for a cash allowance in lieu of provisions for one year's support, as authorized by sections 105, 106 (pages 372, 373).

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 190*)—ALLOWANCES TO SURVIVING WIFE—LIMITATIONS.

Though Rev. St. 1899, § 4273 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2349), barring actions unless commenced within five years, applies to the demand of a widow for a cash allowance in lieu of provisions for one year's support, limitations do not begin to run until letters of administration have been granted; and the widow, though entitled to take out letters, need not do so.

3. INSURANCE (§ 586*)—EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 46*)—ASSETS.

One having an undivided interest in a paid-up policy of another has a vested interest during the life of the insured, and the insurance money is an asset of his estate after insured's death and payment by insurer, though he died before insured.

A widow, ignorant of the fact that her deceased husband had an interest in a paid-up policy on the life of another, who died after the husband's death, is not guilty of laches barring her from recovering a cash allowance in lieu of provisions out of the money paid on the policy, especially where the estate of the deceased husband was not prejudiced by her delay of about nine years in demanding the allowance.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Matt G. Reynolds, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Charles R. Ulrici, deceased. Proceedings by Erika Johnston, the widow of the deceased, against William B. Thompson, administrator of the deceased, to recover a cash payment in lieu of an allowance for provisions for one year's support. From a judgment granting relief, administrator appeals. Affirmed.

Fred Armstrong, Jr., for appellant. Stephen Rogers, for respondent.

GOODE, J. This proceeding was begun in the probate court by plaintiff to recover $360 in cash out of the estate of Charles R. Ulrici, deceased, in lieu of an allowance of provisions for one year's support. Plaintiff, Erika Johnston, is the widow of said Charles Ulrici, and defendant, Thompson, is the administrator of his estate. Erika Johnston was married to the deceased in 1891, and lived with him in the city of St. Louis until 1898, when he died. She subsequently married a man named Johnston, and moved to Arkansas. Ulrici left no personal property whatever at his death, except his clothes, which he had bought with money advanced by plaintiff, but he was interested in a policy of insurance on the life of his father, a fact plaintiff was ignorant of at the time. This interest of the deceased was one-fourth of policy No. 172000, dated September 2, 1884, issued by the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, on the life of Rudolph W. Ulrici, being a paid-up policy for $3,112. Said Rudolph died March 4, 1907, whereby one-fourth of the policy, or $778, became payable to the estate of his son Charles R. Ulrici. Plaintiff claimed the right to have $360 in lieu of the provisions, or money substitute therefor, the statute would have allowed her out of her husband's estate if he had been possessed of property or money when he died. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 105, 106 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 372, 373). The court found plaintiff was entitled to $20 a month or $240 in lieu of such provisions, entered judgment in her favor for said sum, and defendant appealed, contending the demand was barred by limitation.

The statute cited as barring plaintiff's claim is the one which limits actions on a liability, other than a penalty or forfeiture, created by a statute, to five years. Rev. St. 1899, § 4273 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2349). The argument is that plaintiff's demand rests on a statute giving her a year's provisions, or, in lieu of same, a reasonable appropriation out of the assets of the estate, and this statutory liability of the estate, not being a penalty or forfeiture, falls within the limitation prescribed in the cited section. Allowing this reasoning to be sound, though we think its soundness dubious, the question comes up regarding when the statute began to run against plaintiff's demand. No administration was granted on her deceased husband's estate until April 2, 1907, or more than nine years after his death; and on June 12, 1907, shortly after administration was granted, plaintiff presented her demand. Commonly the statute limiting the presentation of demands for allowance against an estate does not begin to run until letters are granted, and bars ordinary demands in two years after the grant. Rev. St. 1899, § 185 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 399). But the two-years statute does not apply to a demand by a widow like the one in controversy. Campbell v. Whitsett, 66 Mo. App. 444. Counsel for defendant insists the five-years statute began to run against plaintiff before letters were granted, because she was entitled to take out letters, citing Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 13 Sup. Ct. 466, 37 L. Ed. 316. In that case the Supreme Court of the United States followed the Supreme Court of Kansas in its construction of a statute of the state of Kansas. The construction adopted was that if the limitation period was running in favor of a debtor when he died, the statute was suspended by the death, but only long enough for the creditor to have an administrator appointed for the debtor's estate. Said decision, which does not declare the general doctrine held by the United States Supreme Court, but merely announces a rule peculiar to the state of Kansas as established by the decisions of its Supreme Court, would be no authority, even in Kansas, for the proposition in support of which it is cited in the present case, to wit, that a limitation statute will run in favor of the estate of a decedent, against a demand held by a claimant, who is entitled to take out letters of administration on the estate, even though, in fact, letters have not been granted to the claimant or any one else. We know of no authority anywhere for that proposition. It is true plaintiff, as the widow of Charles R. Ulrici, might have asked for letters on his estate if she had been apprised of any assets left by him, but she was not bound, even then, to take out letters; and, to hold the law will punish her for not availing herself of the privilege to administer, by barring a claim she holds against the estate for statutory allowances, or arising out of other matters, would be a ruling without precedent in the adjudicated cases. If the five-years statute of limitations has anything to do with this demand, it would only begin to run after administration had been granted, so that demand could be preferred in the probate court.

Neither do we see how the interest of Charles R. Ulrici in the insurance policy could have been administered upon until the death of his father, the insured, or plaintiff's demand paid, except by having the expectancy sold by order of court; and this would have been a most improvident procedure, and one any court would be slow to authorize, because such an uncertain interest probably would be sacrificed in a sale. No doubt the insurance money was an asset of Charles R. Ulrici's estate after the death of the insured and payment by the company. It then fell within that class of assets of a decedent which consists of property accruing after his death. 11 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) p. 836, and citations; Conigland v. Smith, 79 N. C. 303; U. S. Trust Co. v. Ins. Co., 115 N. Y. 152, 21 N. E. 1025. And it was a vested interest in Charles R. Ulrici as beneficiary even during the life of the insured. U. S. Casualty Co. v. Kacer, 169 Mo. 301, 69 S. W. 370, 58 L. R. A. 436, 92 Am. St. Rep. 641. For these reasons the defense of laches is raised against plaintiff; it being asserted she should have taken out letters or presented her demand sooner. Suffice to say she was ignorant that her husband had any interest in the insurance policy, or even of its existence, and hence laches cannot be imputed to her, especially as the estate has not been prejudiced by the delay. The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

BANNER IRON WORKS v. ÆTNA IRON WORKS et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals, Missouri, Nov. 2, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 32*)—LIENABLE "MATERIAL" OR "MACHINERY."

Iron castings from 10 to 24 feet in length, known as "sill castings or channels," were furnished to a tobacco company with the necessary bolts for use in its factories, to support tobacco presses. Most of them were used for supporting presses or tables connected therewith, without being fastened to the floor and without being put under all the presses. Some were used for other purposes, such as skids, and "dunnage"; that is, were put under goods to raise them above the floor. Those under presses and tables could be readily removed, and were in fact taken from one building to another. There was no proof that they were customarily thus placed in tobacco factories, or were in any way necessary to carry on the work, or that it could not be done as well without them. Held, that the castings were not "material" or "machinery," within Rev. St. 1899, § 4203 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2277), giving a lien to a person furnishing the same for a building.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4267-4269.]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 32*)—LIENABLE MATERIAL OR MACHINERY.

No material or machinery furnished for use in a factory is lienable except such as becomes part of the realty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

3. FIXTURES (§ 7*)—MODE AND SUFFICIENCY OF ANNEXATION.

Whether an article became a fixture is not determinable altogether, or even principally, by the mode of its attachment, and whether that is slight or strong, or whether the article can be removed readily without damage to the freehold, though these circumstances are to be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-13; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

4. FIXTURES (§ 4*)—INTENT IN MAKING ANNEXATION.

The principal criterion for determining whether an article became a fixture is the owner's intention in putting the material in or on the land or building—whether his purpose was to make it permanently a part thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 6; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2831-2847; vol. 8, p. 7664.]

5. FIXTURES (§ 4*)—INTENT IN MAKING ANNEXATION.

If the owner of the land or building purposed in putting an article in or on the same to make it permanently a part thereof, it will usually be treated as a fixture and lienable, though it is fastened only slightly, and may be displaced without injuring the freehold.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 6; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

6. FIXTURES (§ 4*)—INTENT IN MAKING ANNEXATION.

In case of machinery and other articles furnished to a factory, an important circumstance in ascertaining the intention of the proprietor to make it permanently a part of the building is the adaptability of the article or machine to the work or business of the place, and if the thing furnished was necessary thereto, or to the purpose for which the building was designed and used, or was a convenient accessory or commonly employed, in connection with such business, his intention to annex it permanently may be inferred.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel G. Taylor, Judge.

Suit by the Banner Iron Works against the Ætna Iron Works and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. Frank Ottofy, for appellant. Dalton & Harris, for respondents.

GOODE, J. Plaintiff seeks to enforce a lien against a parcel of ground in the city of St. Louis and the six-story building on it, both belonging to the Christian Peper Tobacco Company, for material furnished to be used in the building. This material consisted of iron castings, denominated indifferently "sill castings or channels," and as "long and short sills or channels." The long ones were 23 or 24 feet in length, and the short ones 10 feet or more. The amount of the bill for which a lien is asked is $190.60. The Christian Peper Tobacco Company owned several buildings in the city of St. Louis, and, among others, one on the west side of Main street between Morgan street and Lucas avenue. Said company manufactured tobacco in these buildings, and in carrying on that business used machines for pressing the tobacco. The pressing machines rested on a surface of copper which had been laid over wooden floors. In 1905 it ordered of the Ætna Iron Works some cast-iron sills or channels and the necessary bolts to be used for supports under the tobacco presses. The Ætna Iron Works arranged with plaintiff, the Banner Iron Works, to cast these "channels," as they are more frequently styled, and send them to the factory of the Ætna Iron Works, where holes were drilled in them, and they were "trimmed up," painted, and otherwise adapted for use by the Peper Company. While the channels were in process of casting, the Banner Iron Works learned the Ætna Iron Works was "slow pay," and, before plaintiff would deliver them, it ascertained to what company the Ætna Company had agreed to furnish the channels, though it does not appear the particular building in which they were to be used was ascertained. Some 16 of the channels were used as supports under the presses, or tables connected with the presses, but four or five were used by the Peper Company for other purposes, such as skids, and "dunnage"; that is, were put under goods to raise them above the floor. Those placed under the presses and tables were not fastened to the floor and could readily be removed. In fact, the evidence shows such channels were taken from one building to another of the Peper Company's factories, according to the convenience of the company. Neither were they put under all the presses, but only here and there under them. The Peper Company contended at the trial plaintiff was entitled to no lien for two reasons: Because it did not make or furnish the channels for use in the company's building described in the lien statement, but for the Ætna Company; and because, further, the channels were not such machinery or material as is lienable under the statute. The court below gave copious declarations of law at the request of plaintiff's counsel, stating, on the two controverted issues, that if the court found the channels were furnished by plaintiff to the Ætna Company for the building described in the lien paper, and said Ætna Company had a contract with the Peper Company to furnish the same for said building, and the "said iron sill castings were placed in defendant tobacco company's factory, and were especially fitted and adapted to defendant's factory, and to the transaction of the business therein conducted by said defendant tobacco company, * * *" and were "intended by said defendant tobacco company to be a permanent improvement therein," plaintiff was entitled to have his lien enforced. Two declarations were given for defendant of which complaint is made; but it is not necessary to quote them or recite their substance, because we are clear the judgment, which was in defendant's favor, was for the right party.

Our statute gives a person who furnishes "material, fixtures, engine, boiler or machinery for, any building, erection or improvements upon land, or for repairing the same, under or by virtue of any contract with the owner or proprietor thereof, or his agent, trustee, contractor, or subcontractor," a lien on the building, erection, or improvement for the materials and machinery. 1899, § 4203 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2277). The description of the channels or sill castings demonstrates that they were not material or machinery within the meaning of that section as construed by the courts. They were not attached to the building, or essential to its use as a tobacco factory, or used consistently for any one purpose, but for several different purposes, and could be and were moved from one building to another at the convenience of the company. No material or machinery furnished for use in a factory is lienable except such as becomes part of the realty. Whether in a particular instance the article became part of the realty, or, in other words, a fixture, is not determined altogether, or even principally, by the mode in which it is attached to the building or land, and whether the attachment is slight or strong, or whether the article can be removed readily without damage to the freehold. Those circumstances are to be considered in determining whether the material became a fixture; but they are not conclusive. The principal criterion is the intention with which the owner of the land or building put the material into the building or on the land—whether his purpose was to make it permanently a part of the land or tenement. If this was his purpose, then though it is fastened to the freehold only slightly and may be displaced without injury to the freehold, it usually will be treated as a fixture and lienable. In the case of machinery or other articles furnished to a factory or place of business, an important circumstance, in the attempt to ascertain the intention of the proprietor, is the adaptability of the article or machine to the work or business of the place. Thomas v. Dabls, 76 Mo. 72, 43 Am. Rep. 756. If the thing furnished was necessary to that work or business, or necessary to the purpose for which the building was designed and used, or was a convenient accessory, or commonly employed in connection with such business, the intention of the proprietor of the establishment to annex it permanently to the realty may be inferred. Progress, etc., Co. v. Gratiot, etc., Co., 151 Mo. 501, 52 S. W. 401, 74 Am. St. Rep. 557; Graves v. Pierce, 53 Mo. 423; Richardson v. Koch, 81 Mo. 284; Sosman v. Conlon, 57 Mo. App. 25; Roseville, etc., Co. v. Mining Co., 15 Colo. 29, 24 Pac. 920, 22 Am. St. Rep. 373; Morotock Ins. Co. v. Rodefer, 92 Va. 747, 24 S. E. 393, 53 Am. St. Rep. 846. See, also, 53 Am. St. Rep. 576, note. The most that can be said of those channels is that, like pieces of wood or stone, they were useful supports for the tobacco presses and were placed by the Peper Company under some of its presses. There was no proof they were customarily thus placed in tobacco factories, or were in any way necessary to carrying on the work of manufacturing tobacco, or that it could not be done as well without them.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

JONES v. SHEPARD.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals, Missouri. Nov. 17, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 30, 1909.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 376*)—ACTION FOR SURPLUS PROCEEDS OF SALE—VARIANCE—ALLEGATIONS AND PROOF.

In an action by a mortgagor against the trustee to recover the surplus remaining after selling the mortgaged land and paying the secured note, where defendant answered, admitting that it was his duty to distribute the proceeds, and denied that he had failed to do so, alleging that plaintiff had agreed to assume a prior trust deed, and had failed to pay it, and that defendant had given plaintiff credit on the note secured by the prior trust deed for the surplus, he could not defend on the ground that there was a valid foreclosure under the first trust deed, and that hence plaintiff was not entitled to the surplus from the second sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1131; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 93*)—INCONSISTENT ALLEGATION.

Allegations of such defense could not have been coupled in the answer with the other defense as proof of the one would disprove the other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 189; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

3. MORTGAGES (§ 376*)—FORECLOSURE UNDER TWO TRUST DEEDS—RIGHT OF SENIOR INCUMBRANCER TO PROCEEDS OF SALE UNDER JUNIOR TRUST DEED.

If a lienor under a junior trust deed had assumed a senior trust deed, and there had been a valid sale under the senior trust deed and the note secured thereby had been satisfied, the holder thereof would not be entitled to the surplus of the proceeds of the sale under the junior trust deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1128; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

4. MORTGAGES (§ 376*)—SALE UNDER TRUST DEED—DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDS.

Ordinarily a trustee who sells property under a trust deed must ascertain the method of disposing of the proceeds from the direction of the trust deed, providing they are not in conflict with law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1128; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

5. MORTGAGES (§ 376*)—SALE UNDER JUNIOR TRUST DEED—RIGHT TO PROCEEDS.

Upon a foreclosure sale under a junior trust deed, as between the mortgagor and senior lienors, the mortgagor is entitled to the surplus, unless he had relinquished it in the trust deed or otherwise, as against the senior lienors; the theory of the law being that the purchaser at a foreclosure sale buys subject to prior incumbrances, at least unless under some arrangement the whole fee is sold.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1128; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

6. MORTGAGES (§ 376*)—SALE UNDER TRUST DEED—DISPOSAL OF PROCEEDS.

Upon a foreclosure sale under a trust deed, junior incumbrancers will take precedence over the mortgagor as regards the right to have their demands paid out of the surplus, since the execution of a junior mortgage amounts to an as-assignment to the mortgagor's equity of redemption to the junior mortgagee and of the assignor's right in equity to the surplus in case of a sale under the prior incumbrances, and the same is true of a person to whom a mortgagor conveys or assigns his equity of redemption by way of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1128; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

7. MORTGAGES (§ 376*)—FORECLOSURE—TRANSFEREE OF EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

If a mortgagor's equity of redemption is sold under execution or otherwise transferred in invitum, the transferee will step into his shoes in respect of his right to the proceeds at a foreclosure sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1128; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

8. MORTGAGES (§ 376*)—FORECLOSURE OF SENIOR TRUST DEED—RIGHTS TO SURPLUS PROCEEDS OF SALE UNDER JUNIOR TRUST DEED.

While the foreclosure of a senior trust deed cuts off a junior incumbrance and any equity to redeem therein, it does not transfer that equity to the purchaser at the sale under the first incumbrance, and does not cut off the right of the second mortgagor to surplus proceeds arising from a sale under the second instrument, especially where the senior trust deed is not given by the mortgagor in the junior incumbrance, but by his grantor, the senior trust deed standing as an independent transaction unrelated to the second mortgage or the equity to redeem therefrom, and whatever title was purchased, or attempted to be purchased upon foreclosure of the junior incumbrance, was one that had belonged to the mortgagor therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1128; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

9. MORTGAGES (§ 361*)—FORECLOSURE UNDER TRUST DEED—DUTY OF TRUSTEE TO OBSERVE PROVISIONS OF DEED.

Where a trust deed required the trustee to sell for cash upon foreclosure, he could not give credit on a note secured by a senior trust deed, alleged to have been assumed by the mortgagor in his trust deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1078, 1079; Dec. Dig. § 361.*]

10. EVIDENCE (§ 419*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—NATURE OF CONSIDERATION—ASSUMPTION OF INCUMBRANCES.

The assumption by a purchaser of land of an incumbrance thereon may be shown by parol.

11. MORTGAGES (§ 376*) — FORECLOSURE — RIGHT TO SURPLUS.

Fact that the purchaser of land who gave a trust deed to secure his note to the vendor verbally agreed to pay a note secured by a prior trust deed on the premises would not justify the trustee of the purchaser's trust deed, upon selling the premises thereunder, in turning over the surplus proceeds as a credit on the note secured by the senior trust deed, in violation of the provisions of his trust deed that the mortgagor should receive such surplus; such a verbal agreement being no equitable assignment of the surplus such as goes with the assignment of an equity of redemption.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Virgil Rule, Judge.

Action by Shelby C. Jones against John A. Shepard. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Plaintiff executed to defendant, as trustee, a deed of trust conveying certain property in the city of St. Louis to secure the payment of a promissory note of $500, dated October 11, 1905, and payable to the order of Pingree McFerren, on or before April 15, 1906, with interest at 6 per cent. The conveyance provided for the sale of the property by the trustee if default occurred in the payment of the note, and the trustee covenanted "faithfully to perform the trust" created by the deed. Default having been made in payment, Jacob S. McFerren, the holder of the note when the default happened, called on defendant as trustee to foreclose the deed of trust by selling the property according to the terms of the instrument. This was done, and on July 5, 1907, defendant sold the property to the highest bidder, who was Jacob S. McFerren, for $3,500, and executed a trustee's deed to him on said day. The amount of the note secured by the deed of trust at the date of the sale was $552. The trustee's fees and other expenses of the sale amounted to $108.86, and those two items added made $660.86, leaving a surplus over the price bid of $2,839.14. The foreclosed deed of trust provided as follows, regarding the disposition of the proceeds of a foreclosure sale by the trustee: That "he should pay first the cost and expense of executing the trust, including lawful compensation of said trustee, and also an auctioneer's fee of five dollars for each parcel of land sold hereunder, and next he shall repay to any person or persons who may or shall under the covenants hereinbefore set forth have advanced or paid any money for taxes, mechanics' liens, or insurance, as above provided, all sums so by him or them advanced and not already repaid, together with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum from date of such advance till day of payment, and next the amount unpaid on said notes, together with the interest accrued thereon, and the remainder, if any, shall be paid to the party of the first part or his legal representatives." On the day of the sale, plaintiff gave defendant written notice plaintiff claimed any surplus arising from the sale of the property above the amount secured by the deed of trust, and demanded defendant pay the same to plaintiff and to no one else. On the next day, July 6, 1907, plaintiff again notified defendant in writing plaintiff claimed any surplus arising from the sale, and asked defendant to furnish plaintiff the name and address of the purchaser of the property, amount bid, amount of the note secured by the deed of trust with interest and the costs of the sale. Instead of turning over the surplus to plaintiff as grantor in the deed of trust under which the sale occurred, defendant credited said surplus of $2,839.14 on another note for $5,000 held by Jacob S. McFerren, which note had been executed by Mary C. Baker and James Baker to Joseph Dormitzer, November 5, 1885, and according to the recitals in the abstract had been secured by a deed of trust of the same date executed by said Bakers to Edward Rowse, as trustee for the benefit of said Dormitzer, the cestui que trust, and conveying the same property conveyed in the deed of trust under which defendant had sold. Though the note for $5,000 described in the Baker deed of trust had been made to Joseph Dormitzer, it was held by Jacob S. McFerren at the date of the foreclosure sale on July 5, 1907, who also at that time held the note for $500 secured by the foreclosed deed of trust; the latter note having been assigned to him by the original payee, Pingree McFerren. In the answer filed by defendant he admitted it was his duty to pay and distribute the proceeds of the foreclosure sale in accordance with the provisions of the deed of trust under which he sold; denied he refused, failed, or neglected to pay over to plaintiff the surplus money left after paying all costs and expenses incident to the sale and the debt secured by the instrument foreclosed, and then alleged Jacob S. McFerren was the owner and holder of another deed of trust on the property foreclosed, that plaintiff had assumed and agreed to pay said deed of trust and had failed and neglected to do so, and the note secured by it and the interest thereon were due and payable at the time of the foreclosure. Defendant alleged he gave plaintiff credit on the $5,000 note for the surplus proceeds of the sale, and that this was in conformity to his duty as trustee, because plaintiff had assumed and agreed to pay said debt of $5,000, but had failed and neglected to pay it. The reply denied the assumption by plaintiff of the $5,000 note and deed of trust or agreement by him to pay the same, and denied defendant was authorized to give credit on said note for the surplus arising from the sale, or was authorized to pay said surplus to any one but plaintiff. Plaintiff had purchased the property covered by the two deeds of trust from Pingree McFerren and Mary C. McFerren, his wife, and they had conveyed the same to plaintiff by a warranty deed dated October 11, 1905, wherein the grantors warranted the title to the property "against the lawful claims of all persons whomsoever excepting the taxes for the year 1906 and thereafter, and a certain deed of trust for $5,000 recorded in book 770, page 398, of the Recorder of Deeds' office in the city of St. Louis, Missouri." The incumbrance excepted out of the warranty was the Baker deed of trust for $5,000.

Plaintiff testified he knew of the existence of said incumbrance when he purchased the property, and defendant's counsel attempted to prove plaintiff had endeavored to obtain an extension of that incumbrance from Jacob S. McFerren to whom the note had been assigned by Dormitzer, but this evidence was excluded. Jacob S. McFerren presented the Baker note and deed of trust to defendant on the morning of the sale, and defendant gave credit for the surplus on the note, and took a receipt for the credit from Jacob S. McFerren. There had been a foreclosure sale under the first or Baker deed of trust prior to the sale by defendant under the deed of trust to secure the note for $500, but defendant testified he regarded the sale under the Baker deed of trust as invalid. Plaintiff was asked while on the witness stand whether he knew, when he purchased the property, of the Baker incumbrance for $5,000, and whether he ever made any effort to pay it off. Against the objection of his counsel, he was compelled to respond to these questions, and answered that he knew of the incumbrance when he bought and had not endeavored to discharge it. He was also compelled to answer regarding what he paid for the property, and in answering said he did not definitely remember, as there was "considerable detail," and his father had attended to the transaction as his agent. He was then asked whether he had paid any money on the purchase price, and, after some discussion of an objection to the question, the court said the witness had gone far enough into that matter. The purpose of the inquiry was stated thus by defendant's attorney: "It might become important for the reason it might be shown that this plaintiff had no interest whatever at any time in this property, no real interest, and it might appear that he was only used in this matter as a convenience." Defendant testified as follows regarding the reason why he paid Jacob S. McFerren the surplus of the proceeds realized by selling under the deed of trust wherein he was trustee: "Now, Mr. Shepard, you may state why you declined to pay over to Mr. Jones the surplus, as there claimed, arising out of the sale of the property. A. I considered that the foreclosure of the first deed of trust was not a legal sale and that the property was still—the title, the ownership to that first deed of trust and note, was still in McFerren. The title companies would not pass upon the title. * * * And I considered, as I said, that McFerren was still the legal holder of the five thousand claim against this property; that he had an equitable interest in any surplus created by the sale of the second deed of trust under the first. Those were my reasons for making that payment of that surplus on that first deed of trust note." The last part of the answer was struck out on motion of defendant's counsel. The court gave judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, assigning for errors the exclusion of the first or Baker deed of trust and note when offered by defendant, not permit-the second deed of trust, or the cause of that sale, and in excluding evidence regarding what plaintiff paid for the property when he purchased it from Pingree McFerren. The last assignment of error is in this form: "It was competent to show plaintiff had assumed the payment of the first note also, and had agreed the fund resulting from the sale of the property should be applied to the payment of both of them."

T. B. Harvey and H. G. Offenbach, for appellant. George V. Reynolds, for respondent.

GOODE, J. (after stating the facts as above). To make clear the theory of counsel for defendant, it should be stated they assign as error the exclusion of the Baker deed of trust and note and testimony regarding why defendant foreclosed under the second or Pingree McFerren deed of trust upon the notion that there had been a valid foreclosure of the Baker instrument which deprived plaintiff as grantor in the second incumbrance of right to the surplus proceeds arising from the foreclosure of the second one. It is obvious this theory is the antithesis of the one under which defendant acted in turning over the surplus to Jacob S. McFerren, as pleaded in the answer and told by him in his testimony. He stated he paid the surplus to Jacob S. McFerren because he thought the attempted foreclosure of the Baker deed of trust was invalid, and therefore McFerren was left with a lien for $5,000 against the property, and in consequence was entitled to receive the surplus. This, too, was the purport of his excluded testimony. But now his counsel contend the foreclosure of the first deed of trust was valid and operated to exclude plaintiff from any participation in the surplus proceeds of the foreclosure of the second one by transferring the right to those proceeds, in equity, over to Jacob S. McFerren. We remark upon this contention that the only evidence offered to prove the Baker deed of trust had been foreclosed was an indorsement across the face of the note it secured, made by a deputy sheriff, which recited the note had been satisfied by sale made June 28, 1906, under a deed of trust securing the same. Whether Jacob S. McFerren purchased at the first foreclosure sale and the trustee conveyed the title to him by deed, or attempted to do so, was not offered in proof. Hence if we allow, for argument's sake, that a valid foreclosure sale had occurred under the first deed of trust, this fact was not supplemented by an offer of evidence which tended to prove McFerren acquired the title to the property, or any greater right to the surplus proceeds of the second foreclosure than he would have as the holder of the note secured by the Baker deed of trust if there had been no sale under it. In other words, nothing was offered to prove defendant had right in paying the surplus to him. Hence all that remains of this point is the question whether, if there was a good foreclosure of the first incumbrance, that circumstance deprived plaintiff of right to the surplus proceeds accruing from the sale under the second one, and cut out his cause of action against defendant for the surplus. This defense could not be made under the answer, for, as said, it is in direct opposition to the averments therein, and allegations regarding it could not have been couped in the answer with the other defense; for proof of the one defense would disprove the other. Bell v. Campbell, 123 Mo. 1, 25 S. W. 359, 45 Am. St. Rep. 505; Rev. St. 1899, § 606 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 640). But, if pleaded and proved, it would not have been a good defense. For one thing, if the first sale was valid, then according to the evidence relied on to prove its validity, the debt had been satisfied, and Jacob S. McFerren as holder of a fully paid note was entitled to no credit on it. We will consider the matter more at large. Ordinarily how a trustee who sells property under a deed of trust shall dispose of the proceeds must be ascertained from the directions of the instrument, provided these are not in conflict with the law. 2 Jones, Mortgages (6th Ed.) § 1927. There were no incumbrances junior to the second or Jones deed of trust, and the provision therein requiring a surplus remaining of sale money, after paying the secured debt, expenses of sale, etc., to be paid to plaintiff as mortgagor, was in accord with the law. As between senior lienors and a junior mortgagor, the latter is entitled to the surplus, unless he had relinquished it in the instrument or allunde, as against the former. The theory of the law is that the purchaser at a foreclosure sale buys subject to prior incumbrances; at least, unless under some arrangement, the whole fee is sold. Helweg v. Heltcamp, 20 Mo. 569; Scott v. Shy, 53 Mo. 478; Schmidt v. Smith, 57 Mo. 135; Tanner v. Taussig, 11 Mo. App. 534. Junior incumbrancers will take precedence over the mortgagor, as regards the right to have their demands paid out of the surplus, because the execution of a junior mortgage amounts to an assignment of the mortgagor's equity of redemption to the junior mortgagee and of the assignor's right in equity to the surplus in case of a sale under the prior incumbrance. Cases, supra; 2 Jones, § 1929; 27 Cyc. 1497. So will a person to whom a mortgagor conveys or assigns his equity of redemption by way of sale. Reed v. Mullins, 43 Mo. 306. And in this and some other states, if a mortgagor's equity of redemption is sold under execution or otherwise transferred in invitum, the purchaser will step into his shoes in respect of his right to the surplus proceeds of a foreclosure sale. 27 Cyc. § 1497, and note 97; Foster v. Potter, 37 Mo. 525, 534.

But we can conceive of no principle upon which the foreclosure of a prior mortgage, and especially one not given by the mortgagor in a second incumbrance, but by his grantor, will cut off the right of the second mortgagor to surplus proceeds arising from a sale under the second instrument. Pendency of the first mortgage as an outstanding incumbrance does not have that effect, and we perceive no reason why foreclosing it should have. It stands as an independent transaction, unrelated to the second mortgage or the mortgagor's equity to redeem from the second mortgage, though as a junior lienor he might redeem the first incumbrance, too. Neither is the first incumbrance, or the beneficiary therein, or a purchaser thereunder, in any way connected with the right of the second mortgagor to surplus money accruing from foreclosing the latter lien; at least, we do not discern any connection. We find no direct authority on this question, but our opinion appears to be according to the principles underlying the rules regarding what disposition shall be made of surplus proceeds, and Hooper v. Castetter, 45 Neb. 67, 63 N. W. 135, is nearly in point. In that case the holder of junior mortgages brought suit to have them foreclosed, and after decree of foreclosure, but before sale under the decree, bought the senior mortgage, and having bid in the property at the foreclosure sale, for more than the amount of the incumbrance foreclosed, sought to have the surplus credited on the senior incumbrance he had acquired. His claim was denied, and it was decreed the surplus should go to the intervening creditors of the mortgagor, less a homestead exemption of $2,000 in favor of the latter and his wife, which was ordered paid to them. The Nebraska case is relevant to the point involved here in several respects. The court pointed out that under the decree of foreclosure the sheriff could sell only for cash, and hence could not accept the debt secured by the senior incumbrance as part payment, though under the law he could give credit on the purchase price for the amount of the debts secured by the deeds foreclosed. By parity of reasoning, as Sheppard was required to sell for cash, he had no right to give credit on the Baker note. The Supreme Court of Nebraska said it was optional with the second mortgagee, who had foreclosed those instruments, and had purchased the first mortgage whether the latter lien would be merged in the title he acquired by buying at the foreclosure sale; that the question of his right to the surplus did not turn on whether the first incumbrance had merged in his fee, but he had no more right to the surplus by virtue of the assignment to him of the first mortgage than a stranger would have had, or the original first mortgagee. If the title to the property passed to whomsoever bought at the sale under the Baker mortgage, then the sale under the second or Jones deed of trust passed no title to the purchaser at the latter sale. Nevertheless, if Jacob S. McFerren was willing to buy in the property and pay a price for it which would more than discharge the debt secured, the surplus ought to go to plaintiff as mortgagor; because whatever title was purchased or attempted to be purchased was one which had belonged to him and he had conveyed to the trustee making the sale. An effort is made to treat the case as analogous to one in which the mortgagor in a second mortgage assigns his equity of redemption by way of a third mortgage, or by voluntary sale or sale in invitum. But there is no analogy between the two cases. The foreclosure of a prior mortgage cuts off a junior incumbrance, and any equity to redeem therein, but does not transfer that equity to the purchaser at the sale under the first incumbrance, and therefore does not carry any right to surplus proceeds arising from a sale under a junior incumbrance.

The second error assigned is the refusal of the court to permit defendant to inquire into the consideration plaintiff paid for the property in controversy when he purchased it from Pingree McFerren. The purpose was to prove defendant assumed, as part of the consideration, the payment of the Baker deed of trust for $5,000. He certainly did not assume it in the deed Pingree McFerren made to him, but such an assumption may be established by parol evidence. Bensieck v. Cook, 110 Mo. 173, 19 S. W. 642, 33 Am. St. Rep. 422; Nelson v. Brown, 140 Mo. 580, 41 S. W. 960, 62 Am. St. Rep. 755. The offer to prove a parol assumption was vague, at best, and really we think the testimony of plaintiff, by whom defendant's counsel attempted to prove the fact, amounted to a denial that he had agreed to assume and pay the first mortgage. However, it might be contended he only denied having assumed it in Pingree McFerren's deed to him, and not that he did so verbally. Let us then take for granted he agreed verbally to pay said note as part of the purchase price of the property, and the question occurs whether this fact would be a defense to the present action, whether it justified defendant in ignoring plaintiff's demand for the surplus proceeds of the foreclosure sale and turning the surplus over to Jacob S. McFerren, as holder of the Baker note. No doubt such an assumption of the debt would have given Jacob S. McFerren a right of action against plaintiff personally, or to attach the surplus, or reach it by suit in equity, as the circumstances might warrant. But it was no authority or justification for defendant's turning the surplus over to McFerren, was no equitable assignment of the surplus, such as goes with the assignment of an equity of redemption. Plaintiff might have had ground to contend the debt had already been paid, or that he had offsets or counterclaims against the holder of the note, or that the money, or part of it, was exempt from execution or liability for the debt, like the surplus in the Nebraska case, or might have preferred to pay other debts with it. To say defendant could hand the money over to Jacob S. McFerren to pay the Baker incumbrance would amount to investing defendant with the functions of a court and allowing him to settle the rights of the respective parties. He was a stranger to any such agreement, if it was made, and obtained no warrant from it for disposing, as he did, of the greater part of the price bid for the property. We are cited to the passage in a treatise wherein it is said the purchaser at a mortgagee's or trustee's sale takes the property subject to all prior liens, and "no part of the proceeds should be applied to their extinguishment in the absence of an express provision therefor in the deed of trust or other agreement binding on the mortgagor." 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 833. The italicized words are argued to mean a trustee is entitled to pay the surplus to the holder of a note secured by a prior mortgage, if the party named as mortgagor in the junior deed of trust under which the trustee sells had promised payment of the prior mortgage as part of the purchase price of the land when he bought it. We think those words have no such meaning, but refer to contracts aliunde the deed under which the trustee sells, by which the grantor in said deed agrees regarding what disposition shall be made of surplus money accruing from a sale and authorizes the application of it to prior liens.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Springfield Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 2, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 6, 1909.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 221*)—CLAIMS FOR LABOR—RELATIONSHIP.

Services between persons in family relation are presumed to be gratuitous, and, to warrant a recovery therefor against a decedent's estate, an express contract, or an intention to charge by one and to pay by the other, must be proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 901; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 221*)—CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATE—EVIDENCE.

An intention to charge and to pay for services between persons in family relation may be proved by circumstantial evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 908½; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 139*)—TAKING CASE FROM JURY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

A demurrer to testimony should not be sustained if it is so strong that fair-minded men may differ as to the issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 338; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 221*)—CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATE—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Evidence in support of a mother's claim for services against the estate of her deceased daughter examined, and held to justify the direction of a verdict for the administrator.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Greene County; James T. Neville, Judge.

Action by Mary E. Rose against David Mayes, public administrator. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

O. T. Hamlin and J. T. White, for appellant. W. D. Hubbard and G. W. Goad, for respondent.

COX, J. This case arises upon the following account filed by plaintiff in the probate court of Greene county:

The Estate of Lillie Collins, Deceased, to Mary E. Rose, Dr.
1893. To amount of money furnished Lillie to come to Kansas from Kentucky.....	$ 26 00
1900. To value of organ given in exchange for piano purchased by Lillie.....	60 00
To services, household work, cooking, washing, etc., rendered for a period of fourteen years from 1894 or 1895 to 1908 at $200 per year..	2,800 00
Total	$2,886 00

There was a trial by jury and a verdict for plaintiff for $1,600. The administrator appealed. There was a trial by jury in the circuit court, where, at the close of the plaintiff's testimony, the court sustained a demurrer thereto, and judgment was entered for defendant. Plaintiff has appealed from this judgment, assigning as error the action of the court in directing a verdict for defendant. It is conceded that the first item, $26, is barred by limitation, and that there is no evidence to sustain the second item of $60, and that as to these items the judgment is proper. The only contention is as to the item of $2,800 for services.

The evidence tending to show the relationship of the parties, their condition, surroundings, and manner of living during the time for which services are charged developed this state of facts:

The plaintiff is the mother of the deceased. The deceased was married at the age of 16 to Collins, and removed to Kentucky in 1892. A year or so later, deceased, Lillie Collins, wrote to her mother, who then lived at Win-

ing except a little furniture. The mother and daughter continued from that day until the death of Lillie, in February, 1908, to live together as one family. The mother did most of the housework, the washing, cooking, etc. They remained in poor circumstances until the daughter Lillie came into possession of some money, the date of which does not appear, but presumably about 1899 or 1900, for on February 13, 1900, she purchased a home in Springfield, Mo., paying $800 therefor. This home was comfortably furnished. They moved to it, and lived there, except for one short interval, until the date of Lillie's death. The care of the home and the burden of the work was performed by the mother. Lillie was away from home for a considerable portion of the time, but for what purpose does not appear. She dressed stylishly, the mother dressed comfortably, and the home was transformed from one of poverty to one of comfort. There was some evidence as to the value of the work performed by the plaintiff. Lillie died in February, 1908, leaving an estate of a net value, including the home, of about $1,500. The plaintiff offered a great deal of testimony, in which witnesses detailed statements made by deceased in her lifetime relative to a desire upon her part to compensate her mother for the labor she performed in the home, and it is upon these statements alone that the plaintiff relies for a reversal of the judgment. Without detailing them in full we incorporate enough to show their general nature as follows:

In the presence of Mrs. Dowd, sister of the plaintiff, soon after her return from Kentucky, she said, in substance, to the plaintiff: "Mamma, if you will stay with me, I will never leave you, or forsake you. You have been very good to me, and I will repay you for all you ever do for me, and I will provide a home for you as long as I live." To this the mother made no reply. At other times she said to Mrs. Dowd practically the same thing in the mother's absence. To Mrs. Petty, about six months before her death, she said, in substance, that she got the home in Springfield purposely for her mother a home; that her mother had stuck to her and cared for her, and she got this home for her because she had no one else to care for her; that her mother was the best woman in the world, just waited on her like she was a second babe, did all the housework, etc. Mrs. Buckmaster heard Lillie say to her mother, in effect, that the work was pretty hard on her, but she expected to pay her for it. No reply by the mother. She also stated to Mrs. Buckmaster that she wanted to leave the place clear of all incumbrance to her mother at her death, because her mother, you might so much for her; that she thought she could not do too much for her mother. To Mrs. Smithson she stated she thought her mother was the right one to have her property, and she wanted her to have it when she was done with it. She thought her mother had earned it, because she took care of her when she was sick. To Robert Smith and others she stated practically the same things. Lillie died from the effects of chloroform given preparatory to a surgical operation, and to Dr. Fulbright the evening before the operation she said: "Doctor, if this operation is a dangerous one, I want to know it, for, if it is, I want to make a will, and give all I have to my mother." He assured her the operation was not dangerous, and the will was not made.

The foregoing we think fairly states the substance of the testimony as preserved in this record. Was it sufficient to take the case to the jury? The rules of law applicable to this case are well settled in this state, and are as follows: In cases in which the family relation exists, as it undoubtedly did in this case, the presumption is that services rendered by one member of the family to another are gratuitous, and, to entitle one to recover for services performed while the family relation existed, the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove an express contract for payment, or that there was an intention on the part of the servitor to charge, and on the part of the recipient of the services to pay for such services at the time they were rendered. McMorrow v. Dowell, 116 Mo. App. 289, 90 S. W. 728; Sloan v. Dale, 90 Mo. App., loc. cit. 90. The intention to charge by one, and to pay by the other, need not be shown by direct or positive testimony, but may be shown by facts and circumstances from which such intention may be inferred. Cowell v. Robert's Ex., 79 Mo. 218; McMorrow v. Dowell, 116 Mo. App. 289, 90 S. W. 728; Fry v. Fry, 119 Mo. App. 476, 94 S. W. 990; Cole v. Fitzgerald, 132 Mo. App. 17, loc. cit. 25, 111 S. W. 628. A demurrer to the testimony should not be sustained if there is substantial testimony adduced in support of the plaintiff's claim. By this is meant that it should satisfy a reasonable, fair-minded person of the truth of the claim, or that it should be, at least, strong enough that fair-minded persons might differ as to the truth or falsity of the claim. Baird v. Citizens' Ry. Co., 146 Mo. 265, loc. cit. 281, 282, 48 S. W. 78; 2 Thompson on Trials, § 1663.

Keeping these wholesome rules of the law in view and weighing the testimony in the light thereof, could fair-minded persons differ as to the issue involved in this case, or could but one result follow? Here is an account of $2,800 for 14 years of service as a house servant by a mother against a daughter. If the services were rendered in this capacity at all, they began when both were very poor, and this condition continued for some time. Then the daughter becomes possessed of some means. A house is bought by her in Springfield, and the family home of poverty is changed to one of comfort. The daughter gives frequent expression of her affection for her mother, and her intention to pay her for what she does for her, also to leave her property to her if she should die first. Had she done this, as she might very properly have done, this controversy would never have arisen. The expressions of the daughter above referred to began upon her return to her mother in 1893 or 1894, and were continued, without interruption, at intervals, to the time of her death, sometimes in the presence of the mother, sometimes directly to her, and sometimes in her absence. The mother says nothing. When these expressions of affection and a desire to repay her for her goodness are made directly to the mother, no answer is given by the mother, but she goes on tolling as was her wont for the comfort of her daughter and the good of the home. No account is kept of services rendered during all this time. When the daughter acquires some means, not a word is said by either about the payment of any sum due for services, but the little home is purchased and the lives of both are made more comfortable, and the devotion and love of the mother and daughter continue unbroken to the end. They shared together the hardships of poverty, and enjoyed together the comforts of better financial circumstances. Shall we say that under this testimony the question as to whether they occupied the relation of master and servant or were simply living in the joy of each other's love was a doubtful one, and about which fair-minded men might differ? We think not. To our mind it would be a travesty upon justice and a slander against motherhood to say that under the circumstances developed in this case the daughter was master and the mother servant, and the motive for the continuance of loving deeds and tender care of the mother was a wage.

We have examined carefully the cases cited by appellant with other cases, and, while the courts have been very liberal in allowing claims for services against the estates of deceased persons, yet the evidence in all such cases must be weighed in the light of the relationship, conditions, and surroundings of the parties, and that construction given it which comports with reason and justice. Where there is urgent necessity for the services, very slight circumstances have been held to be sufficient to make out a prima facie case. It is apparent that no general rule can be laid down as to what evidence is required, but each case must stand upon its own facts, but, in the absence of an express contract, there must be some evidence not only that the recipient of the services intended to pay for them, but there must also be some evidence that the one rendering the services expected to be paid for them, and that such intention on the part of both parties existed at the time the services were performed. In this case there are some facts that militate against the position of the plaintiff that she at the time the services were rendered intended to charge, and the daughter intended to pay, for the claimed services. This account is practically twice the value of the entire estate. For the first few years of the time for which compensation is claimed Lillie was poor, and, as far as the evidence shows, had no prospect of ever being able to pay anything. Then she by some means acquired some money. If both expected that the mother was to be paid for services rendered Lillie, why was not something paid then? Nowhere in the evidence does it appear that the mother changed her condition, or suffered possible financial loss by reason of the claimed services. There is direct evidence that in one instance the daughter paid a doctor's bill for the mother, and the only fair inference from all the testimony is that the daughter paid the bills incurred for the support of the family, and the mother did the work, and nowhere in this record do we find any evidence from which in our judgment it could be fairly inferred that the mother intended to charge for these services at the time.

Our conclusion is that the real facts were that this mother and daughter lived all those years together exemplifying a mother's love and a daughter's devotion, and this was the tie that held them together, and not the expectation of payment for services rendered, and that, under this evidence, no other conclusion could be fairly reached, and that, therefore, the learned trial judge was right in directing a verdict for the defendant.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Virgil Rule, Judge.

Action by Ward Goodloe against the Empson Packing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Action before a justice of the peace on an account for commissions. On appeal to the circuit court the case was tried there before the court; a jury being waived. Objection was made to the sufficiency of the statement filed before the justice, and, the objection being overruled, the trial proceeded. Evidence as to the correctness of the claim made, and as to whether it was according to contract between the parties, was introduced, as also this letter: "Longmont, Colo., Oct. 23, 1906. Mr. Ward Goodloe, 509 Houser Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.—Dear Sir: Enclosed find check for $41.73 in payment of brokerage on Ouerbacher, Gilmore Co's. contract and also on Inger and McKinzie of Joplin, Mo. You will note that we had to cut down both of these parties. Kindly sign enclosed voucher and return. Yours very truly [Signed] The Empson Packing Company, by J. H. Empson, Pres."

The letter was accompanied by a voucher to which was attached a receipt, all as follows:

The Empson Packing Company, Longmont, Colorado, to Ward Goodloe, Dr.

For items as per bill attached.

2½ per cent. brokerage sale to Ouerbacher-Gilmore	$1,449 00	$36 23
10 per cent. brokerage sale to Inger & McKinzie.....	55 00	5 50
		$41 73

"Longmont, Colo., Oct. 23, 1906. Received from the Empson Packing Company, forty-one and 75/100 dollars, in full payment for above account. Goodloe Bros.

"Approved for payment. J. H. Empson, President."

Along with these was a check for $41.73 to order of plaintiff. Respondent, plaintiff here, scratched out the word "full" in the receipt, and wrote over it in ink the word "part," and signed and returned the receipt to defendant, retaining the check. Some correspondence between the parties over their is made in the correspondence or testimony to the receipt. There were no written pleadings other than the statement which had been filed before the justice which was a bill on billhead of plaintiff dated September 2, 1907, made out against defendant with dates, and items following:

Sept. 30. Commissions on Reinhart order, $4,770.00.....	$119 25
Commissions on Ouerbacher-Gilmore Co., Louisville, Ky.....	$163 92
Credit	41 73
Due	$125 19 125 19 $244 44

No declarations of law were asked or given. At the conclusion of the trial, the court disallowed the Reinhart item and found for plaintiff on the Ouerbacher-Gilmore item, awarding plaintiff $113.46 on that, including interest. Defendant filed motions for new trial and in arrest. These being overruled, and saving exception, it has brought the case here on appeal.

Abbott, Edwards & Willson, for appellant. Wm. S. Campbell, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). The court committed no error in refusing to hold the statement filed insufficient. Neither by any rulings at the trial nor by declarations of law are we informed on what theory the trial judge acted in holding that there had not been accord and satisfaction between the parties. The voucher and letter accompanying the check sent shows that the check was sent in full payment of the account, which account covered the transactions here in suit. The retention of the check, unaccompanied by any explanation, in the face of the offer that it was in full payment, is conclusive on plaintiff. We have recently held in the case of Pub. Geo. Knapp & Co. v. Pepsin Syrup Co., 137 Mo. App. 472, 119 S. W. 38, that such was the law. See, also, Lightfoot v. Hurd, 113 Mo. App. 612, 88 S. W. 128. See further Barrett v. Kern, 121 S. W. 774, where the law of accord and satisfaction is discussed. There were no conflicting facts in evidence on this matter of accord and satisfaction. All there is about it is in the letter, receipt, and check. Respondent claims that no such defense was pleaded. This was a case coming to the circuit court from that of the justice, and required no pleadings on the part of the defendant. While it is true that all presumptions are to be indulged in favor of the action of the trial court, we cannot indulge in presumptions in the face of a record.

The judgment of the circuit court must be, and is, reversed. All concur.

NICHOLSON v. ACME CEMENT PLASTER CO.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 17, 1900. Rehearing Denied Nov. 30, 1900.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 56*)—CONSIDERATION—MUTUAL PROMISES.

Plaintiff, a subcontractor, contracted to plaster the interior of a schoolhouse, agreeing to do a first-class job and to guarantee the plastering upon the ceiling would remain in place two years. The plaster which was manufactured by defendant was put upon the ceiling in a workmanlike manner, but, shortly after being put on, it began to blister and fall off. W., one of defendant's officers, was called in to examine the work, and he told plaintiff to replaster the ceilings at once, and send the bill to him, and he would pay it. Nothing was said about what materials should be used in replastering, and the same kind was used. Plaintiff had to replaster again, as the coat put on under the agreement with W. fell off. Held, in an action to recover the cost of the work done under the agreement with W., that plaintiff assented to W.'s proposal, which was a binding contract on both plaintiff and W. or defendants whom W. represented; it being supported by the mutual promises of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 22*)—UNILATERAL CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE BY ONE PARTY—EFFECT.

Though the contract was unilateral in the first instance, it became binding on defendant when plaintiff had done the work and incurred expenses under it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 52*)—CONSIDERATION—RESTRICTIONS.

Plaintiff's original contract did not bind him to use defendant's cement on the original work or in replastering, but as it was likely that plaintiff and W. understood that the replastering was to be done with it, thereby plaintiff's obligation was more restricted and onerous than the original contract, and was supported by that consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 52*)—CONSIDERATION—DETREMENT TO PROMISEE.

Though plaintiff under his original contract was bound to replaster, and though he was not bound by his agreement with W. to use defendant's cement, W.'s conduct in cutting off further investigation as to where the responsibility lay for the failure of the plaster to adhere, and directing plaintiff to replaster at once, was such a detriment as to be a valid consideration for their contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 223, 224; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Moses N. Sale, Judge.

Action by Michael Nicholson against the Acme Cement Plaster Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

E. C. Gerhard contracted with the board of education of the city of St. Louis to erect the Webster School Building. He sublet the contract for the plastering to plaintiff, subject to the conditions of the main contract between Gerhard and the board of education.

One of those conditions was that the contractor would guarantee for two years the plastering on the ceilings should remain in place. Every subcontractor bidding on a portion of the work was bound to read the specifications in the contract of the main contractor, and it was provided that persons who proposed for subcontracts agreed to carry out the terms of the drawings and specifications. The main contract, which became binding on plaintiff when his bid for the plastering was accepted, required as follows:

"To be plastered throughout as above specified, with one of the following cement plasters: Acme, Royal, O. K., Peerless, Agatite, Fire Pulp, or Fitzgerald's Peoria Cement Plaster. Plastering to be done in strict accordance with the manufacturer's directions for a first-class job. Plaster the ceilings throughout with as thin a coat of plaster as possible to make a straight job, using neat Acme wainscot finish; the same to be mixed with clean water to the proper consistency for use. In case concrete lintels are used, this contractor shall include the plastering of all lintels, etc., in the basement.

"Guarantee: The contractor for plastering will be required to guarantee that the plastering upon the ceilings will remain in place—said guarantee to be for a period of two years dating from the issue of the final certificate to the general contractor. All of the above work to be a strictly first-class job to the satisfaction of the commissioner."

Plaintiff bought Acme cement plaster to use in the building. This plaster appears to have stood well on the walls, but much of that put on the ceilings cracked, blistered, and fell off; so that the work of plastering the ceilings was not satisfactory to the building commissioner, and it became incumbent on Gerhard, as general contractor, to make it good, and, in turn, Nicholson was responsible on his guaranty for two years. The Acme Cement Company had published pamphlets in which it advertised its plaster as possessing strong adhesive qualities, and adhering firmly to brick, stone, terra cotta, and wood; also describing the plaster and expatiating on its qualities and superiority over other plasters, saying it was guaranteed in every particular as far as the nature of the material was concerned, but had to be put on in a certain way to secure the best results, and setting out the mode in which it should be spread, saying, further, it always proved satisfactory to architects, owners, and plasterers when properly used. We are not much concerned with those matters, and suffice to say about them the evidence goes to show the plaster was laid on the ceilings of the building in question in a workmanlike manner. After it began to blister, crack, and fall off, there was a parley between the general contractor Gerhard, the superintendent walker, who appears to have been the responsible officer of the defendant company. He examined the work, as did also a Mr. Dugan, who was connected with the company, and Mr. Toensfeldt, the structural engineer for the board of education. The board was insisting Gerhard, the general contractor, repair the ceilings at once and go on with the work, so the building would be ready for the opening of school in January, and Gerhard was insisting Nicholson make the repairs forthwith. The upshot of the matter was that Walker, representing defendant company, told plaintiff to replaster the ceilings at once, send him the bill, and he would pay it. This, in substance, is what the evidence tends to prove. The plaster had adhered to concrete well in other instances when plaintiff used it, and it is not made clear why it was a failure in this one; the evidence on the point being inconsistent. There was some that Walker said the plaster was too rich, other testimony he said it never would adhere to concrete, and other evidence that he said he would have some of it examined to see what was wrong with it. There was abundant evidence to prove the plaster was bad and had not adhered, though it was spread on properly; as there was also to prove Walker told Nicholson to replaster the ceilings and he would not lose a cent, or as some of the witnesses said, send him the bill, and he would pay it. When the interview occurred among the different persons interested, including Walker, there had been no official action by the board of education through the building commissioner rejecting the work, but the parties were merely investigating and debating the cause of the plaster falling off, and called Walker in to get his opinion. Gerhard said he was bound to have a first-class job done on the ceilings, and looked to Nicholson, and Nicholson said he would have had to replaster to make the job according to specifications, even if Walker had not directed him to do so, and agreed to bear the expense. Nothing was said in so many words about what material should be used in replastering, but Acme cement was used. In the conversations antecedent to Walker's agreement with Nicholson to bear the expense, the latter, according to Gerhard's testimony, felt like he ought not to stand any loss because of the condition of the ceilings. He was thinking about going on to Johannes, the dealer from whom he had bought the cement, but had not done so as yet. In fact, when Walker agreed with Nicholson, nothing definitely had been determined about the latter's responsibility, or whether the material was at fault, and, if so, in what respect, whether it would be wise to use it again, or who was liable. These matters were all undetermined.

son had to replaster a second time, for the coat put on under his agreement with Walker fell off; but he seeks no recovery for the second replastering. The cost of the work done under the agreement with Walker was about $900, including repainting, material, and wages to plasterers and common laborers. When the bill was presented to Walker, he declined to pay it, saying he expected a bill of from $50 to $100, and, if a reasonable one had been presented, he would have paid it.

At the conclusion of the testimony, the court instructed the jury to return a verdict for defendant, and, judgment having been entered accordingly, this appeal was taken.

Daniel Dillon and Paul Dillon, for appellant. W. E. Fisse, for respondent.

GOODE, J. (after stating the facts as above). Plaintiff was defeated on the theory there was no consideration for Walker's promise to pay the cost of replastering the ceilings, because plaintiff was under a contract with Gerhard to do so if the plaster first put on crumbled, and hence in agreeing with Walker and performing under the agreement he neither undertook to do, nor did, more than was within the scope of his obligation to Gerhard. It is important at the outset to determine what this obligation was. We hold it was to do "a strictly first-class job to the satisfaction of the commissioner," and guarantee the plastering upon the ceilings would remain in place two years. The job as first done was concededly a failure, and, to perform his contract, it was incumbent on plaintiff to do it over so as to make it first class. His obligation was not limited to his guaranty in the sense that he had an option to respond in damages on his guaranty or make the job first class. It is true he might have refused to replaster, and perhaps, as the contract was for personal services, he could not have been forced to do so, and Gerhard's only remedy against him would have been in damages. But, if these things are true, it does not follow plaintiff would have performed his obligation by paying damages, though he might have discharged his legal liability. We are no friends to the doctrine which finds a consideration for a promise to pay additional compensation for the performance of a contract on the theory that the party to the contract was only bound to perform or pay damages at his option, and therefore the promise of further compensation to induce him to perform is good, because it secures to the promisee the service he wants instead of leaving him to his remedy in damages. As to this phase of the subject, we agree with the views expressed in Harriman, Contracts (2d Ed.) §§ 117-125, inclusive, and 8 Harvard Law Rev. pp.

27-30. But neither are we friendly to highly strained technical rules in regard to the consideration of contracts, whereby agreements which parties understood to be complete and valid contracts are annulled. In this matter, more than others, it is important to keep the law in accord with the understanding of the people; and it is our opinion that hardly any man, except an astute lawyer, if placed as plaintiff was, would doubt he had a good contract with Walker to pay the cost of replastering. It is a fair inference from the circumstances in proof that plaintiff assented to Walker's proposal for him to replaster at Walker's expense. If this was true, there were mutual promises which, according to reason and some authority, would constitute a contract binding on both plaintiff and Walker, or defendant whom the latter represented. Langdell in 19 Harv. Law Rev. 496; Harriman, Contracts, § 94. Whether plaintiff accepted the proposal in words or not, he accepted by conduct to Walker's knowledge, and replastered forthwith pursuant to the arrangement. If the agreement was unilateral in the first instance, according to the general doctrine, it became binding on defendant when plaintiff had done the work and incurred expense under it. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Century Bldg. Co. (Sup.) 119 S. W. 400. When those two propositions of law are to be applied to a case where the new contract deals with the same subject-matter as a previous contract between one of the parties and another person, the courts of the United States for the most part do not treat the new mutual promises, or even performance under them, as sufficient consideration for the agreement, if the performing party already was under an obligation to do the identical thing. In such instances it is conceived there is no detriment to him from the new agreement, and whatever benefit, if any, accrues to the other party to said agreement, is held not an adequate consideration. Plaintiff's original contract did not bind him to use Acme cement in replastering, but he could choose among several kinds. The witnesses testified nothing was said about what material he should repair with; but likely he and Walker understood the replastering was to be done with Acme. If this was true, plaintiff's obligation was more restricted and onerous than the one he was under with Gerhard, and there could be no doubt that it was supported by a consideration. Corrigan v. Detsch, 61 Mo. 290. As the right to deduce this inference from the evidence is somewhat dubious, we will assume Walker's proposal meant plaintiff might use any of the cements mentioned in the specifications. Considered in this aspect, the case strikes us, after much search among the books, as one of first impression in respect of the posture of affairs when Walker's promise was given. There are numerous decisions by the courts of this country that a promise given to a stranger by one party to a contract to do what he was already bound to do is no consideration for an agreement by the stranger to pay for the performance. 1 Parsons, Contracts (9th Ed.) p. 478, and note; Harriman, Contracts (2d Ed.) § 122; Walds-Pollock, Contracts (3d Ed.) p. 209, note 19. The rule is the other way in England and in a few cases in this country. Abbott v. Doane, 163 Mass. 433, 40 N. E. 197, 34 L. R. A. 33, 47 Am. St. Rep. 465, and annotations. An examination of the cases in which this proposition has been decided shows the underlying policy of the rule is to prevent persons from extorting compensation beyond what was agreed upon at first for complying with their contracts or discharging a duty imposed by law. The spirit of the rule is found in the maxim that a man will not be suffered to take advantage of his own wrong, and properly applied it is a wholesome rule. If allowed to control the decision of a case like the one before us, the reason and policy of it are forgotten, and its application becomes not only arbitrary, but unjust and mischievous. Considered from a commercial point of view, defendant had a strong motive to get the work done over without the faults of the plastering becoming generally known, as would happen if there was a prolonged dispute or litigation. It cannot be said this motive amounted to a consideration, for the financial benefit defendant would obtain from having the subject dropped, would be indirect, and not accrue from its agreement with plaintiff, to whom it was not liable for defects in the plaster. But let us look closely at the situation when the agreement was made, and the effect of it on plaintiff's conduct. It had not yet been settled what caused the plaster to drop, or whether the circumstances were such as to constitute a breach of plaintiff's contract. The questions of where the fault was and where the responsibility rested were under discussion. Conceding the conclusion would have been reached that plaintiff was bound to replaster, it then would have been for him to decide whether he would use Acme or some other plaster in the work. Now granting the arrangement with Walker did not bind plaintiff to use Acme, Walker's conduct in cutting off further investigation of said matters and directing plaintiff to replaster at once at least caused plaintiff to waive a further examination into his obligation and responsibility and further deliberation upon whether he would replaster with Acme cement or some other. On deliberation plaintiff might have decided to use a different plaster instead of making a second experiment with a kind that had failed; and in point of fact his re-use of Acme appears to have entailed on him the task of replastering a second time at his own loss. But the essential fact is that, while plaintiff's obligation was under examination and in controversy, the matter was brought to a close by the agreement between plaintiff and defendant. The case resembles Good Fellows v. Campbell, 17 R. I. 402, 22 Atl. 307, where it appeared a sister who had been named as beneficiary of a certificate of insurance, while ignorant of the fact, agreed the insurance money might be distributed among all her brother's heirs, including herself. She was held bound by the agreement for this reason, among others: That who was entitled to the fund was uncertain when the agreement was made, and the parties agreed in consideration of mutual chances. See loc. cit., 17 R. I. 405, 22 Atl. 307, and cases cited; also Harriman, Contracts, § 109. The situation with which we are dealing is not that of a party attempting to extort additional pay for doing something he had bound himself to do, for plaintiff was not attempting to evade his obligation, but to ascertain it and settle on how to perform it. We think there was a detriment to plaintiff in agreeing with Walker and performing the agreement, and, if there was, the arrangement became a contract supported by a valid consideration. Strode v. Transit Co., 197 Mo., loc. cit. 622, 95 S. W. 851; Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Century Bldg. Co., supra. We say nothing about whether the repairing was done for reasonable prices, as that is a matter for the triers of the fact.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded. All concur.

DALPINE v. LUME et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 16, 1909.)

1. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 19*)—IMPEACHMENT—MISTAKE.

A compromise will not be disturbed by a court of equity because of a mistake either of law or fact, in absence of inequitable conduct of the other party affecting the complaining party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 67, 73; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§§ 5, 19*)—NATURE OF TRANSACTION—COMPROMISE OR SETTLEMENT.

Where the accounts of a partnership were examined, and a balance struck, after an inventory was made in the presence of all the parties, and some $60 was found to be due a partner as his share, his offer to take $100 and retire from the firm was an offer to compromise, and not a final settlement, and he cannot have it set aside because of any mistake in striking the balance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 10-16, 67-75; Dec. Dig. §§ 5, 19.*]

3. EQUITY (§ 66*)—MAXIMS—NECESSITY OF DOING EQUITY.

One coming into equity must do equity, and cannot repudiate a transaction without returning to the other party what he has received thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 188-190; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 72*)—EQUITY—OFFER TO DO EQUITY.

A general prayer for relief and offer to do equity is sufficient, in order to invoke the powers of equity to set aside an inequitable transaction, without specifically pleading a tender of the money received thereunder, as the court will require complainant to put the other party in statu quo as the price of its decree.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Moses N. Sale, Judge.

Suit by Ugo Dalpine against Angelo Lume and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This is a suit by plaintiff against his former partners, the defendants, to set aside what is alleged to be a settlement arrived at between them on the dissolution of the partnership. The original petition charged fraud and mutual mistake, and avers: That, relying upon the representations of the defendants and correctness of figures, plaintiff had received and accepted the sum of $70.39 in full settlement of his interest in the partnership business and withdrew from the firm; that the defendants appropriated to themselves all the balance of the accrued profits of the partnership business, which plaintiff alleges were of the value of about $3,611.30, net, in which he avers his share is $487.23, less $70.39 paid him; that, on account of that fraud and mutual mistake, the settlement made should be vacated, and an accounting of the business and profits of the partnership be had, and the rights of the parties established; and that the court enter a decree dissolving the partnership and render a decree in favor of plaintiff for such sum as is found to be justly due him, and for general relief. The answer was a general denial. After the evidence was concluded, the court proceeded to render judgment, placing its finding in favor of defendants on the conclusion the court had arrived at, that there had been no fraud attempted or practiced on the plaintiff. Whereupon plaintiff's counsel asked leave to amend by striking out the allegation of fraud and to stand on the allegations of error and mutual mistake. The court permitted this to be done, and, taking the case under advisement, dismissed the case, finding for the defendants. Whereupon plaintiff appealed, having filed a motion for new trial, which was overruled; plaintiff duly saving exceptions.

It appears from the evidence in the case that plaintiff and defendants had formed a partnership to carry on the business of grocers, in St. Louis. After the partnership had existed for about a year, it appears to have been agreed that it should be dissolved and a division made of the firm assets. A paper to that effect was drawn up in Italian by one of the defendants; all the parties being of that nationality. This paper was introduced in evidence by plaintiff, which, translated, is as follows: "The division will be made on the basis of the inventory, whether from the inventory there should be a gain or loss. The gain or loss will be divided among the partners in equal parts." It does not appear that this paper was signed by anybody, and the averment in the petition as amended is that the partnership itself was a verbal one; no written articles appearing ever to have been drawn up. Acting under this understanding or agreement, the defendants and plaintiff, with a Mr. Nasse, who had been requested by the defendant Lume to act as a sort of appraiser in the matter, met and proceeded to take and make an inventory and appraisal of the goods, accounts, credits, and debits, with a view of arriving at a basis for a dissolution. There was some evidence to the effect that plaintiff had offered to sell out his interest to one or both of the defendants, asking in the neighborhood of $300 for his interest. The inventory and appraisal were made by, or in the presence of, three men and the plaintiff; so far as we can gather from the record, the three partners being present, plaintiff acting for himself, and Mr. Nasse acting for the other two. Several days were consumed in making up this statement and reducing it to writing, and on its completion the partners and Mr. Nasse meeting, the latter stated to the plaintiff, according to the latter, that there was $70 coming to him. While Mr. Nasse was making the calculations from which he arrived at this result, plaintiff was sitting by him. According to Mr. Nasse's testimony, he went over the ledger with the plaintiff, added the outstanding accounts to the inventory, and, after they got through that, took the liabilities and deducted that from the former figure, then put down the three accounts in rotation, and took off what each man had drawn. Quoting Mr. Nasse: "The business showed a profit of so much, and Mr. Dalpine was sitting there, and I here (indicating), and the other two were standing on the other side, and after we had got the figures down we both added them, and I said, 'There is some 60 odd dollars that is coming to you, Mr. Dalpine.' I think that was the amount. I know it was not a hundred dollars, and we didn't examine the figures again. We just had them on yellow sheets of paper, and after we had this balance Mr. Dalpine said, 'Give me $100 and I will walk out,' and I told Mr. Lume that that would be the best way to settle it, and he said, 'You pay him $100,' and I told him I would do so, and they then wrote up the dissolution of partnership, and Mr. Dalpine then wrote out a receipt. This receipt reads: 'Received of Mr. Lume $100 in full of account in law and equity.'" This witness further testified that, as Mr. Dalpine was writing the receipt, he asked witness how to spell the word "equity," and, after he was told, he asked witness what it meant, and witness explained it to him. Testifying as to what took place at the time when they were going over the figures, plaintiff said that Mr. Nasse told him that there was just $70 coming to him, whereupon he said: "If I have $70 coming, I ask $100 to go out of business, because we had another stock of goods to be calculated at half the amount of costs not included in that inventory. I just trusted on what Mr. Nasse said. They gave me a check made by Mr. Nasse. I go down to his business place after the inventory, and he gave me a check for $100." Plaintiff further testified that the day after that he talked with a friend, who was an expert accountant, and he told him there must be some mistake or misrepresentation about the matter, that he went to see Mr. Nasse, and told him that there must be a mistake about the inventory he had made the day before. Mr. Nasse said: "Well, I don't think so. What you say is a mistake is only money that must be paid on the expenses of the firm." Plaintiff afterwards went back to Mr. Nasse, accompanied by some one who spoke better English than he did, and had him explain the matter to Mr. Nasse, and Mr. Nasse said that, if it was the way he said, he would talk to defendants and have the matter settled. No other settlement, however, was made between the parties.

The defendant Lume, giving his version of the transaction, states that plaintiff, when the matter of dissolution was talked of, said he would rather take $300 for his share and step out, whereupon Lume told him to collect all the money he could, and when he came back they would see how the firm stood. Plaintiff went out and collected some $268, out of which he retained some $18 for expenses and put the balance, $250, in his pocket. After this the inventory and appraisal was entered upon. Mr. Lume's version of the transaction is that, after Mr. Nasse had figured with Mr. Dalpine, Mr. Nasse and Mr. Dalpine having done all the figuring in the matter, and neither Devoti nor himself (Lume) having anything to do with the figures, and after Nasse and Dalpine had gone over the papers, and Nasse had told Dalpine that his share was about $60 or $70: "Mr. Dalpine jumped off the chair and said, 'If you give me $100, I will walk out,' and Mr. Nasse said, 'What do you think about it?' And I said, 'I would like to give you the $100, Mr. Dalpine, but I haven't got it in my pocket,' and Mr. Nasse said, 'I will loan you $100.' And afterwards Mr. Dalpine writes some paper receipt, and a paper dissolving the partnership. The receipt said Mr. Dalpine got $100 in full payment 'in law and equity.' I remember Mr. Dalpine asked Mr. Nasse how to spell 'equity.'" On cross-examination this defendant testified that the object of taking the inventory was for the purpose of showing the condition so that Dalpine could either buy them out or they could buy him out. "Mr. Dalpine asked for $300, and I wanted to know how the firm's affairs were. The object was not to make a general dissolution, but to arrive at an amount at which one was to buy the other out." Asked if his idea was that they were not to dissolve the partnership and make a distribution of the profits and losses, but merely to determine the condition of the business so that he would have a basis for buying or selling, witness said: "No, my intention was, when the place paid all the debts, to divide it. My intention was to dissolve the partnership and pay the debts first and then divide it afterwards."

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). Probably with more particularity than necessary, we have set out the salient facts in the case as developed at the trial, not, however, giving figures of the basis of settlement, as, in the view we take of the case, that is not material. In our view of this case and of the testimony in it, the settlement arrived at between plaintiff and the defendant by which $100 were paid to plaintiff, and for which he signed the receipt heretofore copied, comes more closely under the domain of a compromise of disputed matters than a case of intended settlement and adjustment of accounts between the parties with the nicety usually requisite in arriving at a basis for a settlement on dissolution of a firm. Referring it to the class of compromises, we find the rule in equity to be that such transactions "will not be disturbed for any ordinary mistake, either of law or of fact, in the absence of conduct otherwise inequitable, since their very object is to settle all such possible errors without a judicial controversy." 2 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) § 850. The author further calls attention to the fact that there are dicta "to the effect that a party will be relieved from a compromise in which he has surrendered property or other rights unquestionably his own, through a misconception of a clear legal rule, or an erroneous supposition that a legal duty rested upon him, whereas plainly no such duty existed; but the decisions show that these dicta must be confined to circumstances which render the compromise virtual surprise, or to cases in which it was induced by positive inequitable conduct of the other parties. Voluntary settlements are so favored that if a doubt or dispute exists between parties with respect to their rights, and all have the same knowledge, or means of obtaining knowledge, concerning the circumstances involving these rights, and there is no fraud, misrepresentation, concealment, or other misleading incident, a compromise into which they thus voluntarily enter must stand and be enforced, although the final issue may be different from that which was anticipated, and although the disposition made by the parties in their agreement may not be that which the court would have decreed had the controversy been brought before it for decision."

It is pretty plain that, according to the statement drawn up by Dalpine and Nasse, and according to the way the interests of the respective parties were then cast up, there was only about $60 or $70 coming to this plaintiff. That may or may not have been the correct amount. It may have been the result of applying a wrong rule of accounting, adopted by Mr. Nasse; but when plaintiff, with the facts before him, ended the matter by saying that he would retire if he were paid $100, it is pretty clear that he was not relying upon the agreement of dissolution or the correctness of Mr. Nasse's figures, but was making an offer that can bear no interpretation, but an offer of compromise. It is true that in his testimony plaintiff said something about the extra $30 covering some stock not taken into account. That can hardly be, however, for the testimony of Mr. Nasse and of the plaintiff himself is that the inventory and appraisalment was complete and covered everything, and, indeed, the only contention now made is, not that there was something excluded from the inventory and the appraisalment, but that a mistake has been made in the manner of distributing this surplus, a misapplication of proper accounting or bookkeeper's rules—legal rules, more accurately, in the distribution of this surplus. To end the matter between them, however, plaintiff asked and was paid $100, and he himself drew up a receipt, with full understanding of the terms, acknowledging full payment of all claims at law or in equity, even being careful to have the term "equity" explained to him. It is a serious question in this case as to whether the mistake, under these facts, is one of law or of fact. The decisions on this point turn upon such nice distinctions that, while that point is suggested by counsel for defendants, we do not think it necessary to enter into it. Counsel make the further point that there was no offer upon the part of the plaintiff, either in his petition or at the trial, to return the $100, which beyond dispute were paid to him. It is a rule, without exception, that one coming into a court of equity must do equity, and, before he can have the transaction undone which he desires to repudiate, he must be required to return all that he has received on account of it; but this need not be by pleading an offer or tender of the return of that which was received. The rule is that where the party inserts a general prayer for relief, and proffers to do equity on his part, these general allegations are sufficient, and the court will require him to refund or put the other party in statu quo as the price of the decree it gives. This has been distinctly held in a number of Missouri cases, which were equitable actions, when treating of the pleadings in them. The case of Whelen v. Reilly, 61 Mo. 565, the opinion by Judge Sherwood, is a leading authority in point. The case of Paguin v. Milliken, 163 Mo. 79, loc. cit. 104-106, 63 S. W. 417, 1092, follows the rule announced in the Whelen Case. This court, in the case of Haydon v. Frisco R. R., 117 Mo. App. 76, loc. cit. 106 and 107, 93 S. W. 833, reviews these authorities and so held. The Haydon Case was affirmed on this point by the Supreme Court, 121 S. W. 15. The rule which requires a party to do equity before he is entitled to equity, as said by Judge Sherwood in Whelen v. Reilly, supra, "finds its application, not in questions of pleading nor by what the plaintiff offers to do therein, but in the form and frame of the orders and decrees, both interlocutory and final, whereby equitable terms are imposed as a condition precedent to equitable relief granted."

Upon consideration of all the facts in the case, we have concluded that the action of the circuit court in finding for the defendants is for the right parties, and its judgment is affirmed. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Dent County; L. B. Woodside, Judge.

Action by W. T. Martin and others against H. A. Bennett and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. P. Elmer and G. C. Dalton, for appellants. J. D. Gustin, for respondents.

GRAY, J. This suit was instituted in the circuit court of Dent county July 11, 1907. The purpose was to procure a perpetual injunction restraining the appellants from selling certain school bonds issued by the Salem school district, and from erecting a schoolhouse on block 17 in the city of Salem. The Salem school district is a city district, and the appellants, except E. L. Dye, are the directors thereof, and said Dye at the time this suit was commenced had entered into a contract with the school board to erect a schoolhouse for the district on block 20, in said city. The respondents are taxpaying citizens of the district. Block 20 lies just west of block 17, and at one time was separated therefrom by a street 40 feet wide. In 1874 the school board erected a fence around the district property, including the street between the blocks, but leaving a way for vehicles on the west side of the district property, and erecting stiles or gates for footmen where the fence was across the street. This fence remained for 20 years as the school grounds of the district. The records of the city were destroyed by fire in 1886, and the evidence does not show that the city of Salem by any official action vacated the portion of the street so fenced. An amended petition was filed alleging that block 17 was the schoolhouse site of the district, and that the board was about to move the site to block 20 without authority of law, and erect a schoolhouse thereon, and issue illegal bonds of the district, and levy taxes on all property in said district to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund with which to redeem them; and further alleging that the erection of said building would necessitate establishing additional closets for the use of the pupils and teachers of said new building, and that no sewers were in said city, and hence the premises near said closets would become unhealthy, and further alleging that the children attending said school would disturb the peace of citizens living in the neighborhood, and that said closets and said disturbance would constitute a public and private nuisance, and praying that all the acts complained of be enjoined. A temporary injunction was granted. By agreement of parties the cause was referred to Hon. C. C. Bland to make a finding on both the facts and the law. The referee in due time made his report finding the district property in block 20 was a part of the schoolhouse site of the district, and not a new site, and failing to find that any private nuisance was about to be created, but finding that the bonds were illegal, and that the board had no right to erect the building on the old school site. The report of the referee was made a part of the judgment of the court, whereby the court adjudged "defendants have no right to erect the contemplated school building upon said described real estate," and the appellants were perpetually enjoined from erecting said building on said premises. On March 12, 1907, the school board at a legal meeting made the following order: "Moved and carried that a proposition be submitted to the qualified voters of Salem school district at the annual election to be held on the 2nd day of April, 1907, authorizing the board of directors of said school district to borrow the sum of ten thousand dollars for the erection of additional school building, and the secretary of the board was requested to give legal notice of the same as the law directs." The secretary posted the notices designating the courthouse as the voting place, and stating the purposes of the election as follows: "Erecting an additional schoolhouse and furnishing the same and for the purchase of a site for said schoolhouse." There was posted in the records of the school board what purported to be a typewritten order of the board calling the election for the purposes suit was commenced. The appellants assert in this court that the petition does not state a cause of action, for the reason that, if the bonds are illegal, then the funds derived therefrom do not belong to the district, and the respondents are not concerned in the expenditures thereof. The petition, however, alleges that the board is about to levy taxes to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a fund for the purpose of redeeming them. Under such circumstances, the courts grant the taxpaying citizens relief by injunction. Ranney v. Bader, 67 Mo. 476; Black v. Ross, 37 Mo. App. 250. The court committed no error in permitting the amended petition to be filed. Cohn v. Souders, 175 Mo. 455, 75 S. W. 413. And appellants answered the amended petition, and did not save the point in their motion for new trial, and therefore the point is not here for review.

This brings us to the real points in the case, to wit: Is there anything in the proceedings of the board to constitute a foundation for the propositions voted on at the election; and was the board authorized to use the money derived from the sale of the bonds in erecting a schoolhouse on the old site? In Thornburg v. School District, 175 Mo., loc. cit. 26, 75 S. W. 84, the court said: "The authority to borrow the money and issue the bonds was devolved on the board of directors, but, before they could exercise the authority, they would have to order an election to ascertain the will of the voters. The board of directors was the organization through which the whole machinery of the law was to operate. The board was required by law to keep a record of its proceedings. That was a public record and to it we must primarily look to ascertain what action the board of school directors took in this matter. * * * Now let us see if there is anything in the proceedings of the board under those dates to constitute a foundation for the action of the directors in issuing the bonds. The only thing in the record of August 2d bearing on the subject is: 'Ordered that notices be posted calling meeting of voters for the purpose of changing site, selling old house, making appropriation of $3,789 or one per cent. on assessed valuation, leaving proceeds arising from sale of present house for seating new house.' That is all there is in this record to support the claim that this board ordered a meeting of the voters to be held on August 28th to consider the proposition to authorize the board to borrow $3,500 to build a schoolhouse and issue bonds to secure the payment thereof. The order of the board does not name a date on which the meeting of the voters is to be held, and it makes no reference to borrowing money. It refers to making an appropriation, but for what purpose is not stated. The statute imposes on the clerk the manual labor of signing and posting the notices, but it does not clothe him with authority to order a meeting of the voters or to designate the day on which an election shall be held. The board alone had authority to do that, but in this instance omitted to do it." It is our duty to follow the decisions of the Supreme Court, and under the authority of the case above quoted from we hold that the order of the board made March 12, 1907, was insufficient in not specifying the place for the election, and on that order the secretary was not authorized to submit the proposition of furnishing the schoolhouse and purchasing a site for the new building.

We do not believe the board was authorized to use the money derived from the sale of the bonds in erecting a new schoolhouse on the old site. The law provides that the board may, when authorized by the voters, issue bonds to purchase a site. Laws 1903, p. 266 (Ann. St. 1906, § 9752a). At the election the voters authorized the board to purchase a site and erect the new schoolhouse thereon. In erecting the new building on the old site the board was not carrying out the will of the voters expressed by their ballots. The respondents maintain that the directors have no authority to establish a school of higher grade than the primary one until they have divided the district into wards and established primary schools therein. The referee in his conclusions of law in our judgment clearly and correctly disposes of this point, as follows: "It is contended by plaintiffs that the board of directors have no authority to build an additional schoolhouse on a site when one has been built and is standing. Section 9865, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4523), is made the basis of this contention. The section provides that the board may establish a school of higher grade than the primary one. The statute is silent as to the erection of a high school building, and, because silent, the contention is that school boards are without authority to erect a high school building or a building to be used exclusively by the higher grade. The statute should receive a reasonable construction. Such a construction, I think, would authorize school boards of districts organized under article 2, c. 154, Rev. St. 1899, to build additions to a primary school building when the necessities of the district do not demand a division of the district into a primary or ward schools, but prohibits the erection of more than one primary school building on one school site. I think, also, that the authority to establish a high school carries with it the authority to provide a home for the school and to erect a building for the purpose on ground owned or to be acquired by the district. It is shown that the additional building contracted for is to be used as a high school building, and I think the board of directors might have erected such a building on block 20, if that proposition had been submitted to and favorably voted on by the voters of the district." By the terms of the judgment the appellants are forever, jointly and severally, restrained from erecting the schoolhouse on the old site. This was the relief prayed for, but, as the court found the facts and declared the law, the injunction is too broad. We will modify the judgment so as to enjoin the school directors, appellants, and each of them, from using any money obtained or authorized by the election of April 2, 1907, in erecting the schoolhouse.

With this modification, the judgment is affirmed. All concur.

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 22*)—PROOF OF AGENCY—DECLARATIONS OF AGENT.

Agency cannot be proved by the declarations of the agent to third parties.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Robt. M. Foster, Judge.

Action by P. A. Griswold against Max Haas. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

The plaintiff, respondent here, under appointment as commissioner by the court, advertised and auctioned six bonds in an electric railway, light, and power company; the bonds having come into the possession of the circuit court of the city of St. Louis through plaintiff as its commissioner, and the court having ordered a sale thereof. The sale was advertised to take place; the conditions being a cash payment of $15 at the time of the sale, and balance to be paid when sale was approved by the court. The petition or statement in the case, the case having been originally instituted before a justice of the peace, after stating these facts, set out: That, at the sale, the defendant being the highest and best bidder for the bonds, they were struck off and sold to him for $278; that defendant then paid to plaintiff $15, the cash payment required; that the sale was afterwards approved by the court; that afterwards plaintiff made a tender of the bonds to the defendant, demanding the balance, $261, but defendant refused to pay that or receive the bonds. The statement further avers that plaintiff is now, and has ever been, ready to deliver the bonds to the defendant upon payment of the purchase price, and that afterwards the circuit court ordered plaintiff to institute legal proceedings to recover the balance of the purchase price. Judgment is prayed for the $261 and interest. Judgment going against defendant in the justice's court, he appealed to the circuit court. On a trial there before the court, a jury having been waived, these facts were developed: Plaintiff, preliminary to the trial, stated that he had the bonds in court and tendered them to defendant in open court. Tender does not appear to have been accepted. Being sworn as a witness in his own behalf, plaintiff offered in evidence the files of the case in the course of which the bonds had come into his possession by order of the court as commissioner. The abstract states that the files themselves were offered in evidence, and the bill of exceptions calls for their insertion; but they are not in the abstract. Sufficient, however, appears in the abstract to show beyond controversy what these files contain, so far as is necessary to understand the facts in this case.

Plaintiff testified, with these files before him, that he had offered these bonds for sale on the date set out in the petition in this case, and that at the sale the defendant, Haas, was the highest and best bidder for them at the price set out in the petition here filed. Plaintiff further testified that the sale was made, and he had so announced it at the time, subject to the approval of the court. After bidding off the bonds, defendant deposited $15 with him, and he reported the sale to the court, and it was approved. Thereupon he notified defendant, who declined to complete the purchase and pay the balance, tendered the bonds to defendant, and demanded the money. He refused to receive the bonds or to pay the money, and it had never been paid. The balance due and unpaid is $261. On cross-examination plaintiff stated: That, while he could not say who all were present at that sale, he remembered defendant being present, and also Mr. Denvir. He first read the advertisement, and then called for bids, and there were two bidders, Mr. Denvir and defendant, and the defendant's bid was the last and highest. That he struck the bonds off to Mr. Haas and asked him (Haas) who was the purchaser. Haas said, "G. F. McLain." That thereupon he made his report to the court, and that report set out that the sale was to G. F. McLain for the price named. Plaintiff further testified: That, after the approval of the sale, he went to Mr. McLain, who repudiated any interest in the matter, said he knew nothing about it, never authorized Haas to use his name, never put up the $15 that was bid, and that Mr. Haas was not his agent in the matter; that thereupon he (plaintiff) went to Haas and made a demand upon him, and he refused to take the bonds. He repeated that when the bonds were knocked down, and Haas was asked for the name of the purchaser, he gave the name of G. F. McLain as the purchaser. Haas said he bought them for G. F. McLain. He did not say that he was buying them for himself. All that occurred was that witness asked him who was the purchaser, and he said, "G. F. McLain." On redirect examination plaintiff was asked, when defendant bid on the bonds, whether he bid as purchaser himself or as representing some one else, and witness answered, "Well, there was nothing said about representing any one until I asked for the name of the purchaser." That was after the bidding was closed, and after he had accepted the bid made by defendant. Plaintiff then put Mr. McLain on the stand as a witness; but on the suggestion of the court that Mr. McLain should be called in rebuttal, and not in chief, which the court suggested after Mr. McLain had testified, plaintiff withdrew him.

Plaintiff thereupon resting, defendant was examined as a witness in his own behalf. He testified: That he appeared at the sale of these bonds; that to the best of his recollection he bid on the bonds, and they were knocked down to him; that plaintiff, apparently acting as auctioneer, then asked him for whom the bonds were bought, and defendant said that he had bought them for G. F. McLain. Defendant's counsel then asked witness for whom he had appeared at that sale. He answered that he appeared for G. F. McLain. Upon counsel for plaintiff objecting, on the ground that agency could not be proved by the testimony of the agent himself, the court sustained the objection, saying: "Can't prove agency by the agent himself." Exception was duly saved to this ruling of the court. Witness was asked by the court how much he had paid down at the time of the sale, and he said that he had heard the testimony about his having paid $15, but the matter had gone out of his mind, and that, without referring to books and papers in his office, he could not testify from personal recollection, but he had no doubt that the amount previously testified, namely, $15, had been paid by him. He further stated that as a matter of fact he did not know the amount of the purchase price until he read the petition in this case read in court; had entirely forgotten the details of the transaction as to how the payment was made or the amount of the bid. He was certain, however, that he gave the name of Mr. McLain as the purchaser, and that he paid the $15, or whatever the amount was, by check. Whether it was his own check or not he could not say; but it was not McLain's check. Said that he could answer these matters if he was allowed to refer to his books. He was then asked if he had any conversation with Mr. McLain before going to the sale, and he said he had; that his recollection of the matter was that he "stepped into McLain's office the morning of the sale and told McLain he would buy the bonds for him, and he asked if it was all right, and I told him it was." On cross-examination he stated that McLain had not furnished him the $15; that Mr. McLain did not have the money at that time. This is all the testimony on the part of defendant.

Whereupon Mr. McLain was put on the witness stand by plaintiff in rebuttal, and he was asked if he had heard the testimony of Mr. Haas. He said he had, and, on being asked to state whether or not the conversation which defendant had narrated occurred prior to the sale of the bonds, he answered: "Well, something similar to that occurred, but after the sale of the bonds. I didn't know there was any such sale to take place at all. He had been down here and purchased the bonds in my name and came back and told me and asked me if it is all right. I told him I thought it was if it is all right. He said it is all right. I told him he would have to protect me in case anything came up." After the sale was made, witness testified, Haas came back and told him that he had used his (McLain's) name. Had not had any conversation previous to the sale of the bonds with Haas; in fact, does not now know what the bonds are. Haas had not said anything to him as to whether or not he (McLain) should pay for the bonds. He (Haas) bought them for himself.

This was all the testimony in the case. The court found for plaintiff, and defendant, after an unsuccessful motion for new trial, perfected an appeal to this court.

Henry H. Furth, for appellant. John B. Denver, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). The ruling of the court that the fact of agency could not be proved by the testimony of the agent when on the witness stand, when asked concerning his agency, is such patent error as to in itself call for the reversal of the judgment. It is true that agency cannot be proved by the declarations of the agent to third parties and then putting those third parties on the stand and having them testify as to what the agent told them. Such testimony is excluded, not only as not the best evidence, but as hearsay. That is very far from holding, however, that, when the witness is on the stand himself, he cannot testify as to the fact of his agency. He is entirely competent, unless disqualified for some other reason, to testify as to that fact. It is true that the defendant afterwards testified as to what took place between himself and McLain, and this testimony appears to have been admitted without any objection by counsel or by the court; but, as we have the declaration from the court that the agent could not prove his agency by his own testimony, we are bound to assume that the court gave the testimony of the defendant no consideration whatever in arriving at the determination of the question of agency. If this had been a trial before a jury, the subsequent admission of evidence theretofore ruled out would have done away with the exception made; but, as this was a trial before the court without a jury, we cannot do otherwise than assume that the court heard and determined the case on the theory that he had announced in ruling out the testimony.

But a far more serious question is presented on the record in this case. This is an action to recover the purchase price of goods alleged to have been sold to the defendant, and the statement or petition filed avers a sale to the defendant, a report of that sale to the court, and an approval by the court. The testimony of plaintiff himself discloses a fatal departure from the allegations of the petition, inasmuch as it discloses a sale to McLain, a report to the court of the fact of a sale to McLain, and an approval and confirmation by the court of a sale to McLain. He is not sued as agent, nor for deceit in pretending to be agent when in fact he was principal. In Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 567, 89 Am. Dec. 64, the Supreme Court of that state has said: "If an agent, in executing the contract, employ terms which, in legal effect, charge himself, he may be sued upon the instrument itself as a contracting party. This is so because by the use of such terms he has made the contract his own; but if the instrument does not contain such terms, or, in other words, contains language which in legal effect binds the principal only, the agent cannot be sued on the instrument itself for the obvious reason that the contract is not his. If then the contract is not binding upon the principal because the agent had no authority to make it, and is not binding on the agent because it does not contain apt words to charge him personally, it is wholly void." In Wright v. Baldwin, 51 Mo. 269, our Supreme Court held that the proper action, in a case of this kind, where one falsely represents himself as an agent, is not on the contract itself, but against the agent for damages. While it is true that our Code has abolished the distinction between the forms of action, and equally true that one can waive the tort and sue in assumpsit, said: "The law is well settled that where a person acts professedly for another, but without authority, he renders himself individually liable. There was formerly some difference of opinion as to the form of action in which he could be held; but it is well settled now that the action may be either on the case for deceit or in assumpsit upon the express or implied warrant of authority. If he knowingly and falsely represents that he had authority to act, the former remedy is the appropriate one. If he makes the representation in good faith, then the latter remedy should be pursued." After citing Mechem on Agency, § 549, and cases in the reports of this state and of New York, Judge Biggs concludes that the defendant in the case could not be held in that action, which was one for goods sold and delivered. That is this case, and this covers it so completely that it is useless to discuss it further.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed. All concur.

KIDD v. PURITANA CEREAL FOOD CO.
(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 17, 1906.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 156*)—PREFERRED STOCK—RIGHTS OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1901, §§ 5064-5068, authorizes corporations to issue preferred stock. Section 5067 provides that such stock shall not exceed double the amount of the common stock, and shall be redeemable at par as expressed in the certificates, and that the holders of such stock shall be entitled to such semiannual dividend as may be expressed in the certificates, not exceeding 4 per cent., before any dividend shall be set aside or paid on the common stock, that the preferred stockholders, shall not be personally liable for the debts of the company, but in case of insolvency or dissolution the debts or other liabilities shall be paid in preference to such stock, but that such stock shall have priority out of the assets of the company over common stock, for the full face value, with all arrears of interest or dividends. Section 5068 provides that preferred stock shall not be voted, and the holder shall have no voice in the management of the corporation, but that the company may not convey its real estate or mortgage any of its property without the written consent of a majority of the preferred stock, nor, without such consent, declare any dividend on its common stock that will impair its capital. Held that, as a general rule of law, holders of preferred stock are not entitled to dividends unless the earnings justify the directors in paying them, and that the principal privilege such stockholders enjoy is priority of claim to dividends over the holders of common shares, and that a holder of preferred stock could not recover semiannual dividends on his stock where the same had not been declared by the corporation.

impaired the demands of its creditors be postponed.

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 153*)—PREFERRED STOCK—RIGHTS OF SHAREHOLDERS.

Merely denominating shares "preferred stock" in a legislative act does not per se define the rights and character of the holder of such shares, as those depend on the essential qualities of the transaction authorized by the statute, and the fact that installments to be paid on such shares are called "interest" in the statute, instead of "dividends," or that the two terms are used interchangeably, is not conclusive whether such installments are dividends or interest, although the name used by the Legislature to designate such shares has a bearing on the character intended to be given them, as under Rev. St. 1890, § 4160 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2252), words of a statute are to be taken in their ordinary sense unless a different one is called for by the context.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 581-583; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

4. WORDS AND PHRASES—"DEBT."

The essence of a "debt" is a legal liability on the part of one person to pay money to another at some time, which liability is enforceable by a judicial action.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1864-1886; vol. 8, p. 7628.]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 152*)—POWER TO PAY INTEREST INSTEAD OF DIVIDENDS—PRIORITY TO DEMANDS OF CREDITORS.

A corporation may bind itself to pay interest, instead of dividends, on stock; but its power to bind itself to pay installments of either kind in priority to demands of creditors must be found in a clear legislative grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 564-567; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 155*)—DIVIDENDS—GUARANTY OF PAYMENT.

A guaranty of dividends by a corporation, pursuant to statutory authority, does not make dividends a debt and payable absolutely; but it simply binds the company to pay them out of net earnings, whether the guaranty payments are called "dividends" or "interest."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 560-563, 568, 576-578; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 155*)—PREFERRED STOCK—COMPELLING COMPANY TO DECLARE DIVIDENDS.

Where it is clear that a dividend should have been declared on preferred shares, a court of equity may compel the company to declare the dividends, or may proceed on the theory that they have been declared; but a dividend cannot be recovered in a legal action until it has been declared.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 560-563, 568-578, 593-603; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Virgil Rule, Judge.

Action by Lulu B. Kidd against the Puritana Cereal Food Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action at law to recover three semiannual dividends of 3 per cent. each, alleged to have been due in September of 1906 and March and September of 1907, on certificate of stock No. 5, of the preferred stock of the Puritana Cereal Food Company, which certificate represented 500 shares of the preferred stock of said company, sold and delivered to plaintiff by the company on May 12, 1904. The company was incorporated under the laws of Indiana, and from the face of the certificate it appears preferred and nonassessable shares of $1 each could be issued to the amount of $30,000. The material parts of the certificate are as follows: "This certificate represents the number of shares herein above stated, of the Preferred Capital Stock of the Puritana Cereal Food Company, redeemable in whole or in part at the will of said company, at par, at any dividend-paying time before the twentieth and after the tenth semiannual dividend has been paid, and said company binds itself to pay a 3 per cent. semiannual dividend hereon." The articles of incorporation of the company were introduced and show its purpose was to manufacture and sell Puritana Mush and other similar food products where profitable sales could be made, and purchase, hold, and sell letters patent and grants of licenses under them on all articles manufactured and sold by defendant. The capital stock was limited to $70,000 common, and, as said, $30,000 preferred, of which only $5,500 had been issued. Plaintiff put in evidence seven sections of volume 2 of Burns' Annotated Statutes of Indiana of the Revision of 1901, to wit, sections 5064 to 5070, inclusive. The sections of the Indiana statutes to which we are referred read as follows:

"Sec. 5064. Preferred Stock. That any manufacturing, mining or other company having a capital stock, which has been or which may hereafter be organized or incorporated under the law of this state, shall have power to create and issue shares of preferred stock in such company of not more than one hundred dollars ($100.00) each, the aggregate amount of which shall at no time exceed double the amount of the common stock of such company.

"Sec. 5065. Provisions in Articles of Association. At the time any such company is organized and incorporated, the incorporators thereof may in their certificate or articles of association provide for the issuance of such preferred stock by such company by stating the amount of preferred stock proposed to be issued and the number of shares into which it is to be divided, and when so provided for in said certificate or articles of association, said company shall be duly authorized and have full power to create and issue certificates for shares of such preferred stock.

"Sec. 5066. Issuing of Preferred Stock. Any such company already organized desiring to create and issue shares of preferred stock in such company may do so at any annual, regular or special meeting of its stockholders, by the vote of the holders of three-fourths of its common stock, and such company may at any such meeting or any subsequent meeting of its stockholders, by a vote of the holders of a majority of its common stock, authorize and empower its board of directors to dispose of and issue such preferred stock upon such terms and conditions as said board of directors may deem best, or as such company may prescribe; and when so authorized the validity of the issuance and the disposition made of such preferred stock by said directors shall in all things be binding and conclusive upon such company. Within thirty days after the time such company has authorized the issuance of preferred stock as provided in this section, it shall cause to be filed with the Secretary of State its certificate in writing, signed by its president and attested by its secretary, duly acknowledged, certifying that the issuance of preferred stock has been authorized by such company, the amount of such preferred stock, the number of shares into which it shall be divided, and the amount of each.

"Sec. 5067. Amount of Limit. Such preferred stock shall not at any time exceed double the amount of the common stock of such company actually subscribed or issued, and it shall be subject to redemption at par at such time or times, and upon such terms and conditions as shall be expressed in the certificates thereof, and the holders of such preferred stock shall be entitled to receive, and said company shall be bound to pay thereon, such semiannual sum or dividend as may be expressed in the certificates, not exceeding four per centum, before any dividend shall be set aside or paid on the common stock of such company, and in no event shall the holders of such preferred stock be individually or personally liable for the debts or other liabilities of such company, but in case of insolvency or upon the dissolution of such company, such debts, or other liabilities shall be paid in preference to such preferred stock. Such preferred stock, however, shall at all times have priority in payment out of the assets of such company over the common stock thereof, for the full face value, together with all arrearages of interest or dividends due thereon.

"Sec. 5068. Stock Not to be Voted. Such preferred stock shall not be voted at any meeting of such company, nor shall the holders thereof, as such, have any voice in the management of the affairs of such company, excepting, however, that such company shall not have authority to convey its real estate or mortgage any of its property without the written consent of the holders of a majority of the shares of such preferred stock; nor shall such company without such consent, declare any dividend upon its common stock that will impair its capital. Such preferred stock shall not entitle the holder thereof to any interest in the assets of such company Sec. 3008. Redemption of Stock Certificate. When any such company has redeemed the preferred stock issued by it under the provision of this act, its directors shall within thirty days thereafter cause to be filed with the Secretary of State their certificate in writing, as directors of such company, duly acknowledged, certifying that such preferred stock has been redeemed; and in default thereof, the directors of such company shall be jointly and severally liable for all debts and liabilities of such company contracted after said thirty days and before said certificate is filed."

Two dividends have been declared and paid on the outstanding preferred shares, one in March, 1905, of 8 per cent., and the second in March, 1906, of 6 per cent. The sum of $316 would be a 6 per cent. dividend on the shares issued, and the secretary of the company said: That in March, 1906, the company had a balance of $1,200 after paying this dividend. That the company had not been able to declare dividends at the semi-annual periods falling due in September of each year, because the sale of Puritana Mush ends with the cold season about the middle of April, and from then on it is the custom to close down the factories operated by defendant until the cold weather commences in the following fall. Hence there were no earnings after March, and there were rentals to be paid while the factories were closed down. He testified further when the dividend period arrived in March, 1907, the company had in bank $1,300; but it was the desire of the directors to develop the business along collateral lines so as to continue operating the factories during the warm weather, and hence they thought it better not to pay any dividend on the preferred stock. His testimony regarding the various items of expense and disbursement of the company during the spring and summer of 1907 was as follows: "Since March, 1907, this defendant company, through its directors, has purchased an oven for the St. Louis plant, paying therefor the sum of $150, which oven is for the baking of cookies and other goods such as are now being sold, and which it is believed will continue to command a sale during the warm weather when the Puritana Mush will not be salable. In addition it has improved its machinery for cleaning and grinding horse-radish, and for the cleaning and preparing of potatoes for potato chips now being sold at St. Louis, the cost of which improvements is in the neighborhood of $100. In addition to this expenditure, the company has been forced into expensive litigation brought in Marion county, Ind., in May, 1907, for the appointment of a receiver for the defendant company, which suit for receiver was brought by Lulu B. Kidd, who is the same person now suing the defendant in this court. After the defendant company was appointed a receiver was refused by the court. Since March, 1907, this defendant company suffered a loss from fire at its St. Louis factory in the sum of about $200. In January, 1906, this defendant company started the manufacture and sale of Puritana Mush in the city of Chicago, Ill., and, owing to the necessity of advertising its goods, the business was conducted at expense without any immediate profit. The factory was closed in the following spring of 1906, and reopened late in the fall of 1906; the two wagons and factory equipment and supplies being stored in a building on which the company paid a rental of $12 a month. The Chicago factory continued in operation until about April, 1907. The season of 1906-07 incurred an expenditure of $225 over and above receipts. The company's business at Chicago has at no time been conducted at a profit, and was not expected by the company to be profitable until the product had been introduced and become known to the consumer. The working capital of this company has not been and is not now sufficient to enable it to expend large sums in advertising, which is necessary to put a new product upon an immediate paying basis. The receipts at Chicago have been encouraging and satisfactory to the defendant company, and the factory is expected to be self-sustaining in the present season. The results further indicate that, when the product has become known to the consumers in Chicago, the profits will be proportionately larger than in cities further south, on account of the longer seasons within which mush is consumed. * * * It is hoped and believed, however, that the policy of the company in extending its business to Chicago, and in adding horse-radish, potato chips, cookies, cakes, and popcorn, that it will be able to extend its seasons so as to continue in operation throughout the entire year, and thereby be able to pay dividends at both semiannual periods on the common as well as the preferred stock."

A balance sheet prepared by the secretary of the company showed a balance on hand of $325.67, on March 3, 1906, after the payment of all running expenses and dividends. Plaintiff introduced in evidence a letter of the secretary dated March 7, 1907, addressed to her, in which he said: That, because of the unusually open winter, the season had not been favorable to the sale of defendant's products; that the directors had long felt some effort should be made to keep the factories running throughout the year, instead of closing down during the warm months; that arranging to do this was entailing expenditures, and, while the profits of the season would justify the payment of a 6 per cent. dividend on the preferred stock, it had been decided to be wise not to pay out a dividend, "in order to market, the construction of an oven to enable defendant to bake cookies, and the extension of its Chicago business. The general manager of the company testified there were no profits in September, 1906, as during the summer defendant was disbursing everything and taking in nothing. The court gave judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

Morrow & Kelly, for appellant. Walton & Baithel, for respondent.

GOODE, J. (after stating the facts as above). The relation of plaintiff to defendant company is argued by her counsel to have been that of creditor, instead of shareholder, and therefore they contend defendant was bound in every contingency to pay the dividends semiannually as stipulated, and whether its net earnings warranted a declaration of dividends, or even if its capital would have been impaired by paying them. The general rule of law is that holders of preference shares in a corporation are no more entitled to dividends, unless the earnings of the company justify the directors to declare and pay them, than are the holders of common shares, for dividends are payable only out of surplus earnings. 2 Clark & Marshall, Priv. Corp. § 529c, and cases cited in note 226; Purdy's Beach, Priv. Corp. § 476; Chaffee v. Railroad, 55 Vt. 110; In re London, etc., Co., L. R. 5 Eq. 525. Usually the holders of preference shares are stockholders of the company, subject to the rights and liabilities attaching to that relation, and the principal privilege they enjoy is priority of claim to dividends as against the holders of common shares, which priority is the prominent characteristic of preferred stock. Kent v. Mining Co., 78 N. Y. 159. Without authority from the Legislature, an incorporated company cannot confer on holders of preferred shares a right to be paid dividends, if the capital of the company will thereby be impaired or the demands of its creditors postponed. Hamlin v. Trust Co., 78 Fed. 664, 24 C. C. A. 271, 36 L. R. A. 826; 2 Clark & Marshall, § 417c; Purdy's Beach, § 476. Instead of the issuance of preferred stock necessarily creating a debt, a standard treatise says such a transaction "is a mode by which a corporation obtains funds for its enterprises without borrowing money or contracting a debt. Its holders (i. e., the holders of preferred stock) are a privileged class who are entitled to dividends of a certain percent. out of the net earnings in priority to any dividends upon ordinary stock." Pierce, Railroad Law, 124. (Italics ours.) But statutes have been enacted in language which was construed to invest a corporation with power to issue preference shares upon terms that made the holders of them not stockholders of the company, but its creditors, and entitled also to payment of the value of the certificates by a certain date. Cases in which it was contended that a person nominally the holder of preference shares, in reality occupied the status of a creditor and should enjoy greater rights as such than he would as a stockholder, have engaged the attention of the courts often enough for the principles upon which the point is to be determined to become settled, though, perhaps, not all the results reached, or all the remarks contained in opinions, can be reconciled. The task of the court in such a controversy is one of interpretation, to determine whether the essential nature of the agreement between the apparent shareholder and the company makes the former a stockholder or a creditor; and the answer to this question always depends on the language of the statute which authorized the company to issue preferred shares, as well as on the language employed in the certificates of shares. It has followed that, while the same principles of interpretation are adopted by all the courts, the conclusions reached in the cases differ, because the statutes differ under which the various companies sued had issued preferred certificates, or what were such in form. The Supreme Court of Georgia said, in dealing with a similar controversy, the question whether the holder of a certificate issued by a corporation is a member of the corporation, or the certificate is simply evidence of a debt due by the corporation to the holder, is one depending on the peculiar facts of each case, and therefore the decisions relating to the questions are only helpful in so far as they lay down general principles to guide in the determination of any case that may be for consideration. Savannah Co. v. Silverberg, 108 Ga. 281, 288, 33 S. E. 908, 911. Nominal stockholders have been treated as actual creditors on several grounds. In some instances the statute involved obviously was enacted simply to empower the company to put out preferred shares and secure them by a lien on its assets, as an alternative mode of borrowing money in lieu of issuing bonds secured by a mortgage on the assets, as the company might have done. Burt v. Rattle, 31 Ohio St. 116; Heller v. Bank, 89 Md. 602, 43 Atl. 800, 45 L. R. A. 438, 73 Am. St. Rep. 212. In the first of those cases, the statute entitled the holder of preference shares not only to have their demands secured by a mortgage on the assets of the company, but authorized the company to guarantee semiannual dividends and full payment of the face value of the stock by a certain date, denied the holders the right to participate in the affairs of the company by voting, excluded them from either the profits or the losses of the business, and exempted them from liability to creditors of the com-were germane to a loan, rather than to a subscription for stock.

For the same and other even more cogent facts tending to show the preferred stock was in truth simply a loan made by the company in that form, the judgment in Heller v. Bank treated the nominal stockholder as a creditor. In Savannah Co. v. Silverberg, supra, the decision that the nominal shareholder was in fact a creditor was rested principally upon the binding obligation of the company to redeem the preferred shares by a given date and the circumstances of embarrassment under which they were issued. It is to be noted, however, that, while the court held he was a creditor, it said the dividends to which the certificate said he was entitled semiannually, though really interest, were not meant "to be paid absolutely and at all events, but simply in the event the corporation earned a sufficient amount to pay each holder of such certificate"—a singular remark. The question in that case was whether the holder could collect the full value of the certificate when it matured, and the court decided he could. In another case to which we have been cited, and the one mainly relied on by plaintiff, the statute was held, on grounds not clear to our minds, to have been enacted to enable the company to borrow money for the discharge of debts, by issuing preferred stock, and hence the holder of such stock was treated as a creditor, and not as a stockholder. Williams v. Parker, 136 Mass. 204. An attempt to distinguish the statute on which that decision was given from the one on which Field v. Lamson, 162 Mass. 388, 38 N. E. 1126, 27 L. R. A. 136, was determined, was attempted in the opinion in the latter case, wherein the preferred shares were treated as stock, and not as an evidence of debt. The distinction was put on the ground that the statute involved in Field v. Lamson required the dividends to be paid out of the net earnings—an important distinction if properly drawn—but the like requirement might have been implied in the earlier case, and, indeed, has been implied on a statute using similar language, as will appear from an excerpt infra from the opinion in Elkins v. Railroad, 36 N. J. Eq. 233.

Before scrutinizing the Indiana statute, it may be well to say merely denominating shares "preferred stock" in a legislative act, does not per se define the rights and character of the holder of such shares, which depend on the essential qualities of the transaction authorized by the statute. Elkins v. Railroad and Burt v. Rattle, supra; Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 141, 24 N. E. 496. And the circumstance that the installments to be paid on the shares annually or semiannually were called "interest" in the statutes of interest. Whinston v. Railroad, 13 Allen (Mass.) 400; State v. Railroad, 16 S. C. 524; Sturge v. Railroad, 31 Eng. Law & Eq. Rep. 406; Corry v. Railroad, 29 Beav. 263. Nevertheless the name employed by the Legislature to designate the shares is one badge of the legal character intended to be given to them, for the words of a statute are to be taken in their ordinary sense, unless a different one is called for by the context. Rev. St. 1890, § 4160 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2252). The court applied this rule of interpretation, in dealing with the very question before us, in State v. Railroad, 16 S. C. 524, and, in determining whether or not shares were stock or an evidence of debt, attached weight to the fact that the Legislature had called the shares "preferred stock." Whatever influence the name employed in the Indiana statute to designate these shares should have in determining whether the certificate was one for stock or an evidence of debt favors the former character; but there are weightier reasons for holding it stock.

An examination of the statute and of the certificate itself, makes it apparent that by no semblance of reason could we hold defendant became indebted to plaintiff for the face value of the shares; that is to say, $500. This is so because defendant did not bind itself to pay the face value of the shares to plaintiff at any time, but only reserved an option to pay at its pleasure after ten semiannual dividends had been paid and before the twentieth matured. The essence of a debt is a legal liability on the part of one person to pay money to another at some time, which liability is enforceable by a judicial action. Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76, 78, 18 Am. Rep. 156. The only plausible contention for plaintiff is that the obligation to pay semiannual dividends at maturity was absolute and created a debt; that the so-called "dividends" were not technically such, but installments of interest the company was bound to pay whatever befell. A company may bind itself to pay interest instead of dividends on stock; but its power to bind itself to pay installments of either kind in priority to the demands of creditors must be found in a clear legislative grant. 1 Cook, Corp. (6th Ed.) § 277; City of Covington v. Covington, etc., Bridge Co., 10 Bush (Ky.) 69. It is unusual and anomalous for companies to bind themselves absolutely to pay installments periodically on shares, instead of as dividends are earned, and we think this company ought not to be held to have agreed to do that unless, upon a fair interpretation of the statute and contract, the conclusion that the installments were payable absolutely must be deduced. We regret the necessity of expounding the statute of another state unaided by an interpretation by its courts of last resort, and it is with diffidence we announce our opinion that the Legislature of Indiana did not intend to make the semiannual installments accruing on preferred shares of stock in a manufacturing company, interest and a debt, any more than it intended to make the principal of the shares a debt; and this was not intended to be a debt necessarily, because the statute does not declare a company's liability for the principal shall have a date of maturity in favor of the holder, but makes it subject to redemption upon such terms as the certificate shall provide (section 5067).

The certificate under review provided for redemption at the pleasure of the company after ten dividends had been paid and before the twentieth fell due, and this reservation of an option to redeem is consistent with the statute. No provision regarding the installments can be found in the several sections of the statute, which tends to fasten on them the character of a debt in a way peculiar and distinctive, in comparison with the character the statute gives to the principal of the shares, except the fixed dates of maturity of the installments. As to this matter the certificate issued by the company obligates it to pay a semiannual dividend of 3 per cent.; but the statutory language is not imperative, and only binds a company which issues preferred shares to pay a dividend on them before setting aside anything for the common stock—that is, does not compel payment at stated intervals whatever happens. The circumstance that installments have a maturity date cannot alone be regarded as conclusive in favor of their being absolute obligations, or else all dividends stipulated to be paid at definite intervals would be payable without regard to a company's earnings, a conclusion opposed to the adjudicated cases. In our judgment the meaning of the statute is that the installments partake of the nature of the principal, and, if the latter is stock, they are dividends on stock and affected by the common incidents of dividends; that is, they will be postponed to debts and are declarable in the discretion of the directors, exercised in good faith.

Besides the decisive reason already advanced against regarding the principal as a debt, that no time was fixed in which it shall fall due, other reasons may be invoked. The Indiana statute does not authorize companies to issue preferred shares merely as a mode of borrowing money and only in the contingency of a necessity to borrow. No authority is given a company to secure preferred shares by mortgage or other lien on its property, as was the case in Heller v. Bank, 89 Md. 602, 43 Atl. 800, 45 L. R. A. 438, 73 Am. St. Rep. 212, and Burt v. Rattle, supra. Moreover, the statute authorized the issue of preferred shares in double the amount of the common stock of the company, and it is improbable the Legislature meant to empower companies to borrow twice as much as their capital; but this would be the effect of construing the act to make preferred shares a debt instead of part of the capital stock of a company. All issues of preferred stock must be reported to the Secretary of State with particulars, and the shares of such stock are subject to redemption at whatever time shall be provided in the certificate, but, as already said, need not be redeemed at any time unless the company agrees they shall be. As pointed out supra, section 5067 does not bind a company to pay semiannual dividends on preferred shares, but says it shall be bound to pay dividends in the sums expressed in the certificate, not exceeding 4 per cent., before any dividends shall be set aside or paid on the common stock. We take that language to mean the dividends shall be paid out of surplus earnings and after creditors have been satisfied, but before dividends are declared or paid on common stock. The section goes further and says, in case of insolvency or dissolution of the company, its debts and other liabilities shall be paid in preference to preferred stock. This language makes the preference shares participate in business losses; whereas, the last clause of section 5068 prevents them from participating in profits beyond interest or dividends, and says, in effect, they may take out of the assets of a company only their face value and arrearages of dividends or interest.

The most important inquiries in cases like this relate: Firstly, to whether a date is fixed within which a company is bound to pay the preferred shares, for all true debts must fall due some time; and, secondly, to whether such shares are subject to losses of the business in the sense that the holders of them are postponed to creditors at large in case the company becomes insolvent, for such postponement is not easily reconcilable with the notion that the holders of what are nominally preference shares are in reality creditors. The proviso in section 5067 that preferred stock shall at all times have priority of payment out of the assets of the company for their full face value, together with all arrearages and interest thereon, over the common stock, appears to emphasize the only priority accorded to preferred shares, and the language of the section as a whole imports that other liabilities and debts of a company shall take precedence in payment over interest and dividends on preferred stock. Similar language was treated in Elkins v. Railroad, 36 N. J. Eq. 235, 236, as equivalent to expressly declaring dividends on preference shares should be paid out of net earnings, and as entitling the holder of those shares to payment of arrearages of dividends which had accrued in back years, before common stockholders could share in the profits; but not to entitle him to payment absolutely and without regard to earnings. The statute there involved was, at this point, like the one before us, and reads:

"That when so issued and declared to be preferred stock, the holders thereof respectively shall be entitled to receive dividends on the same not to exceed seven per centum per annum, before any dividend shall be set apart or paid on the other and ordinary stock of said company." The portion of the Indiana statute, which at first glance looks most favorable to plaintiff, is the one forbidding the company to mortgage any of its property without the written consent of the holders of a majority of the preferred stock. Section 5068. One might think this proviso useless unless the preferred shares are intended to enjoy priority of payment over debts; but section 5067 expressly gives debts and liabilities the priority. This proviso about mortgages is an incongruous one, and, when narrowly observed, rather clashes in its own terms with the idea that preferred shares are to have absolute priority, for the assets may be mortgaged with the consent of a majority of the preferred shares against the will of the minority. Just what the purpose of the proviso was is difficult to say; but we suppose the Legislature apprehended preferred stock might suffer some detriment from a mortgage it would not suffer by merely postponing it to unsecured debts if the company became insolvent.

The gist of the argument for plaintiff is this: The statute authorized the company to guarantee payment of dividends on preferred shares and deprived the holder of those shares of the right to vote—two facts which demonstrate the Legislature intended to make the holder a creditor of the company. The statute nowhere clearly empowers the company to guaranty the dividends; but, granting this power may be deduced, the reasoning for plaintiff would compel the untenable conclusion that the principal as well as the interest on the shares is a debt. Moreover, a guaranty of dividends by a company pursuant to statutory authority does not make the dividends a debt and payable absolutely. Taft v. Railroad, 8 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 575; Chaffee v. Railroad, supra; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76, 18 Am. Rep. 156; Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 141, 24 N. E. 496; Fieid v. Lamson, 162 Mass. 388, 38 N. E. 1126, 27 L. R. A. 136; Ulverstone, etc., R. R. v. Com'rs, 2 Hurlst. & C. 855. And neither does denying the holder of preferred shares a vote, ipso facto, deprive him of the status of stockholder. 2 Thompson, Corp. 2281; Savannah Co. v. Silverberg, 108 Ga. 281, 287, 33 S. E. 908. According to the general doctrine, a guaranty to pay dividends means the company binds itself to pay them out of such assets as are legally available for that purpose—that is, net earnings—and this is true whether the guaranteed payments are called "dividends" or "interest." 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 457, quoted and followed in Feld v. Investment

Co., 123 Mo. 603, 620, 27 S. W. 635. The reasoning and authorities supra lead to the conclusion that plaintiff was a preferred shareholder and not a creditor of defendant, and her right to dividends depended on whether the earnings of the company justified the directors in paying them. The undisputed evidence shows the earnings were not sufficient to pay more than one dividend a year. Perhaps the inference might be drawn that one dividend could have been declared in 1907, had not the directors thought best to extend the business. Where it is clear a dividend ought to have been declared on preferred shares, a court of equity, in a proper suit, may compel this to be done, or treat it as having been done. Boardman v. Railroad, 84 N. Y. 157, 180. But the present action is one at law, and certainly a dividend cannot be recovered in a legal action until it has been declared. 2 Clark & Marshall, § 517b, and cases cited in note 9.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

MARSHALL v. BROWN.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals, Missouri. Nov. 16, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 30, 1909.)

1. ATTACHMENT (§ 122*) — PROCEEDINGS — AMENDMENT — AMENDMENT OF AFFIDAVIT — RIGHT.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 413 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 501), permitting an attachment to be dissolved on motion before final judgment if the supporting affidavit is insufficient, but prohibiting its dissolution if plaintiff files a sufficient affidavit in such time and manner as the court directs, plaintiff could, pending the hearing of a motion to dissolve the attachment because the affidavit was not signed, amend by signing the affidavit, or by filing a sufficient affidavit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 323-337; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 281*)—PRESENTATION BELOW—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—DENIAL OF AMENDMENT—NECESSITY.

Since attachment is only ancillary to the principal case, an appeal from an order discharging an attachment upon denying plaintiff's motion to amend a defective affidavit, after which plaintiff obtained judgment in the principal case, was not an appeal from an order disposing of the whole case upon a motion against the pleadings, but from an order denying an amendment, so that its denial cannot be reviewed in absence of a motion for new trial or for rehearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 281.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Butler County; J. C. Sheppard, Judge.

court by appeal. It appears the plaintiff filed his affidavit for an attachment before the justice, and, according to the jurat thereon dated and signed by the justice of the peace, he was sworn to the same. However, he failed to affix his signature thereto. After the case reached the circuit court, the defendant moved a dissolution of the attachment for the reason there was no affidavit filed therein before the justice. The point made and pressed upon the court was to the effect that although the plaintiff may have sworn to the affidavit before the justice of the peace, as appeared from the jurat thereon, executed by the justice, the affidavit was nevertheless no affidavit at all unless the plaintiff had affixed his signature thereto, and it appeared that he had failed to sign it. Upon the hearing of the motion, the plaintiff proffered to amend by affixing his signature to the affidavit or by filing a new and proper affidavit duly signed and verified. The court overruled the plaintiff's application to amend the original affidavit or to permit him to file an amended affidavit. Having overruled the application to amend, the court sustained the plaintiff's motion to dissolve the attachment on the grounds that there was no sufficient affidavit; it appearing that plaintiff had not signed the same. The attachment was therefore dissolved and the lien thereof discharged. Thereafter the cause went to trial on the merits, and the judgment was given for the plaintiff thereon. The plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from the order of the court dissolving and discharging the attachment. The court was clearly in error in denying the plaintiff's right to amend. Our statutes (section 413, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 501]) provide substantially that attachments in courts of record or before justices of the peace may be dissolved on motion at any time before final judgment if the affidavit on which the same was found shall be adjudged by the court insufficient; but it is provided, too, therein that no attachment shall be dissolved in such case if the plaintiff shall file a good and sufficient affidavit to be approved by the court in such time and manner as the court shall direct. It may be that the mere failure of the plaintiff to sign the original affidavit was not sufficient of itself to defeat it; it appearing from the jurat thereon that he had actually sworn to the same before the justice. On this question we express no opinion, as it is unimportant here. The plaintiff certainly had the right, under the statute above referred to, to amend by affixing his signature or by filing a new and sufficient affidavit. Clafin v. Hoover, 20 Mo. App. 314; Musgrove v. Mott, 90 Mo. 107, 2 S. W. 214.

However this may be, it appears that we are unable to relieve the situation for the reason the plaintiff filed no motion for a new trial or rehearing on this question.

This is not a case, as argued by the plaintiff, where the court disposed of the whole cause upon a motion against the pleadings, and for that reason rendered its ruling reviewable on appeal in the absence of a motion for new trial or rehearing, as was decided in Aultman v. Daggs, 50 Mo. App. 280. The posture the case has assumed on appeal does not present that question, but, instead, it presents the question of the action of the trial court in denying the right of an amendment. Indeed, the whole case was not disposed of on a motion, for in truth the attachment is only ancillary to, or in aid of, the principal cause on the merits. Coombs Commission Co. v. Block, 130 Mo. 668-674, 32 S. W. 1139. The entire attachment might fall upon a trial, and still the case upon its merits proceed to final judgment and the plaintiff recover, as was the fact touching the suit on the merits in this case, for the plaintiff here actually recovered and obtained a judgment on his cause of action. Moreover, the appeal here is not prosecuted from the order of the court in dissolving and dismissing the attachment because of the defective affidavit, for it was conceded by the plaintiff, who prosecutes the appeal here, in the trial court that the affidavit was insufficient and he sought to amend the same. This being true, the identical question presented is the ruling of the court on its denying the plaintiff the right to amend. This ruling is one to which the plaintiff should not only have saved an exception, but one which may not be reviewed on appeal, unless called to the attention of the trial court in a motion for a new trial or rehearing thereon. For the reasoning on the subject, see Union Brewing Co. v. Ehlhardt (Mo. App.) 120 S. W. 1193; In re Estate of Howard, 128 Mo. App. 482, 106 S. W. 116.

It may be, had the question been called to the attention of the trial court by a motion for rehearing, it would have reconsidered its action and reinstated the attachment. It is said to be highly unjust to the trial court in such circumstances to pronounce it in error on a ruling which it has had no opportunity to correct or review.

The matter not having been called to the trial court's attention by motion for new trial or rehearing, the judgment must be affirmed. It is so ordered. All concur.

Where plaintiffs, who had negotiated for a loan with an association, sent the trust deeds and notes, executed by them, to bankers as agents for the association, title to the papers passed from plaintiffs, and the association, having remitted payment of the notes to defendant, designated by the bankers the association agent to receive it, defendant's failure to pass the money on to plaintiffs, while it might raise a question between it and the association, does not give plaintiffs a right of action against defendant, either for money had and received, or for conversion, as the owner of the notes alone could maintain such actions.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Matt G. Reynolds, Judge.

Action by Charles B. Cooper and wife against the Commonwealth Trust Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied. REYNOLDS, P. J., not participating in consideration of the motion or in action of the court in overruling it.

Salmon & Salmon, a copartnership, were private bankers at Clinton, Henry county, Mo.; Thomas M. Casey being the cashier and acting manager of their bank. On Wednesday, June 21, 1905, this bank failed, and was on that day taken in charge by the Secretary of State of Missouri and placed in the hands of a receiver. Subsequently, upon the petition of the creditors thereof, it was adjudged bankrupt by the United States Court. The Missouri Savings Association, also referred to as the Missouri Savings Association Bank, or as "The Bank," and meant when hereafter referred to as the "Association," was a Missouri corporation, doing business in Kansas City, Mo., and engaged in making loans on farm lands in this state and elsewhere. W. S. Webb was the vice president and cashier of that Association; he and the Association having their offices in Kansas City. Otto Seigle was engaged in the lumber business at Clinton, and was also a local agent or solicitor there for the Association, engaged in soliciting and procuring farm loans for it. His course of business under his employment appears to have been that when applied to for loans to have the applicant sign a written application for the loan, addressed to the Association, and forward the application to that institution at Kansas City, whereupon Mr. Webb, acting for the Association, would examine the application and inspect the property offered as security for the loan. Upon his return to the office of the Association at Kansas City the loan was approved or disapproved, as the case might be. The Commonwealth Trust Company, defendant and appellant, is a trust company in the city of St. Louis, doing a general trust company business, including the buying and selling of commercial paper and receiving deposits. The First National Bank of Kansas City is a national bank, doing business in Missouri and located at Kansas City in that state, and a correspondent there of the Commonwealth Trust Company of St. Louis. The Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company is a life insurance company, making farm loans in this state, and represented at St. Joseph, Mo., by Bartlett Bros.

Charles B. Cooper and Lena M. Cooper, his wife, plaintiffs and respondents here, own a farm of 160 acres in St. Clair county, this state, some 20 or 26 miles from Clinton. In the year 1904 Cooper and his wife had executed a deed of trust securing a note for $1,500 on this 160-acre tract; the note and deed of trust being in favor of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company, which note matures on April 1, 1909. This deed of trust was duly recorded. Bartlett Bros. were handling this loan for the Life Insurance Company. Desiring to pay off and discharge this loan, and also to raise additional money on his land, Cooper, according to his own testimony and to the testimony of Seigle, went to Seigle at Clinton, as the representative there of the Missouri Savings Association, and asked him for a loan of $3,000 on his land. Whereupon Seigle, representing the Missouri Savings Association and acting for it, as the testimony shows beyond any dispute, took Cooper's application and sent it in to the Missouri Savings Association. To state the transaction in Seigle's own language: "Why, Mr. Cooper came to me for a loan of $3,000 on his land, and I took his application and sent it in just like I do all of them, and it was accepted by the company, and they sent the papers down to me, which they always do." This application appears to have been signed by Cooper, and by him sent to Seigle at Clinton and forwarded by Seigle to the Missouri Savings Association at Kansas City. The written application is addressed to the Missouri Savings Association, and applies for a loan of $3,000 for 6 years, to bear interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, Cooper agreeing to secure the same by notes and mortgages or deeds of trust in the usual form of the Savings Association, which should be a first lien on the real estate described, he agreeing to furnish the Missouri Savings Association with an abstract of title to the property from the United States down to and including the mortgage and deed of trust to be given to the Association, and to pay the expenses incurred by the Association in perfecting title and recording fees, and to take the money at any time within 30 days; also agreeing that if the Savings

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Association negotiated the loan at a less rate than 8 per cent., to make his note in favor of the Association for the difference between that rate and the rate at which the loan was negotiated, this latter amount to be payable in 6 installments, corresponding with the interest payments on the loan, and to secure it by a second mortgage or deed of trust on the same property. The agreement in terms constituted the Missouri Savings Association, under the name of "Missouri Savings Association Bank," the agent of Cooper to procure the loan for him, and it authorized that Association to pay the proceeds of the same "to my said agent, and whatever incumbrances the abstract shows upon said premises you are hereby authorized to pay to the party holding the record title thereto as shown by said abstract."

It appears that after his preliminary negotiation with Seigle, Cooper and his wife had gone to Wagoner, in the then Indian Territory, and were residing there from that time on, Mr. Cooper apparently not returning to Clinton until some time after the 21st or 22d of June, 1905, and the written application referred to as well as the deeds of trust and notes, were signed and executed by the Coopers at Wagoner. After receipt of this written application at its Kansas City office, to which place it had been forwarded by Seigle, Mr. Webb went down to St. Clair county, Mo., inspected the farm, approved the loan, prepared the two deeds of trust, the note or bond, as it is called, and the coupons, and forwarded them to Seigle. Seigle, upon receipt of the papers, sent them to Cooper at Wagoner, accompanied by a letter instructing him to execute them and return them to the Salmon & Salmon Bank at Clinton. This letter of instruction was not produced in evidence, and plaintiff Cooper testified that, so far as he knew, it was not in existence. Seigle testified that he had no copy of this letter, and that all the instructions contained in it were for Cooper to send the papers back to the Salmon & Salmon Bank. Cooper testified that after he received these papers, he held them for some time, then signed them and returned them to the Salmon & Salmon Bank, as instructed by Mr. Seigle, and that he also wrote that day to Salmon & Salmon, that he had sent the papers, under the instruction of Mr. Seigle, to their bank. Cooper testified that he had no copy of this letter of transmittal to Salmon & Salmon, nor was the original produced, but he testified that all that was in it was merely that "Inclosed they [Salmon & Salmon] would find the deeds of trust and papers for the loan which he [Cooper] had made with the Missouri Savings Association Bank, and that he had sent them to Salmon & Salmon under the instruction of Mr. Seigle." He further testified that on the same day he had written to Mr. Seigle, which letter was neither produced nor a copy of it in evidence, but was mailed at Wagoner, Ind. T., June 16, 1905, and that the substance of the letter was that he "had returned the papers which he [Seigle] had sent him to the Salmon & Salmon Bank, as he [Seigle] had instructed him to do." The envelope in which the letter was said to have been contained was produced; the letter itself, however, was not. After testifying in chief to having sent these papers, accompanied by a letter, to Salmon & Salmon, and also writing to Seigle to the effect that he had done so, and that he had never received any money from anybody in the transaction, and had never authorized Salmon & Salmon to collect the money for him or to draw any draft, and that the prior deed of trust had not been paid off, plaintiff Cooper, in cross-examination, reiterated that he had made the application for the loan through Seigle, and in sending the papers to Salmon & Salmon had been acting under the direction of Seigle. He was asked who he understood Seigle to represent in the matter, and he answered that he understood Seigle to represent the Missouri Savings Association Bank. His attention was then called to this clause in his application for the loan: "I hereby appoint Missouri Savings Association Bank my agent to procure the loan for me, and authorize you to pay the proceeds of the same to my said agent"—and he was asked if he had appointed the Missouri Savings Association his agent in this matter. He answered, "Yes." Asked if Mr. Otto Seigle was the agent of the Missouri Savings Association, he said, "Yes." Asked if he had authorized Salmon & Salmon to draw a draft for that money, he said he had not. Asked when Salmon & Salmon drew that draft, whether they were acting as his agents according to his theory of the case, he answered, "They were not." Asked when Salmon & Salmon received any money on that draft, if they were not acting as his agents according to his theory, he answered, "They were not." Asked why he sent the bond and note to Salmon & Salmon Bank, he said that he did that because he was instructed to do so by Mr. Seigle. He was asked if he had not been the plaintiff in two other suits in connection with this same matter, and he answered: "Yes, sir; I guess so." These questions and answers, in fact Cooper's whole testimony, appear in the transcript, and in the supplemental abstract furnished us by attorneys for the respondents.

We give the following verbatim, taken from that abstract, as questions asked and answers given by plaintiff Cooper on cross-examination: "Q. You have been plaintiff in two other suits in connection with this matter, have you not, Mr. Cooper? A. Yes, sir; I guess so. Q. In one of these suits you and your wife joined with the Missouri Savings Association, and brought suit against Mr. Egger, as receiver for the Salmon & Salmon Bank, did you not? A. Yes, sir. Q.

you do it? That is the same question. A. Well, the only reason I can give was through the instructions of my attorney. Q. I believe you brought another suit relative to this same transaction, did you not? A. Yes, sir. Q. That second suit you and your wife sued the Missouri Savings Association, didn't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. The Commonwealth Trust Company and the First National Bank of Kansas City? A. Yes, sir. Q. In this petition I will call your attention to the fact that you state that those papers were forwarded to the Salmon & Salmon Bank, as agents of the Missouri Savings Association? A. Yes, sir. Q. Is that a fact? A. How was that? Q. That those papers—the notes and the bond and the deed of trust—were forwarded to Salmon & Salmon as agents for the Missouri Savings Association? A. They were forwarded to Salmon & Salmon. Q. Yes; as agents of the Missouri Savings Association? A. Yes, sir."

It appears by the evidence in the case that these papers, apparently mailed about the 16th of June, at Wagoner, addressed to Salmon & Salmon, at Clinton, reached the latter place on Saturday, June 17, 1905. They consisted of one note for $3,000, payable to the Missouri Savings Association or order June 1, 1911, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, interest payable semiannually, as evidenced by 12 coupons attached, and expressed to be for value received, and one note for $545, payable to the Missouri Savings Association or order in 12 installments. Attached to the $3,000 note were interest coupon notes, payable to bearer. The notes, as well as the coupons, were dated May 15, 1905, and were negotiable, and it was stated in each of them that they were secured by a deed of trust or mortgage on real estate in St. Clair county, Mo. The notes and coupons were signed by Charles B. Cooper and Lena M., his wife. The $3,000 note and its coupons were secured by what was intended to be a first mortgage on the real estate in St. Clair county, and the $545 note was also secured by a deed of trust, which was intended to follow the first one, on the same property. The deeds of trust, executed to Webb as trustee for Missouri Savings Association, securing these notes, were also inclosed. It will be noted, therefore, that the Missouri Savings Association elected to take the loan itself, or in its own name.

On receipt of the deeds of trust, notes, and coupons on that morning of the 17th, which was Saturday, Casey, in the name of Salmon & Salmon, on the same day transmitted the deeds of trust to one Rodgers, at Osceola, the county seat of St. Clair county. Rodgers was an abstractor of titles, and Casey, ance Company. These papers appear to have reached Rodgers on the afternoon of that Saturday, the 17th, on which afternoon they were placed of record, the $3,000 one 10 minutes before the one for $545. A supplemental abstract made by Rodgers was placed in the mail that Saturday night, directed to Salmon & Salmon at Clinton. It reached Salmon & Salmon at Clinton about noon on Sunday, June 18th.

Seigle had testified that there was some delay in the sending on of the papers by Cooper to Salmon & Salmon, and he had several times asked Casey if they had arrived. Beyond this, and prior to the arrival of the papers, there is no evidence whatever in the record to show that Seigle had ever said anything to Casey about the papers, or what instructions, if any, he had given Casey concerning them. He testifies that he was not in Clinton on Saturday the 17th, and that, after the receipt of the papers by Casey, the latter called him (Seigle) up over the telephone, Seigle being at his farm out in the county, and told him that he was going to draw a draft, and wanted to know if he (Seigle) thought the Missouri Savings Association Bank would turn down these papers, and he (Casey) wanted him (Seigle) to come up and sign them himself, but he (Seigle) told Casey he would not do it. The next time that Seigle met Casey was the following Monday or Tuesday, at any rate before the bank finally closed, which was Tuesday night about 4 o'clock, its usual closing hour. It did not reopen on Wednesday. Whatever day it was, and it was one or the other of these days, and before the bank was closed out, Seigle came back from his farm and had a conversation with Casey, at Clinton, who asked him if he thought the draft would be turned down by him (Casey) signing it, and Seigle told him that "that wasn't the way we done business; that the borrower signed them; that Mr. Webb sent him (Seigle) the drafts to pay off that mortgage with the one ahead of it and to pay Mr. Cooper the other one." These two conversations—the one over the telephone and the other in person—between Seigle and Casey are the only conversations testified to by any one as having taken place between them concerning the transaction, and this is all we have of those conversations, except that Seigle further testified that when he met Casey in the bank Monday or Tuesday, Casey told him that he had drawn the draft and had sent on the papers. He had then drawn the draft and sent on the papers to the Commonwealth Trust Company. Seigle also testified that he had not communicated to the Missouri Savings Association anything about Casey going to draw the draft; made understand it that Casey was referring to a draft drawn by Salmon & Salmon." What Casey wanted him (Seigle) to do was to sign Cooper's name to the draft, and he "wouldn't do it; didn't know then what Casey was going to do; didn't care what he had done after that, as long as he (Seigle) wasn't going to do it"; but understood on Monday that Casey had drawn a draft "simply because Casey had told him so."

On Sunday the 18th of June, and on receipt of the supplemental abstract, Casey, in the name of Salmon & Salmon, wrote and mailed the following letter to Webb, cashier of the Missouri Savings Association, dating it, however, June 17th: "Clinton, Missouri, June 17, 1905. W. S. Webb, Cashier, Kansas City, Missouri—Dear Sir: We send you herewith supplemental abstract of title to real estate covered by your loan of $3,000 to Mr. Charles B. Cooper. This is done at the request of Mr. Seigle. We have drawn on you for $3,000 on account of this loan, attaching to draft a $3,000 bond and commission notes, out of which we will pay off the Bartlett or rather the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company loan. The draft for three thousand dollars will not be presented until Tuesday, hence if you prefer to take up said loan yourself, please call us up to-morrow, or rather Monday, at our expense, and we will remit you to cover said loan. Yours very truly, Salmon & Salmon, 'C.'" This letter was received by the Missouri Savings Association at Kansas City on Monday morning, June 19th, and with it the supplemental abstract, but that Association neither telephoned nor wrote to Salmon & Salmon or Casey in response to it. While this letter is dated June 17th, it could not have been mailed before the 18th; that is to say, Sunday. It inclosed the supplemental abstract, and that supplemental abstract had not been received by Salmon & Salmon or Casey until the afternoon of Sunday, the 18th. It was undoubtedly written on the 18th. Casey, in the name of Salmon & Salmon, drew this draft: "Customer's Draft. Salmon & Salmon, Bankers. $3000.00. Clinton, Mo., June 17, 1905. Pay to the order of ourselves three thousand dollars for attached papers, and charge to account of Salmon & Salmon. To Missouri Savings Bank, Kansas City, Mo." This was indorsed on the back: "Pay any bank or banker or order. All prior indorsements guaranteed. Salmon & Salmon, Bankers." This draft, dated the 17th, along with the notes attached, was mailed by Casey, in the name of Salmon & Salmon, to the Commonwealth Trust Company at St. Louis, on Sunday evening June 18th, and was received by the Commonwealth Trust Company Monday June 19th, although the Trust Company's receiving stamp bears date the 18th.

When the Commonwealth Trust Company received the draft with attached papers, it with other drafts and miscellaneous credits by the Commonwealth Trust Company to the amount of $798.58. The total amount remitted by Salmon & Salmon of date June 17th, including the draft for the $3,000, amounted to $5,437.05; the remittance outside of the $3,000 draft being made up of express orders, exchange, and various smaller items. The Commonwealth Trust Company, having carried the amount in it to the credit of Salmon & Salmon June 19th, allowed them to draw on it that day, not only for the $798.58 credit with which their account had that day opened, but for an amount in excess of that and of the deposits received during the day, so that at the end of the day Salmon & Salmon's account with the Commonwealth Trust Company was overdrawn to the amount of $1,331.81. On the same day the Commonwealth Trust Company attached the $3,000 draft to the commission note and the $3,000 loan note and its coupons, and indorsed the draft: "Pay to the order of First National Bank, Kansas City, Missouri. All prior indorsements guaranteed. [Signed] Commonwealth Trust Company, St. Louis, Mo., by J. M. Wood, Secretary"—and transmitted the draft and attached papers, as well as other exchange items, to the First National Bank at Kansas City, Mo. The draft with papers attached to it, as well as the other items, reached the latter bank on Tuesday, and that bank presented the draft and its attached papers on that day to the Missouri Savings Association, which latter paid the draft and retained the notes and coupons. The First National Bank of Kansas City thereupon carried the proceeds of the draft to the credit of the Commonwealth Trust Company that day, and on that day so advised the Commonwealth Trust Company by letter or postal. As before noted, on the evening of the same day—that is, Tuesday, June 20th—and at the usual hour for closing the bank, 4 o'clock, Salmon & Salmon closed their doors. On the succeeding day, June 21st, the bank was taken possession of, as also before stated by the banking department of the state. This fact became generally known on the forenoon of that day, and the Missouri Savings Association officers, learning of it, called up Bartlett Bros., of St. Joseph, Mo., who, representing the Life Insurance Company, held the $1,500 incumbrance, to ascertain if Casey or Salmon & Salmon had paid off the loan. Being informed that they had not, the Missouri Savings Association telephoned to Seigle at Clinton, to see Cooper, and to see what was to be done. Seigle telephoned that Cooper was not in Clinton. Whereupon the Missouri Savings Association asked the First National Bank of Kansas City to telephone the Commonwealth Trust Company to hold the money and not turn it over to Salmon & Salmon. This was done on this 21st day of June, both by telephone and telegram; in the latter the First National Bank stating amounting to $3,000, to Salmon & Salmon. This telegram was sent about noon. The same day the Missouri Savings Association telegraphed the Commonwealth Trust Company as follows: "Do not pay Salmon & Salmon $3,000. Yours 19th to First National Bank obtained by fraud and misrepresentation; trust fund; have written"—and on that day the Missouri Savings Association wrote the Commonwealth Trust Company to the effect that the $3,000 paid by the Missouri Savings Association to the First National Bank, Kansas City, on draft dated June 17, 1905, and drawn on Missouri Savings Association by Salmon & Salmon of Clinton, Mo., "is not the property of said Salmon & Salmon and should not be paid to them or treated by you as their property." The letter then went on to state what were claimed to be the facts in the case, among other things setting out that the papers for the loan—that is to say, the note and deeds of trust—were prepared by the Missouri Savings Association, sent by it to Seigle for execution; that Seigle sent them to Cooper, who, after executing them, "returned them to said Seigle, who delivered them to said Salmon & Salmon, as the agents of Cooper, to receive from us [Missouri Savings Association] the amount of the loan, to be applied, $1,500 to said old deed of trust, and the balance for Cooper; that the draft above referred to for $3,000, was drawn by Salmon & Salmon as a means of receiving from us the amount of said loan, as appears by the words 'for attached papers' in said draft, the attached papers being said notes and deed of trust, and we [Missouri Savings Association] paid the money on said draft as the money of said Cooper; that the said $3,000 was and is not the property of Salmon & Salmon, but a trust fund belonging to said Cooper for the use above stated." After stating that they had wired the Commonwealth Trust Company not to pay the draft to Salmon & Salmon, but to hold the money for Cooper, the letter adds: "In which ($3,000) we also have an interest, because that under our agreement with Cooper, $1,500 of it was to be applied to satisfy the first deed of trust now on said farm." The receipt of this letter was acknowledged by the defendant, accompanied by the statement that on the facts of the case as written to them by the cashier of the Missouri Savings Association, the Commonwealth Trust Company could see nothing upon which the Savings Association could base any claim as against funds which had been paid to the Commonwealth. There was uncontroverted testimony to the effect that the acts of the Commonwealth in crediting the draft to Salmon & Salmon as a cash item, and allowing payment of the draft to the First National Bank of Kansas City, had kept and still retained possession of the notes and coupons, and also holds the deeds of trust. It was in testimony that plaintiffs had never received anything from anybody on account of the transaction. The Commonwealth Trust Company declined to pay the $3,000 to Cooper, and this present suit was instituted; the petition alleging "that defendant is indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of $3,000 on account of money had and received by the defendant for the use of plaintiffs on the 17th day of June, 1905, and which sum of money defendant agreed to pay to plaintiffs." Judgment is demanded for this $3,000, with interest thereon from June 17, 1905, and for costs. The answer was a general denial. The trial was before the court, a jury having been waived, and the facts as here outlined given in evidence. At the close of plaintiffs' evidence defendant asked an instruction in the nature of a demurrer, and renewed it at the conclusion of the trial. At the instance of the plaintiffs the court gave the following declaration of law: "If the court, sitting as a jury, believes and finds from the preponderance of the evidence that Charles B. Cooper and Lena M. Cooper, his wife, the plaintiffs, signed the bond and coupons and note, in amount $3,000, read in evidence, with the deeds of trust read in evidence, on the lands in St. Clair county, Mo., to Watt Webb, as trustee for the use and benefit of the Missouri Savings Association of Kansas City, Mo., and sent the same to Salmon & Salmon, bankers, at Clinton, Mo., on or about June 17, 1905, without any directions, authority, or request from plaintiffs to Salmon & Salmon, or to Thomas M. Casey, cashier, to negotiate the same, or to collect the amount due thereon, or to otherwise collect, sell, or dispose of the same, and that the said Salmon & Salmon, or Thomas M. Casey, cashier thereof, without payment of consideration, and without authority, direction, or request or consent, did cause the deed of trust to be recorded, and that he or said Salmon & Salmon, without payment and consideration, authority, request, or knowledge or consent of plaintiffs, drew a draft for $3,000 on the Missouri Savings Association, signed, Salmon & Salmon, payable to Salmon & Salmon, for attached papers, and attached the bond, coupons, and note, read in evidence, to the draft aforesaid, on the 17th day of June, 1905, and sent the draft and attached papers aforesaid to the Commonwealth Trust Company of St. Louis, the defendant, and that the draft and attached papers were by the defendant forwarded to the First National Bank of Kansas City, Mo., for presentation and payment, without the knowledge, authority, direction, or request of plaintiffs, and that the said last-mentioned bank did present the draft and attached papers to the Missouri Savings Association on June 20, 1905, and did then and there receive payment in the sum of $3,000, and delivered the draft and attached papers to the Missouri Savings Association, without the knowledge, authority, directions, or request of plaintiffs, and that the First National Bank then and there remitted the proceeds, or its equivalent, so received, in amount $3,000, to the Commonwealth Trust Company, and that the same was so received by defendant, on June 21, 1905, without the knowledge, authority, or direction of plaintiffs, and that the defendant has failed, refused, and neglected to pay to the said plaintiffs the said sum of $3,000, or any part thereof, upon demand, but has retained, appropriated, and kept the same ever since the reception thereof, then the plaintiffs are entitled to recover, and your verdict will be for plaintiffs in the sum of, $3,000, with 6 per cent. interest from the date the same was collected and received."

In addition to the instructions for a nonsuit, defendant asked several instructions, all of which were refused. In the view we take of the case it is not necessary to notice these. There was a finding and judgment for plaintiffs and against defendant, for the whole amount claimed. After an unsuccessful motion for new trial, the case has been duly appealed to this court by defendant; exceptions having been duly saved to the various adverse rulings and action of the court.

Bryan & Christie, for appellant. Edward C. Crow and John A. Galbreath, for respondents.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). When this case was first argued before us, we arrived at the conclusion that the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed. A motion for rehearing having been filed, we sustained that, and the case has been reargued and elaborately briefed by counsel. On full and careful reconsideration we have arrived at the conclusion that our first determination of the case was erroneous.

If it is true that Salmon & Salmon were acting as the agents of the plaintiffs in the transaction, and were authorized by them to send on the notes, collect the money on them, and pay it over to them, then the theory so earnestly and ably advanced by counsel for respondents that, as bailees of any character or as agents for the plaintiffs, Salmon & Salmon could not deal with the papers in any way by which they could throw title to them out of plaintiffs, or invest any person with any right under them, is correct. In a case of that kind Salmon & Salmon or their manager, Casey, would have been guilty of a tortious conversion, and any person receiving any benefit thereunder would be equally liable for the value of the securities converted, or responsible, as was claimed in this case by the petition in it, for money had and received. Such third party would be held to respond to the plaintiffs as for money had and received to their use and for their benefit. It was on this theory of the case that we all agreed in the affirmance of it when it was first presented to us. It was presented to us by appellant on the theory that the defendant was protected by dealing with commercial paper in the ordinary course of business. We declined to agree to that. That question does not arise, and is unnecessary to be determined in the light of the case as disclosed by a more careful examination of the testimony in the case, particularly that of the plaintiff Cooper himself. He testifies in the most positive and unequivocal manner that Salmon & Salmon were treated with by him, and recognized by him, not as his agents, but as the agents of the Missouri Savings Association, the very parties to whom the notes were payable, and the very parties who were entitled to the possession of them, and who were bound to pay them if they accepted and retained possession thereof.

It was argued before us at the bar, and is repeated in the very able briefs presented by the learned and industrious counsel for the respondents, that the statement of Cooper, when on the witness stand, that he considered Salmon & Salmon the agents of the Missouri Savings Association was a mere inadvertent statement, and that he did not mean to so testify. If that is so, it is very unfortunate for these plaintiffs. This court is bound by the record that he himself has made by his own testimony. He has testified in the most unequivocal manner that he delivered these papers, or mailed them, more correctly, to Salmon & Salmon, considering and treating the latter as representatives and agents of the Missouri Savings Association, and not as his agents. In point of fact a careful consideration of the testimony confirms this, and demonstrates that the Missouri Savings Association itself, as well as Casey, the latter acting for Salmon & Salmon, so understood the matter. The letter which we have given at length in the statement of the case, from Casey to Webb, is the letter of an agent writing to his principal for directions as to what he shall do with the fund in the event that the draft is honored, and it was full notice to the Missouri Savings Association that Salmon & Salmon proposed to act, not for the plaintiffs in the case, but for the Missouri Savings Association, in seeing to the payment of the prior incumbrance out of the $3,000 for which the draft had been drawn. It is true that the Missouri Savings Association did not answer this letter either by letter or telephone, as requested to do in the letter, but they did not repudiate it, and it is in evidence that, when they heard of the failure of the Salmon & Salmon Bank, they not Casey or Salmon & Salmon had paid off this prior incumbrance, which, in a measure at least, lends support to the view that they were, up to then, satisfied to have Salmon & Salmon act for them in the transaction, and were solicitous only to find out whether or not they had, with the proceeds of the draft, lifted the prior incumbrance and cleared the land from that burthen. It was not until the Missouri Savings Association took up the matter with the Commonwealth Trust Company that it is suggested in any manner that they looked upon Salmon & Salmon as the agents of the plaintiffs in the transaction. In that letter, set out in the statement of the case, the proposition is for the first time advanced that Salmon & Salmon were the agents, not of the Association, but of the plaintiffs. That came too late. We do not mean to hold that these acts of the Savings Association are binding on plaintiffs. They are, however, evidence of the light in which the Association regarded Salmon & Salmon, and are confirmatory of the testimony of Cooper to the effect that Salmon & Salmon were agents of that Association, and that he had so dealt with them. The acts of all the parties, prior to the time of the failure of the bank of Salmon & Salmon, which up to that time, so far as the evidence shows, enjoyed credit and was a going concern, clearly prove that all of them considered Salmon & Salmon the agents of the Missouri Savings Association in the transaction, and considered them the conduit through which, not only the papers were to pass from the plaintiffs to the Missouri Savings Association, but, more than that, the agents of that Association in the proper application of the money which was to be paid on the loan.

It will not do, therefore, to say, under these circumstances, and in the light of the testimony, as the very earnest counsel for plaintiffs now do, that Mr. Cooper was mistaken, and did not mean what he said, when he declared in that testimony that Salmon & Salmon were the agents of the Missouri Savings Association, and that he so considered them at the time, and that he had never at any time considered them his agents in the transaction. When plaintiff delivered the notes and deeds of trust to Salmon & Salmon, according to his own sworn testimony, he delivered them to the agents of the Missouri Savings Association as he had been directed to do. With that delivery his title to them passed out of him. The Missouri Savings Association received, and, according to the testimony, still holds, these papers. It remitted the money on the draft drawn against them, not to plaintiffs, but to defendant, who was the person designated by the agent of the Association to receive it. If tiffs a right of action against it, either for money had and received or for conversion. If there had been a conflict in the testimony as to the question of whose agents Salmon & Salmon were in the transaction, it would have been the duty of the trial court to have declared that an issue of fact to be determined on the testimony. The declaration of law given at the instance of plaintiff ignored this, and proceeded upon the theory that Salmon & Salmon were the agents in the transaction, not of the Missouri Savings Association, but of the plaintiffs. While not expressly doing that in the instruction, the rule of law announced in it is sustainable upon no other theory. Looking at the facts in the case as developed by the evidence in it, there was no conflicting testimony on this point. It was all one way, and positive to the effect that Salmon & Salmon, in the transaction, were the agents of the Missouri Savings Association, and not the agents of the plaintiffs.

The acts of the defendant, on receipt of the draft and attached papers, so far as the evidence in the case shows, seem to have been in entire accordance with the usual banking custom. There was nothing irregular nor unusual in defendant crediting Salmon & Salmon with the draft as a cash item; and whether it was warranted in so doing is another matter. As Salmon & Salmon, who drew that draft, were not, as we hold, the agents of plaintiffs in so doing, these plaintiffs are not, in this case, concerned with that.

The owner of the notes alone can maintain action for conversion or for money had and received thereon. When the notes and deeds of trust were delivered by plaintiff Cooper to Salmon & Salmon, it was a delivery to the agent of the Missouri Savings Association, the party entitled to them. They then and thereafter became the property of the Missouri Savings Association. This did not affect the right of plaintiffs, either to recover any sum due thereon, from the holder or owner of the notes, or to have them canceled for nonpayment, but it did extinguish their title to the notes as notes. Plaintiffs were no longer the owners after delivery to Salmon & Salmon, and hence cannot recover.

It is due this court to say that when this matter was first argued and presented to us, this feature of the case upon which we now decide it was not presented by counsel, or dwelt upon in such a way as to attract our attention, or to turn our minds to a consideration of the effect of this aspect of the case.

For the reasons now stated, the judgment of the trial court is reversed. All concur.

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—OPERATION OF CONTRACT—OPTION.

No title passed under an option to purchase land which required the owners to furnish the option holder a survey and tender an acceptable title within 90 days, where it did not appear that any survey or abstract of title was ever tendered, or that the option holder paid anything for the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 356*)—SALE OF LAND FOR PAYMENT OF DEBTS—ORDER OF SALE—MATTERS CONCLUDED.

Where, in a suit by a creditor to settle a decedent's estate and to sell his lands for the payment of his debts, judgment was rendered directing the land to be sold, and at the time of such rendition a cross-petition alleging title to the land in cross-petitioner, and praying that title be adjudged in him, was on file before the court, the judgment necessarily adjudged that cross-petitioner had no title, though his name was not mentioned therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1463; Dec. Dig. § 356.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 79*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—FINALITY OF JUDGMENT—DETERMINATION OF CONTROVERSY—DETERMINATION AS TO ONE PARTY.

Where, at the time judgment was entered directing land to be sold for a decedent's debts upon petition by a creditor, a cross-petition alleging ownership of the land and praying that title be adjudged in cross-petitioner was before the court, the judgment necessarily adjudged that cross-petitioner had no title, though his name was not mentioned therein, and was a final appealable judgment as to him, though the land was not sold thereunder until some years after.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Breathitt County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Suit by John W. Cardwell and others to settle the estate of a decedent and to sell his lands for payment of his debts. Charles J. Little filed a cross-petition and answer alleging ownership of the tract, and praying that the petition be dismissed and title adjudged in him. From the judgment ordering the land sold and from the final order confirming the sale, Little appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Gourley, Redwine & Gourley and Jno. E. Patrick, for appellant. McGuire & McGuire, for appellees.

CARROLL, J. In October, 1886, William Smith died intestate in Breathitt county, leaving surviving him as his only heirs at law his widow, Nancy, and his son, George Smith. In July, 1887, John W. Cardwell, a creditor of the decedent, brought suit in the Breathitt circuit court to settle his estate, and in the petition described a tract of land that he asked should be sold for the purpose of paying the debts due by the estate. In 1889 the appellant Little filed his petition in this action to be made a party, making it an answer and cross-petition, in which he set up that in July, 1887, more than six months after the death of William Smith, one Harry Baldwin for a good and valuable consideration paid to Nancy Smith and George Smith purchased from them the tract of land described in the petition filed to settle the estate, and on that day the same was conveyed to Baldwin by deed; that in August, 1889, Baldwin sold and conveyed the land to him, and in 1889 Nancy and George Smith conveyed it to him; that immediately after he purchased the land he took actual possession thereof, and was in possession at the time he filed his petition. He asked that the pleading be taken as his answer to the plaintiff's petition, and as a cross-petition against the other defendants, and prayed that the petition be dismissed and he be adjudged the owner of the land.

The orders of the court show that this pleading was duly filed in January, 1889. In 1888 an order was made referring the case to the master commissioner to report claims, and a commissioner's report of claims was filed, and again in the same year a second report was filed. In 1889 the reports of claims, excepting two small items, were confirmed. In 1891 the action was submitted for judgment, and a judgment entered directing the commissioner to sell the land mentioned in the petition for the purpose of paying the debts due by the estate. This judgment does not make any mention of Little's claim or pleading, although his original pleading setting up that he was the owner of the land and asking that Cardwell's petition be dismissed had been filed two years before. In 1894 the commissioner filed his report of sale, reciting that the real estate was sold to W. T. Hogg for $418. In March, 1894, an order was entered showing that the papers and commissioner's report of sale were lost, and an order made referring the matter to a special commissioner to supply the lost papers. In July, 1894, there is an order showing that the commissioner's report of sale was filed, and in March, 1896, Cardwell made a motion to confirm the commissioner's report of sale filed in 1891. In 1899 the motion to confirm the commissioner's report of sale was renewed, to which Little excepted. In June, 1909, Little filed exceptions to the commissioner's report of sale, and thereafter, at the same term, the cause was submitted upon Cardwell's motion to have the sale confirmed and a deed made and upon the exceptions filed by Little to the report of sale. The judgment recites that the court "finds that said Little's petition to be made a party was filed on the 4th day of January, 1889, setting up claim to the land described in the petition, and that the judgment ordering said sale was made at the September term 1891. He further finds that the matters and things claimed by said Little were settled by said judgment." The court further overruled the exceptions of Little to the commissioner's report, and, it appearing that all the debts had been paid, ordered that the commissioner's report of sale be confirmed and a deed made to the assignee of the purchaser.

The appellant prosecutes this appeal from the judgment rendered in 1891, and also from the final order entered in 1909. Whether or not the appellant's cause of action is meritorious is doubtful. The conveyance by Nancy and George Smith was merely an option giving to Baldwin the right to purchase the land at $3 per acre, provided the Smiths furnished to Baldwin a survey of the land, and tendered a title acceptable to him within 90 days after the date of the option. This conveyance was made some 8 months after the death of William Smith, and about 30 days before the suit was filed to settle the estate. It nowhere appears that the Smiths within 90 days or any other time tendered to Baldwin either a survey or an abstract of title, or that Baldwin ever paid to them anything for the land. The deed from Baldwin to Little, and from Nancy and George Smith to Little, were not made until after the suit to settle the estate had been filed. So far as the deed from Baldwin to Little is concerned, it is sufficient to say that Baldwin had no title to the land he attempted to convey. The deed made by Nancy and George Smith to Little was made nearly two years after the suit was filed to settle the estate and sell the land for the purpose of paying the debts of the decedent under whom they took the land by inheritance. But, whether or not there is any merit in Little's contention—passing the question of the title, if any, he obtained—we see no escape from the conclusion that he rested too long upon his rights, if he had any. At the time the judgment was entered in 1891 Little was before the court upon his own motion by the pleading filed by him in 1889 asserting title to the land sought to be sold in the suit to settle the estate and asking that the petition be dismissed. And, although this judgment does not mention Little's name or his pleading, it is manifest that the court entering the judgment was of the opinion that the claim asserted by him was not a valid or meritorious one. In adjudging that the land should be sold to satisfy the debts of William Smith, the court necessarily adjudged that Little had no title to it. So far as Little was concerned, it was a final, adverse, and appealable determination of the claim of title to the land asserted by him in his pleading. That judgment has never been vacated or modified. After its entry, Little had no interest or concern in the subsequent proceedings, as the judgment, in effect, determined that he had no title to the land. We are unable to perceive how the fact that the sale made under the judgment was not confirmed for many years afterwards, or that the papers in the case were lost or mislaid, or that the action was continued for years at a time, can be of any benefit to Little. No satisfactory reason—nor indeed any reason—is assigned why Little, who was before the court with actual notice of this judgment, did not take some steps to have it set aside by appeal to this court or motion in the lower court.

As the appeal was not prosecuted in time, it must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

SPENCER v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 26, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 741*)—TRIAL—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

It is only where there is no evidence tending to connect accused with the commission of the crime that the court is warranted in taking the case from the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1713, 1727; Dec. Dig. § 741.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—WEIGHING EVIDENCE ON REVIEW.

Where there is evidence sufficient to take the case to the jury, the verdict will not be disturbed on review, in the absence of other errors, though the evidence is slight.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3074; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1180*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—SUBSEQUENT APPEALS.

A decision on appeal that the evidence is sufficient to take the case to the jury is the law of the case, and conclusive on a subsequent appeal, where the evidence is substantially the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3003; Dec. Dig. § 1180.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 339*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

The exclusion of cumulative evidence to show ill will and threats toward deceased by a third person does not require a reversal of a conviction of murder.

Ray Mann, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

LASSING, J. On the morning of the 21st of February, 1907, Mary Virginia Sauer was found dead in her bed at the end of a hall on the second floor of Mrs. Watson's boarding house, on Third and Walnut streets, Louisville. There were circumstances which led the authorities to believe that she had been murdered, and Samuel Spencer was arrested, charged with this crime. It was developed that she had met her death by strangulation. This was apparent from finger marks upon her throat and neck, and it was the theory of the commonwealth that the accused had thus killed her, either for the purpose of robbing her, or else to satisfy a feeling of revenge and hatred which he entertained toward her. Shortly thereafter he was indicted, tried, and convicted; the death penalty being imposed. From the judgment predicated on that verdict, an appeal was prosecuted to this court and the case was reversed because of the admission of certain incompetent evidence. The facts of the case are fully stated in the former opinion, which may be found in 107 S. W. 342, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 880. Upon a second trial the accused was found guilty, and his punishment fixed at life imprisonment, and the case is again before us for review. The errors complained of are two: First, that the verdict is not supported by the evidence, and is contrary to the evidence; and, second, that the court erred in excluding certain evidence offered by the defendant to his prejudice.

The first ground relied upon for reversal is wholly untenable, for the twofold reason: First, where there is any evidence in criminal cases, under a long line of decisions of this court, it is proper to leave the question of guilt or innocence to the determination of the jury, and it is only in cases where there is no evidence at all tending to connect the accused with the commission of the crime that the trial court is warranted in taking the case from the jury, and, where there is evidence to take the case to the jury, its finding will not be disturbed, in the absence of other errors, because the evidence is slight (Barrett v. Meek, 2 Ky. 34; Vowells v. Commonwealth, 83 Ky. 193; Tipper v. Commonwealth, 1 Metc. 6; Johnson v. Commonwealth, 9 Bush, 224; Kean v. Commonwealth, 10 Bush, 190, 19 Am. Rep. 63; Murphy v. Commonwealth, 1 Metc. 365; McDaniel v. Commonwealth, 6 Bush, 326; Patterson v. Commonwealth, 86 Ky. 313, 5 S. W. 387); and, second, because practically all of the evidence which was given on behalf of the commonwealth on the first trial was given to the jury on the last trial, and upon the former appeal this court held that the evidence tending to show the defendant's guilt, or to connect him with the commission of the crime, was sufficient to take the case to the jury. We are still of that opinion; but, even if we entertained a different view, under another line of authorities it is held that a ruling upon a former appeal will not be disturbed upon the second appeal, but must be regarded as the law of the case, and hence, having on the former appeal said that the evidence was sufficient to take the case to the jury, we would be bound by that ruling on this appeal. Brown v. Crow's Heirs, 3 Ky. 451; Webb v. Porter, 76 S. W. 363, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 745; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Survant, 44 S. W. 88, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 1576; Schmetzer v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 44 S. W. 395, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 1713; Commonwealth v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 46 S. W. 206, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 351; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Monroe & Co., 52 S. W. 1058, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 782; Brashears v. Letcher County Court, 54 S. W. 840, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 1250; Freeman v. Mills, 59 S. W. 3, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 859.

The second ground relied upon for reversal arises out of the attempt, on the part of the accused, to show that the murder may have been committed by another. It is made to appear from the evidence that Mrs. Watson, the landlady, a woman of some 70 years of age, weighing about 180 pounds and rather masculine in appearance, entertained a feeling of hostility toward this girl, and had at various times given expression to this feeling of ill will and resentment, and had even gone so far, on several occasions, as to state that she, the Sauer woman, made her mad enough to want to kill her. Several expressions of this kind on the part of Mrs. Watson were admitted in evidence, and it was abundantly made to appear, from the statements of this character that were admitted in evidence, that Mrs. Watson had repeatedly said that the Sauer girl made her mad enough for her to want to kill her. The statements that were excluded would have been but cumulative upon this point, although, perhaps, one which was excluded was more emphatic than the others. Mrs. Watson, shortly after the death of this girl, was adjudged to be insane, and, when being taken from the building, tried to choke those who had her in charge. This, it is urged, is evidence of the fact that she chose this method of attack. All of this show of ill will toward, and hatred for, Mary Sauer, and her frequent talks about her, indicative of a willingness to punish or injure her, was fully brought out by the evidence of this character that was admitted to the jury, and appellant could not possibly have been prejudiced by reason of the exclusion of the evidence complained of.

Upon the whole case, and after a careful examination of the record, we fail to find that the court committed any error prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant. He has been given two trials, and upon each he has been found guilty. The jury which tried him last, as did the first, found that he was guilty of willful murder. The only difference between the two is that the last was more merciful, if it can be considered such, in that, instead of the death penalty, it inflicted the life imprisonment punishment. The opinion of these 24 jurors, who heard all of the evidence and observed the appellant and his conduct during each of the trials, is entitled to much consideration; and, even though there are some matters brought out in the evidence which are difficult of explanation, we find many facts and circumstances which tend strongly to show that the jury reached the right conclusion.

Judgment affirmed.

MITCHELL v. WEDDINGTON.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 26, 1909.)

BROKERS (§ 58*)—COMMISSIONS—DEFENSE.

Defendant, who contracted to pay plaintiff a certain amount per acre commission if plaintiff would buy for him the coal on a certain farm, is not estopped to assert, as against plaintiff's claim for commission, that one of the owners was an infant, so that a binding contract for sale of all the coal, which was contemplated, was not obtained; he not having employed defendant with knowledge of the infancy of such owner, though he had not based his refusal to carry out the contract of purchase on such infancy.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pike County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by W. B. Mitchell against Ballard Weddington. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

N. J. Auxier and Roscoe Vanover, for appellant. York & Johnson, for appellee.

CLAY, C. This action was instituted in the Pike circuit court by the appellant, W. B. Mitchell, to recover from appellee, Ballard Weddington, the sum of $477, as commission for the purchase of the coal and minerals on the Samuel Keel farm, which appellant alleges he was employed by appellee to purchase. At the conclusion of appellant's testimony the court instructed the jury to find for appellee. To review the propriety of this ruling this appeal is prosecuted.

It is charged in the petition that appellee employed appellant to obtain for him a written contract from Samuel Newsom and those to whom he had made deeds for portion of his land for the coal and minerals on said land, that there are 954 acres of land, and that the commission which appellee agreed to pay was 50 cents per acre. It was further charged that the price to be paid the vendors was $5 per acre. The petition alleged that, in pursuance of said contract of employment, appellant secured from Samuel Newsom and his children, to whom he had conveyed portions of the land, the following contract:

"We the undersigned have this day bargained and sold to Ballard Weddington, all the coal and mineral products in, on and under our lands on Indian creek for the agreed price of $5.00 per acre with the exclusive right of way to enter upon said land, mine, operate and remove said mineral products. Said land to be surveyed at the expense of said Weddington, and to be done within thirty days from this date, otherwise this trade is null and void.

"It is agreed that Samuel Newsom reserves the inclosed lot around his dwelling house and orchard. It is further agreed that the parties of the first part reserve the right to use coal for domestic purposes.

"Said parties of the first part give the right to use timber on said land at the time of mining for mining purposes, twelve inches and down.

"Given under our hands this March 23, 1908.

"(Signed) Samuel Newsom,
"J. L. Newsom,
"Preston Newsom,
"Noah Newsom,
"Henry Newsom,
"Mary Owens."

It was also alleged in the petition that the parties signing the above contract were the sole owners of the land known as the "Old Samuel Keel Farm," and of all the land that appellant contracted and agreed to buy for appellee; that the parties signing said contract had requested appellee to take the coal and minerals and pay for same, but that he had refused to do so; that said parties were ready, able, and willing to convey same to appellee by deed with covenant of general warranty.

Besides other defenses set up in the answer and amended answer, appellee defended on the ground that Noah Newsom, one of the parties signing the contract, and who owned a portion of the land, was an infant at the time, and also at the time of the bringing of the suit, and was unable to convey a good title to appellee. It appears from the record that appellant met appellee at Catlettsburg, Ky. Appellee said he understood the coal and minerals on the Samuel Keel or Samuel Newsom land on Indian creek could be bought for $5 per acre, and that he wanted appellant to go up there and buy it for him if he could buy it so it would not cost more than that price; that if appellant would do so, appellee would give him 50 cents per acre for buying it. Appellant then went to Pike county and secured the contract in question. He got a party to notify appellee that he had secured the contract. A few days before the contract of purchase was to expire, three of the Newsoms who had signed the contract met appellant and appellee in Pikeville. At that time appellee made some objection to the contract, based on the reservations therein made, and stated that he was willing to buy the land in fee. Appellee took the contract to his attorney, who said it was no account. He did not then refuse to carry out the purchase because one of the parties signing the contract was an infant. The proof further shows that, as a

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The lower court, in giving a peremptory instruction, based its action upon the fact that Noah Newsom was an infant, and was therefore unable to make title to his part of the land. It is earnestly insisted for appellant that appellee, after giving other reasons for not completing the purchase, is estopped from setting up the defense that Noah Newsom was an infant. It is manifest, however, that appellant was employed to secure a contract of purchase. Had he obtained a written contract that was binding upon the parties signing it, and from parties who were ready, able, and willing to convey the land, appellant would have been entitled to his commission. This, however, he failed to do. When appellant was employed to purchase the land, it was evidently contemplated that he should purchase all the coal and mineral interests therein, and not a part of it. There is nothing in the record tending to show that appellee knew that one of the owners of the coal and minerals was an infant, and, notwithstanding this fact, he employed appellant to purchase the interests so far as he could. When we consider the language which appellant says appellee used in employing him, there can be no doubt that he was employed to purchase all the coal and minerals. It was not incumbent upon appellee to state any reasons for refusing to purchase the land, and the fact that he stated one reason for refusing to purchase at a time could not estop him from refusing to carry out the contract when he had a valid and legal reason for refusing to do so. The cases cited by appellant are not applicable to the facts of this case. In those cases the brokers had done all that they contracted to do. Here the appellant did not do all that he contracted to do, because he failed to purchase the land by a contract that was binding on all the parties signing it. We, therefore, conclude that the court properly instructed the jury to find for appellee.

Judgment affirmed.

1. CONTRACTS (§ 266*) — CONSIDERATION — REPUDIATION.

Where a widow holding a life estate in certain land, after having contracted to permit defendants to use it so long as they should provide for her support, repudiated it because it rested in parol, defendants were not entitled to charge for their services regardless of the proportionate value of the use of the land; the contract being valid so far as executed.

placed valuable permanent improvements on the property on the faith of their right to possession, they were entitled, on the life tenant's repudiation of the contract because resting in parol, to a lien on the life estate to the extent that the improvements enhanced the vendible value of the property, not exceeding the reasonable value of the improvements.

Appeals from Circuit Court, Owen County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Suit by Mary C. Hampton against W. A. Glass and others. Judgment for complainant, and defendants appeal and complainant prosecutes cross-appeal. Reversed in part.

See, also, 116 S. W. 243.

Jno. W. Douglas and W. A. Lee, for appellants. James H. Settle, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. These two appeals are prosecuted on the same record, one having been filed by the appellee and the other by appellants. The appellee is the widow of R. N. Hampton, who devised to her a tract of land containing about 80 acres, to hold during her life or until she married. In this suit against the appellants she alleged they were wrongfully holding it against her, and that she was entitled to the possession and damages for the detention. The appellants filed an answer, in which they set up in substance that under the will they had an estate in remainder in the land, and that in September, 1906, they entered into an oral contract with the appellee, whereby they agreed to board, nurse, and care for her as long as she lived, and in consideration for this service they were to purchase the interest of the other devisees in the farm and have the use of it so long as they or either of them should comply with the contract with appellee; that relying upon this contract, they purchased the interest of the other heirs, removed from their former residences to the farm, and for some two years had performed their contract with the appellee by boarding, nursing, and caring for her, and were able and willing to continue so to do. To this answer a general demurrer was filed and overruled, and the appellee, electing to stand by her demurrer, brought the case to this court. Here the judgment was reversed in an opinion that may be found in 116 S. W. 243; the court holding that the contract was for an interest in real estate, and therefore, to be valid and enforceable, must be in writing. Upon a return of the case the appellants offered to file an amended answer, set-off, and counterclaim. In this pleading they averred that under and in compliance with the parol contract they had nursed, cared for, and supported the appellee for two years and six months, and that this service was reasonably worth $1,300. They further averred that, relying on appellee's agreement, they made at her request, and with her knowledge and consent, permanent and lasting improvements on the land, which were reasonably worth the sum of $300—none of which would have been made had they known that appellee would attempt to take possession of the land or dispossess them. They further averred that the reasonable rental value of the land during the two years and six months they occupied it was $312.55, and set up that they were entitled under the contract, either to the possession of the land, or to compensation for the services rendered and improvements made. They asked that if the petition could not be dismissed, they have judgment against the appellee for the reasonable value of the improvement placed on the land, and the amount charged for the services rendered appellee, and that they be adjudged a lien on the land to secure the payment of these sums. To the filing of this pleading objection was made and sustained, and, declining to plead further, judgment was entered, awarding to appellee the possession of the land in controversy. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

It will be observed that in the original pleading, which was only an answer, no claim whatever was made for improvements, nor was the amount to which appellants claimed to be entitled for services set out. The pleading merely set up the contract, and the fact that under it the services mentioned had been rendered, and asked that the petition be dismissed. No affirmative relief was sought. Whereas in the amended pleading facts are stated with reference to the improvements that present affirmatively, by way of counterclaim, a good cause of action, and the court in our opinion erred in sustaining the general demurrer.

So far as the claim for boarding, nursing, and caring for appellee is concerned, the appellants do not state a good cause of action. Under the contract they undertook, in consideration of the use and possession of the land, to board, nurse, and care for appellee. They have had the use and possession of the land during all of the time for which they seek to recover for board, nursing, and attention. In other words, appellee has already paid them for the services rendered everything that she agreed to. They have received the compensation for which they obliged themselves to render the services. It is true the pleading asserts that the services rendered during the two years and six months were reasonably worth $1,300, while the fair rental value of the land during the time was only worth $312.55, but the appellants cannot, by mere averments like these, overturn the very contract under which they seek relief. If they are entitled to anything, it is by virtue of the contract under which they agreed to render the services charged for and receive as compensation the use of the land. And so the use of the land fully satisfies their claim for services during the time they enjoyed the use.

But the question of improvements stands upon a different ground. There was no express contract that obliged the appellants to make any improvements, or the appellee to pay for any they might make. But the pleading charges—and as the record now appears we must accept the averment as true—that when the improvements were made, the appellants believed in good faith that the appellee would permit them to use and occupy the land during the time that she was entitled to hold it under the will, and in addition thereto that they were made at her request and with her knowledge. It has been adjudged in several cases that, when a vendee enters upon land in good faith under a verbal contract, and, believing that the contract will be adhered to, puts, with or without the knowledge or express or implied consent of the vendor, upon the premises valuable and lasting improvements that enhance the vendible value of the place, if the vendor after the improvements have been made rescinds or repudiates the contract and recovers the premises, the person making the improvements is entitled to be paid a sum equal to the amount that the improvements enhance the vendible value of the property, not exceeding the reasonable value of the improvements, and to secure the payment of such sum will be allowed a lien upon the property. But, unless the improvements do enhance the vendible value of the property, the person putting them on the premises will not be allowed anything except the privilege of removing them if this can practicably be done. Robards v. Robards, 85 S. W. 718, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 494; Poole v. Johnson, 101 S. W. 955, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 168; Bell v. Bair, 39 S. W. 732, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 614; Hawkins v. Brown, 80 Ky. 136; Thomas v. Thomas, 16 B. Mon. 421; Pulliam v. Jennings, 5 Bush, 433.

Applying to this case the principles stated, the appellants, while not entitled to hold possession of the land as against the appellee, should be given a lien on it to secure them in the payment of any sum that may be adjudged in their favor on account of improvements put on the land. The sum, if any, allowed appellants should be the amount that the improvements enhance the vendible value of the life estate, not exceeding the amount expended in the improvements, and in no event should any sum be allowed for improvements that are not permanent and lasting. Upon a return of the case, issue may be joined upon the question of the improvements, and evidence taken by either or both parties. Appellants do not ask, and if they did would not be entitled under the circumstances of this case to, the possession of the property until the question concerning the improvements is settled. They only ask a lien to secure the amount that may be allowed for improvements, and this they are entitled to.

Except as to the matter of improvements, the judgment will not be disturbed, but upon this point it must be reversed, with directions to proceed in conformity with this opinion.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, First Division.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by John Nicholson and others against Fannie B. Akers and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded as to one defendant, and affirmed as to the others.

Boldrick & Gocke, for appellants. Kinney & Thomas, for appellees.

NUNN, C. J. One Frank B. Akers, a son of Mary J. Akers and a brother of the other appellants herein, was engaged in the business of making brick in the city of Louisville, and appellees, Nicholson & Hackett, dealers in coal in that city, furnished Akers with coal with which to burn his brick, for which Akers became indebted to them in the sum of about $360, for which he executed his note with his mother, Mary J. Akers, as surety. The debt was not paid, and appellees brought suit against the son and mother and recovered a judgment for the amount of the indebtedness, less a credit of $150. Mary J. Akers owned three vacant lots on St. Catharine street in the city of Louisville, one of which she conveyed to appellant John H. Akers, one to Fannie B. Akers, and the other to Ella A. Akers. And this action was brought to set aside these deeds as fraudulent, and to subject the lots to the payment of appellees' judgment. The lower court sustained appellees' claim, and appellants have appealed.

Under the testimony, there is no doubt about the fact that Mary J. Akers and Frank Akers were insolvent at the time she made this conveyance, and that appellants knew it. In fact, appellants Fannie B. and Ella concede, in effect, in their testimony that they took titles to their lots with the intention of preventing appellees from selling the lots for the payment of their debt. It was alleged and proved by appellants that John H. Akers had furnished to his mother before the conveyance to him money to the amount of $425, which she owed him at the time of the conveyance; that Fannie B. furnished to her mother before and after the conveyance, the exact amount before and after not stated, to the amount of $275; and that Ella, in the same way as Fannie, to the amount of $125. It appears that the girls were working for themselves; that they collected their wages monthly and delivered them to their mother to keep for them, and from time to time authorized their mother to take from their money different sums, until she had taken from each the amounts above stated. John H. Akers was married and lived with his family, a wife and five children, apart from the other appellants. The testimony shows that he furnished to his mother small sums of money from time to time as she needed it, to the amount of about $300, and a short time before the conveyance was made to him she requested him to furnish her money with which to pay appellees, which he refused to do, stating that he had a family to support, unless he could be secured in some way. The testimony further shows that she agreed with him that, if he would furnish her as much as $150, she would secure him by conveying this lot to him. He furnished her the $150, and she paid it to appellees, which is the credit referred to.

The lower court uses the following language in its opinion, to wit: "I am not at all satisfied that these children were real creditors of their mother. The testimony is entirely consistent with the mere paying of board on the part of the girls; while John does not satisfactorily show how he saved $450 out of a salary of $45 a month, plus an indefinite income from the teaming business, while supporting a family consisting of a wife and five children. The burden is upon him to explain that, and he has not done it." We do not feel inclined to differ with the court's conclusion as to the evidence, except in one particular. John H. Akers stated in his testimony that he borrowed the $150, which was paid to appellees, from the German Insurance Bank, which shows that he did not save it out of his business after supporting his family. If it were not true that he borrowed this money from the bank, appellees could have shown it by some of the officials of the bank, and, if this money was given to his mother with which to pay appellees upon a promise by her that she would secure him by conveying a lot to him, which she did, it would have the effect to make the deed operate as a mortgage to secure the $150 which he borrowed and loaned her. Upon this matter, the equity of the case is with appellant John H. Akers. He perpetrated wrong or fraud with reference to this matter upon appellees, nor did he aid his mother to do so, but enabled them to get $150 in which they were urging should be paid. In our opinion appellant John H. Akers has no prior lien on the lot conveyed to him for payment of this sum, $150, with its interest. We do not feel authorized in any other respect to disturb the finding of the court.

For these reasons, the judgment with reference to John H. Akers is reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith, and affirmed as to the other appellants.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. (Court of Appeals of Kentucky. No. 1002*)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*) WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

The jury has the exclusive right to weigh conflicting evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3935-3937 1002.*]

2. COURTS (§ 95*) — INJURY RIGHT OF ACTION—WHAT LAW?

The right of recovery for a road crossing in another state is governed by a statutory provision, to the laws of that state as declared by the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dig. §§ 322, 323; Dec. Dig. § 322.]

3. CARRIERS (§ 337*) — INJURY CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

A person going to a train with a friend, who exercised due care in the situation in passing from a crossing was not so negligent in passing between cars three feet apart as to prevent him from being struck by one of the cars suddenly under the rule in Alabama to stop, look, and listen before crossing. If track is such contributor to the accident, it defeats a recovery for contributory negligence unless the evidence shows that the contributory negligence was gross, willful, or wanton.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dec. Dig. § 337.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 304*) COMPANYING PASSENGER

Though a carrier is not liable for injury to a passenger due to carelessness of a passenger, the carrier has a duty to care for his safety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cent. Dig. § 111.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 304*) COMPANYING PASSENGER

A person going with a passenger need not exercise due care for his safety.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

"To be officially reported."

Action by L. W. Smith against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Helm & Helm and Benjamin D. Warfield, for appellant. W. O. Bradley and Snodgrass & Dibrell, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellee, Smith, at Blount Springs, Ala., while on his way to the depot platform from which passengers got on and off trains, was caught between the bumpers of the cabooses on two trains on the siding between the depot and the passenger platform. Both of his hands were crushed so badly that his right hand had to be amputated and his left hand is practically useless. To recover damages for the injuries sustained he brought this action, and upon a trial before a jury was awarded $12,500.

A reversal is asked upon four grounds: First, that under the laws of Alabama the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in endeavoring to pass between the trains, which were attached to engines with steam up, and therefore the defendant's motion for a peremptory instruction should have been sustained; second, that the court erred in instructing the jury that they might find for the plaintiff, Smith, notwithstanding his contributory negligence, if they believed that when he came in peril from the trains the employees of the company in charge of the trains could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered his peril and by ordinary care have prevented his injury; third, that the court erred in allowing the jury to award punitive damages if they found the defendant guilty of gross negligence; fourth, that the company's theory of its defense was not submitted to the jury, and the instructions given are involved in confusion.

The evidence upon all material points is conflicting but with the weight of it on any issue we are not particularly concerned, as the jury have the exclusive right, in cases like this, to decide controverted questions of fact. Therefore, having in mind only the controlling facts, and without attempting to set out the testimony in detail, we may say that the evidence is, in substance, as follows: Blount Springs is a small village immediately on the line of the appellant's railroad, and at the time of the injuries complained of it was frequented by a number of people who went there to visit the springs in the neighborhood. The appellee, a native of Texas, arrived at Blount Springs for the first time on the morning of July 22, 1907, and spent the day in and around the hotel and the village. About 5:40 in the afternoon he started on his way to the passenger platform for the purpose of meeting a friend he was expecting on the north-bound Decatur passenger train that was due to arrive about the time he went to the station. The railroad at Blount Springs runs north and south, and on the east side of the road is situated the depot, the houses that constitute the village, and the springs. The track nearest to the depot is a long siding, and between this siding and the main track is the platform used by passengers in getting on and off trains standing on the main track. At the time appellee started to go to this platform there were on the siding four trains. One of these trains, known as No. 12, was a long freight, headed north, that went in on the south end of the siding, and pulled up until its caboose was opposite the depot and then stopped. Soon thereafter train No. 21, known as the "water train," consisting of an engine, two cars, and a caboose, backed in on the siding from the south end, and stopped with its caboose some 30 to 60 feet from the caboose of train No. 12 thereby leaving a space of that distance between the two cabooses immediately in front of the depot, through which persons going to and from the passenger train to the depot might pass. Shortly after the water train backed in, a long freight train, known as No. 19, going south, also backed in on the south end of the siding, and stopped with its caboose some 40 to 80 feet from the engine of the water train. After this, passenger train No. 8, going north, also ran partially in on the south end of the siding, but could not go far enough to clear the main track on account of the freight trains. About the time that passenger train No. 8 went in on the siding, passenger train No. 5, going south, came up on the main track, and stopped in front of the depot to permit passengers to get on and off. With the four trains on the siding, and the spaces before mentioned that had been left between them, passenger train No. 5 going south could not pass passenger train No. 8 standing partially on the south end of the siding and partially on the main track. So that, when passenger train No. 5 started on its journey south, signals were given to the engineers on the water

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

But before the space between the cabooses in front of the depot was closed at all by the moving of the water train, a number of passengers and people had passed between the cabooses going to and from the train and the platform. Appellee was not at the depot or observing the trains when the space between the cabooses was 30 to 60 feet, or when the signals to close the space were given, or when the water train started back, but about the time he reached the depot on his way to the platform the caboose of the water train had been backed to within 3 to 10 feet of the caboose of train No. 12, and was standing still, and the caboose of train No. 19 had been backed close to the engine of the water train. Just as appellee, who stopped, looked, and listened to ascertain if the passage was safe, stepped on the siding, the water train suddenly backed, and he was caught between its caboose and the caboose of train No. 19, which had never moved its position after going on the siding. The evidence is very satisfactory that when the water train by backing closed up the original space of 30 to 60 feet between it and train No. 19 to a distance of from 3 to 10 feet, it stopped for a few minutes, and it may be inferred from the testimony that the trainmen did not intend, at this time, to run it any closer to the caboose of train No. 19, and that the sudden movement of the water train that caught appellee was caused by the slack running out of train No. 21, the caboose of which had been stopped within a few feet of the engine of the water train, and striking the engine of the water train, thereby shoving it and its cars back. At the moment appellee was injured the trainmen who were giving the signals that moved the water train and train No. 19, were standing between the siding and the main track, but before this, and when the passengers from No. 5 were being discharged and the signals to close the space were about to be given, these trainmen, and probably others, notified people to get out of the way; that the space would be closed. Whether or not any persons were on the rear platform of the caboose of the water train, or the caboose of train No. 12, when appellee was injured is sharply disputed; the evidence for the company being that one brakeman was on the rear platform of the water train caboose, and one brakeman on the rear platform of the caboose of train No. 12, while the evidence for the appellee is that there was no brakeman at that time on either of these cabooses. The evidence also conduces to show that, just as the cabooses came together, one of the trainmen, and probably a spectator, holloed at appellee in an effort to warn him of his danger, but it was too late.

From this statement it may be summarized a space of from 30 to 60 feet in front of the depot between the cabooses, left for the purpose of permitting persons to go to and from the depot to the passenger train; (2) that when passenger train No. 5 started, it was intended to close the space of 40 to 80 feet between the caboose of train No. 19 and the engine of the water train, and to partially at least close the space in front of the depot between the caboose of the water train and the caboose of train No. 12, so that No. 8 might clear the main track and allow No. 5 to pass; (3) that when the caboose of the water train came within 3 to 10 feet of the caboose of train No. 12, the water train stopped, and after stopping for a few minutes it was put in motion, and its caboose caused to hit the caboose of train No. 12; (4) that at the time Smith was injured the bells on the engine of train No. 19 and on the engine of the water train were ringing; (5) that train No. 8, on which appellee expected the person he went to the depot to meet, would have reached the depot platform a few minutes after he started to go to the platform; (6) that appellee did not know anything about the movements of the trains until he went to the depot to cross, and then there was a space in front of the depot of 3 to 10 feet between the cabooses of train No. 12 and the water train, both of which were standing still; (7) that before appellee went between the cabooses, he stopped, looked, and listened to ascertain if it would be safe to cross, and had no warning or notice that it would not.

Upon these facts the court gave to the jury the following instructions:

"No. 1. The court instructs the jury that the law is for the plaintiff, and they should so find, unless they shall believe from the evidence that, before the defendant moved its trains, or either of them, which were standing on the passing switch at Blount Springs, Ala., at the time mentioned in the petition to close the passageway across the said switch between the ends of its two freight trains then standing on said switch track, the employes of the defendant in charge of the train by which plaintiff was injured exercised ordinary care to give timely and reasonably sufficient notice that the train was about to be moved to close the said passageway, and exercised ordinary care to prevent injury to the plaintiff from the moving train, unless they shall further believe from the evidence that the plaintiff himself was negligent, and thereby helped to cause or bring about his injuries; that but for his own negligence, if any there was, he would not have been injured.

"No. 2. But if the defendant did give timely and reasonable notice, as mentioned in instruction No. 1, that the passageway between the said trains was about to be closed by backing one or both of said trains, and did exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to the plaintiff from the moving train, the law is for the defendant, and so they should find.

"No. 3. It was the duty of the plaintiff, before he entered upon the passway between the said two trains, to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and to stop and look and listen to ascertain whether he could cross the track without injury from the said trains; and, if he failed to discharge either of these duties, and by reason of such failure he helped to cause or bring about the injuries of which he complains, and he would not have been injured but for his contributory negligence in that respect, then the law is for the defendant, and so they should find, even though you may believe from the evidence that the defendant was negligent in failing to give notice of the fact that the train was about to be backed to close the passageway, if such is the fact, unless you shall further believe from the evidence that when the plaintiff came in peril from the train, the employees of the defendant in charge of the train could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered his peril, and by ordinary care have prevented his injury.

"No. 4. If you find for the plaintiff, you should find in such a sum as will reasonably and fairly compensate him for any pain and suffering, mental and physical, caused him by his injuries, and for any pain and suffering which it is reasonably certain from the evidence he will endure in the future as a result of his injuries, and for any permanent reduction in his power to earn money directly resulting from his injuries; and, if you shall believe from the evidence that his injuries were caused by the gross negligence of the defendant, then you may in your discretion find in such a further or additional sum as you may think right and proper under the evidence, and on these instructions, not exceeding in all the sum of $50,000, the amount claimed in the petition. If you find for the defendant, you will say so, and no more.

"No. 5. Ordinary care means the degree of care usually observed by ordinarily careful and prudent persons under the same or similar circumstances. Negligence means a failure to observe ordinary care. Gross negligence means a failure to observe slight care. Contributory negligence means a failure upon the part of the plaintiff, if he did so fail, to observe care for his own safety, as mentioned in instruction No. 3, and by reason of such failure he helped to cause or bring about his injuries, and when but for such failure he would not have been injured."

Under the law of this state, as settled in more than one opinion of this court, the facts of this case authorized the trial court to instruct the jury as it did, and warranted the jury in finding a verdict in favor of Smith and assessing the damages at the amount awarded. But, as the injuries occurred in the state of Alabama, the right of Smith to recover, and the propriety of the instructions given, is, in the absence of any statutory law in that state on the subject, to be determined by the laws of that state as declared by its Supreme Court. L. & N. R. Co. v. Whitlow, 43 S. W. 711, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 1861, 41 L. R. A. 614; Illinois Central R. Co. v. Jordan, 117 Ky. 512, 78 S. W. 426, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1610; L. & N. R. Co. v. Graham, 98 Ky. 688, 34 S. W. 229, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 1229; L. & N. R. Co. v. Harmon, 64 S. W. 640, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 871; L. & N. R. Co. v. Wyatt, 93 S. W. 601, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 437; L. & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer, 113 S. W. 433. That court has frequently considered questions like the one involved in this case, and counsel in support of their respective contentions have furnished us with an ample array of authorities. And so we will proceed to examine these decisions and apply them to the evidence and the law as given by the trial judge, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the errors assigned are well taken.

Taking up, first, the question of contributory negligence:

The theory of the company is that at the time appellee went through the opening the space between the two cabooses was not over three feet, and that if the water train was not at that time moving, it had only stopped a moment before, and appellee from his position could and should have known that the trains were closing up the space; that as there was then no passenger train at the platform, and the passenger train upon which appellee expected his friend to arrive was on the siding some distance off, appellee in attempting to cross as he did went into an obviously dangerous place, which, if he desired to cross, he could have avoided by crossing on the platform of one of the cabooses. It may be conceded that, if we should accept as true this view of the case, there would be much force in the argument that the appellee was guilty of such contributory negligence as authorized a direction to the jury, under the law as expounded by the Supreme Court of Alabama, to find a verdict for the company.

In Pannell v. Nashville, F. & S. R. Co., 97 Ala. 298, 12 South. 236, the facts were as follows: Several parallel tracks crossed streets in a town, and on one of these tracks cars had been placed for the purpose of being loaded and unloaded, but at the crossing a space of 15 or 20 feet was left between the cars for the use of the public. The cars had been placed in this way on the day preceding the accident, and Pannell, the injured party, who resided near the crossing, was entirely familiar with the location of the cars. On the day after the cars had been so placed, he passed through this opening, but on his return in about 30 minutes the opening had been materially diminished by an engine that was moving the cars, and in attempting to pass through he was caught between the drawheads and crushed. At the time the cars were placed on the track they were not connected with any engine, nor in charge of any employé, and no notice that the company intended to move them was given until shortly before the accident, when an engine was attached to the cars, and they were shifted about. In the course of the opinion the court said: "When Pannell crossed the track going west, the opening at the crossing was 15 or 20 or more feet, and the cars on either side were stationary. Everything about the crossing indicated perfect security in traveling the highway. When he returned appearances had greatly changed. The lumber cars left on the north side of the crossing had been moved so as to nearly block up the highway. Only a small opening was left. This should have been a warning to him that all was not well. He should have looked and listened. He was clearly guilty of contributory negligence in attempting, under the circumstances, to pass through the narrow opening. Had he looked at any time after passing the main track, save a narrow space hidden by a stack of shingles, he could not have failed to see the engine on the spur track with steam up."

In L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Crawford, 89 Ala. 244, 8 South. 243, 244, 245, a watchman while in the discharge of his duties was injured by a switch engine pushing a box car. In announcing the general rule the court said: "It is culpable negligence to cross the track of a railroad at a highway crossing without looking in every direction that the rails run to ascertain whether a train is approaching. If a party rushes into danger which by ordinary care he could have seen and avoided, no rule of law or justice can be invoked to compensate him for any injury he may receive. He must take care, and so must the other party. * * * We regard the question as settled in Alabama by our rulings cited above, and that a failure to employ the senses on approaching a railroad crossing, when such employment would insure safety, is as a matter of law contributory negligence, and a complete defense to a suit for injuries sustained by the negligent handling of a railroad train, unless such negligence was so reckless or wanton as to be in law the equivalent of willful or intentional. * * * No man should put himself in peril; and, if he negligently does so, the duty of active effort to avert injury is as binding on him as is the defendant corporation's duty to do all in its power to extricate him. If he fails in this, when such effort would probably save him from harm, he cannot be heard to complain that the defendant failed to do for him what he neglected to do for himself. We have stated the duty required of mere travelers."

In East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. Co. v. Kornegay, 92 Ala. 228, 9 South. 557, Kornegay was injured while on his way to a depot to see a person who was a passenger on an east-bound train that had just come in. This train stopped on the main track, and a west-bound train took the side track, and its engine was standing still across a dirt road. Kornegay passed by the side of the engine and walked parallel with the track, and then turned and stepped on the side track in the direction of the east-bound train, which was still standing on the main track. Just as his foot touched the crossing on the side track, he was knocked down by the engine of the west-bound train and injured. The court said: "It appears from Kornegay's own testimony that he was guilty of negligence proximately contributing to the injury. It is plain that he undertook to cross the railroad track without stopping or looking or listening to ascertain if a train was approaching. He says himself that he did not stop or look. When he passed the engine, it was standing still on a downgrade. It appeared from the testimony that the engine could not have been put in motion without making a noise, which the plaintiff must have heard if he had been listening. He was not in apparent danger until he turned and stepped on the side track. He was bound to look and listen before attempting to cross the track. His neglect of this duty avoids his right of recovery, in the absence of evidence tending to show that the defendant was guilty of negligence so reckless or wanton as to be in law the equivalent of willful or intentional wrong."

In each of these cases the rule is announced that the failure to stop and look and listen before crossing a railroad track is such contributory negligence as will defeat a recovery, in the absence of evidence showing that the company was guilty of reckless or wanton negligence. But in neither of them are the facts similar to those upon which the appellee rests his case. If we should assume that the railroad company in Alabama owed no higher duty to passengers or persons occupying the relation of appellee than it does to travelers at a public crossing, we should nevertheless feel obliged to hold that under the Alabama rule the appellee was not guilty of such contributory negligence as would defeat a recovery. The evidence introduced in his behalf shows that he was not negligent or inattentive, but that, on the contrary, before attempting to cross, he exercised ordinary care for his own safety by stopping and looking and listening. The appellee in attempting to go to the passenger platform was not a trespasser. He had a right to go there; and, although the company did not owe him the high duty attaching to a passenger, it did owe him the duty of exercising ordinary care for his safety. Montgomery & Eufaula Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 77 Ala. 448, 54 Am. Rep.

72; Berry v. L. & N. R. Co., 109 Ky. 727, 60 S. W. 690, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 1410; C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Meyer, 119 S. W. 183; Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 991; Thompson on Negligence, §§ 2685, 2686. The fact that the train upon which he was expecting his friend was not then standing on the main track at the depot for the purpose of discharging passengers is a matter of small moment, as it was only a short distance off on the siding, and might reasonably be expected to reach the depot in a few minutes, and was in fact due to arrive. A person going to the train to assist or accompany or receive a passenger need not wait until the train actually arrives before going on the platform, in order to avail himself of the principles of law that require the carrier to exercise ordinary care for his protection and safety. He may go to the platform when he sees the train approaching, or when it is reasonably near, or at the time he believes it should arrive. This being so, when appellee went to the depot, and saw an opening between the two cabooses amply wide for passage to the platform; saw other persons going through it; saw the trains standing still—he had the right to assume that the opening through which he attempted to pass had been purposely left there to permit persons to go to and from the depot and platform. The fact that the opening was there was an invitation to avail himself of it to cross. When an opening like this is left in a place like this, it is the duty of the railroad company to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to persons rightfully using it, and this duty, under circumstances like those proven in this case, is not fulfilled by ringing engine bells or sounding whistles. The duty of the company in this respect is not discharged until, or unless, it has given reasonably sufficient warning to the public having the right to use the passway that it is about to be closed; and whether or not it performed its duty in this particular was in this case a question for the jury. Tested by the Alabama rule, the appellee was not guilty of such contributory negligence as would defeat a recovery, and under the facts it was not necessary to show that the company was guilty of reckless or wanton conduct that would be in law the equivalent of willful or intentional wrong. This principle is only to be applied when it is attempted to avoid the consequences of a state of facts that would amount to such contributory negligence as would defeat a recovery in the absence of willful or intentional wrongdoing on the part of the company. When the injured person has not been guilty of this character of contributory negligence, it is not essential under the Alabama law that the company should be guilty of willful or intentional wrongdoing before he can recover. The Kentucky Cases of Southern Railway Co. v. Clarke, 105 S. W. 384, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 69, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1071, Southern Rail- way Co. v. Thomas, 92 S. W. 578, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 79, and Brackett's Adm'r v. L. & N. R. Co., 111 S. W. 710, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 921, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 558, cited by counsel, are not in conflict with the views we have expressed on the subject of contributory negligence. On the contrary, they are in harmony with them.

The next argument presented as grounds for reversal is that the court erred in instructing the jury that, if they believed appellee would not have been injured except for his contributory negligence, they should find for the company, "unless they further believe from the evidence that when he came in peril from the trains, the employees of the defendant in charge of the train could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered his peril, and by ordinary care have prevented his injury." The objection raised to this instruction is that there was no evidence upon which to base the qualifying clause relating to the discovery of the peril in which appellee was placed. This objection is not well taken. Looking at the instruction from the viewpoint that it was the duty of the company to give reasonably sufficient notice to warn persons not to use the passway, the instruction was proper. We have found that the ringing of the bells was not sufficient notice, and in effect that the full measure of the company's duty required that some of its employees should have been stationed at the opening to notify appellee and others not to use it. It is true that the evidence for the company shows that it did have employees stationed at suitable places to perform this duty; but, on the other hand, the evidence for appellee shows that it did not. With this conflict in the evidence it was the duty of the court to submit to the jury the theory of each of the litigants, and to do this the court gave this instruction. If the company had exercised the degree of care required under the circumstances, the peril of appellee could have been discovered in time to prevent the injury, as the employees, if located where they should have been, could have warned appellee not to cross. This view of the law was expressed in Louisville Railway Company v. Hudgins, 124 Ky. 79, 98 S. W. 276, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 316, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 152, where it was said, in answer to a similar objection to a like instruction: "It was the duty of appellee when she started to cross the tracks to exercise ordinary care for her own safety; but, although she failed to do this, and her failure may have contributed to such an extent to bring about the injury of which she complains that it would not have happened except for her failure to exercise this degree of care, this will not relieve the appellant of liability if the persons in charge of the car that struck her could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered the peril appellee was in, and by the exercise of ordinary care have who might be expected to cross the street immediately behind it, and to have his car under such control as that he might stop it at a moment's warning; and it is manifest that, if the motorman had exercised this degree of care, he could and should have discovered the appellee's peril in time to have prevented injuring her. It was therefore entirely proper, under the facts of this case, to qualify the instruction as to contributory neglect as was done."

Did the court err in allowing the jury to award punitive damages if they found the defendant guilty of gross negligence? A careful examination of the Alabama cases introduced in evidence by appellant fails to disclose that that court has ever considered the question when punitive or exemplary damages may be awarded. The question of what constitutes gross negligence is presented in more than one decision, but it always came up in a discussion of the law of contributory negligence, and when the court was indicating the character of negligence on the part of the defendant that would authorize a recovery by the plaintiff notwithstanding he was guilty of negligence. If the Alabama court had defined the class of cases in which punitive damages might be allowed, and the character of negligence that would authorize a jury to award it, we would feel bound to follow its ruling, although it might not conform to our decisions on the subject, as the measure of damages recoverable under the law of the place where the injury occurred must control. But, in the absence of decisions from the Alabama court, we will assume that the rule adopted in this state applies in Alabama, or would be applied if the question came up. This principle was laid down in Chesapeake & Nashville R. Co. v. Venable, 111 Ky. 41, 63 S. W. 35, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 427, where the court said: "Where a party seeks to recover or defend under a foreign law, such law must be pleaded and proved like any other fact; but, in the absence of averment and proof, the rule is that foreign states, whose system of jurisprudence is derived from the same source as our own, are presumed to be governed by the same law." To the same effect is Murray v. L. & N. R. Co., 110 S. W. 334, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 545. Conceding that the law is as we have announced, the argument is yet made that, under the law as declared and administered in this state, the evidence did not warrant exemplary damages, and the instruction submitting this issue was not only unauthorized, but defective in form. This court has repeatedly ruled that gross negligence is the absence of slight care, and that, in personal injury cases where the negligence from which the injury results is degree of care for the safety of appellee, and that he was injured by its reckless disregard of the duty it owed him. Nor is the instruction upon this subject open to meritorious criticism. It told the jury that they might in their discretion allow punitive damages. The argument that the words "or may not," after the words "then you may," should have been inserted is entirely too technical to be seriously considered; nor is it sustained by the opinion in Illinois Central R. Co. v. Houchins, 121 Ky. 526, 89 S. W. 530, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 499, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 375, 123 Am. St. Rep. 205. The addition of these words might slightly improve the verbiage of the instruction, but would make no change in its substance. Whether or not an instruction upon the subject of gross negligence or exemplary damages should be given is often a close one. Frequently, when the verdict appears to be excessive, or the evidence of gross negligence is not satisfactory, we have, as in the Houchins Case, ordered a new trial, and pointed out the impropriety of submitting this question. But when there is evidence that the injury was caused by conduct that amounted to a reckless disregard of human life, it is the settled law in this state that an instruction upon this subject is proper. Lexington R. Co. v. Fain, 80 S. W. 463, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 2243; Southern Ry. Co. v. Goddard, 121 Ky. 567, 89 S. W. 675, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 523; L. & N. R. Co. v. Mount, 125 Ky. 599, 101 S. W. 1182, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 210.

But, aside from all this, it is apparent that the jury did not award appellee more than fair compensation. At the time of his injury he was 44 years of age, a strong, vigorous man of good health and industrious habits, in the prime of life and usefulness, earning by his labor and brains an annual income of as much as $2,000. But now he is virtually a physical wreck. One hand is gone; the other is useless. He cannot follow any wage-earning occupation or business in which the hand is an essential member of the body—and there are few in which it is not. So that, taking into consideration his age, physical condition, and earning capacity, it cannot be said that the amount awarded was more than reasonable compensation for the mental and physical suffering that he has already undergone and the permanent impairment of his power to earn money.

The contention that the instructions are involved and difficult to understand is not well founded. They presented to the jury the law of the case in simple and concise language.

Nor did the court fail in the instructions to submit appellant's defense. It was fully set out in instruction No. 3.

A careful examination of the record and the reasons urged for reversal convince us that no substantial error was committed to the prejudice of the appellant, and the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

JEFFRIES et al. v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF COLUMBIA GRADED COMMON SCHOOL.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 19, 1909.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 11*) — "COMMON SCHOOLS."

Graded schools are "common schools."

2. ELECTIONS (§ 65*)—QUALIFICATION OF VOTERS—SEX—SCHOOL ELECTIONS.

Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4464-4500a (Russell's St. §§ 5736-5785), relating to graded common schools, provides no qualification for voters in graded school district elections except the qualification provided generally for school elections, in view of which it has been held that the qualifications are the same, and that under section 4458 (Russell's St. § 5672), providing that, in a common school district election to levy a district tax for common schools, any resident widow or spinster who is a taxpayer, or who has children within school ages, may vote, such persons may vote upon the question of tax for a graded school in a proposed graded common school district. Act March 24, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 133, c. 56), establishes in some particulars a radical departure from the pre-existing system, but without any design to render the system as a whole inharmonious, and provides that graded common school districts operating under special charter or established by popular vote in school districts operating in municipal districts established under special charter, and supplementing the state school fund by a local tax of a certain amount, shall retain their present boundaries and be exempt from the provisions of the act. Held, that the effect of the prohibition of the act of 1908 was to re-enact sections 4464-4500a as part thereof, and the graded common school districts operating under special charter or established by popular vote remained unaffected by the later law in their boundaries, government, and regulation; but the later act, providing that all resident males over 21 years of age shall have the right to vote at elections, women are no longer entitled to vote in graded common school elections.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 65.* Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 120.]

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 103*) — LEVY OF TAX—SCHOOL ELECTION—MANNER OF VOTING.

Ky. St. 1909, § 4467 (Russell's St. § 5739), relating to the voting upon the question of establishing a graded common school and a tax to maintain it, provides that on the day set apart for the election the officers shall open a poll and propound to each voter the question, "Are you against or for the graded common school tax?" and his vote shall be recorded for or against the same as he may direct, which has been held to require a viva voce vote on the subject of taxation. Act March 24, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 133, c. 56), which in effect re-enacted the former act, as a part of the latter act, makes no provision as to how the vote shall be taken whether by ballot or otherwise, though, in a election for trustees, voting by special ballot and the manner of preparing and furnishing the ballots are all provided for. Held, that the intent was that the vote on the question of the tax should be viva voce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 241; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

4. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 103*) — SCHOOL ELECTION—IRREGULARITIES.

Ky. St. 1909, § 4467 (Russell's St. § 5739), provides that on an election upon the question of a tax for the establishing and maintaining of a graded common school there shall be one judge and a clerk. Act March 24, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 133, c. 56), for the government and regulation of common schools, which re-enacted in effect the former act as a part thereof, provides that two judges and a clerk shall be appointed by the county election commissioners. At such an election the sheriff appointed a judge and clerk, and the county election commissioners ratified the appointment and appointed one additional judge. He failed to act, and his place was filled by another. Held that, as nothing done by the substitute affected the result, and there being no claim that the regular judge and clerk did not of their own judgment and action do all that the substitute is claimed to have attempted to do, his participation was, at most, a harmless irregularity.

5. EVIDENCE (§ 10*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—LOCATION OF HIGH SCHOOL.

The court will take notice of the location of the Columbia Male and Female High School building in the town of Columbia.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

6. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 103*) — SCHOOL ELECTIONS — PETITION — SUFFICIENCY.

Ky. St. 1909, § 4464 (Russell's St. § 5736), relating to elections upon the question of a tax for the establishing and maintaining of a graded common school, provides that the petition for the election shall indicate with exactness the location and site of the schoolhouse, meaning the schoolhouse that will be provided for the proposed graded common school. Held, that the intent was to settle as nearly as might be the location of the proposed building, and a petition, stating that the "location of the school house * * * shall be at the building known as the Columbia M. & F. High School if it can be secured upon terms satisfactory to the trustees who may be elected in said proposed district, or at some other suitable point within the corporate limits of the town of Columbia," was sufficient; the other words of the description being treated as surplusage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 241; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

7. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 103*) — SCHOOL ELECTIONS—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY — "OTHER EXPENSES NEEDFUL IN CONDUCTING A GOOD GRADED COMMON SCHOOL."

Ky. St. 1909, § 4464 (Russell's St. § 5736), provides for an election upon the question of levying a tax to maintain a graded common school and for erecting or repairing suitable buildings therefor, if necessary. Section 4481 (section 5758) makes it the duty of the district trustees to provide funds for purchasing suitable buildings, or for erecting or repairing them, and for other expenses needful in conducting a good graded common school, and permits them to use such part of the proceeds of the tax as they may deem necessary. Held, that the phrase "and for other expenses needful in conducting a good graded common school" implies the power to rent a suitable building temporarily and until one can be secured or built by the trustees, and a petition for the election, reciting that the proposed tax was to be used for the purpose of maintaining a graded common school and for the erecting, purchasing, leasing, and repairing of suitable buildings therefor if necessary, was no more than the two sections of the statute authorized, meaning that the trustees were to buy a building if they could, and, if not, to buy a lot and build a house, to repair any building bought or built by them, and in the meantime, to lease a suitable building for the continuation of the school, and did not render the petition insufficient.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 241; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

8. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 65*)—DISTRICT PROPERTY—POWER OF STATE.

The maintenance of public schools is a state question done in the exercise of the state's sovereign power, and where the state authorized the application of public lands to build an academy for public education, and subsequently let the town sell the academy lot and use the proceeds in paving its streets, the Legislature could require the town to reimburse the state by buying another lot for common school purposes, and, the town having done so without complaint, its subsequent holding of the title, as required by the Legislature, was a naked trust which the Legislature could end at its will, and it having provided by Ky. St. 1909, § 4484 (Russell's St. § 5762), that the title of all common school property in the limits of any graded common school district organized under the provisions of the act shall be vested in the board of trustees of the school district and empowered them to sell the same if they should think it best, the trustees could convey a good title thereto to their grantees.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. §§ 161-164; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

9. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 65*)—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY—DISCRETION OF TRUSTEES.

The discretion of trustees elected upon the establishment of a graded common school district, as to buying a particular property for the school, which property the petition for election specified should be procured, if expedient, will not be interfered with by the courts, at least in the absence of such proofs of abuse as would be tantamount to fraud.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Adair County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by the Board of Trustees of the Columbia Graded Common School against W. F. Jeffries and others, in which certain other persons intervened. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants and interveners appeal. Affirmed.

W. W. Jones, James Garnett, and Rollin Hurt, for appellants. Montgomery & Montgomery, for appellees.

O'REAR, J. This action was brought by the trustees of the Columbia Graded Common School against the town of Columbia, its trustees, and the board of education of Adair county, to quiet the title of the plaintiffs to the school house and lot in Columbia, which was known as "common school district No. 1" (formerly No. 29). The town of Columbia is of the fifth class. It was embraced in parts of two school districts. A petition of the requisite number of electors and property holders resident of the two school districts was presented to the county court, asking the submission of the proposition whether the two districts would avail themselves of the provisions of the statutes allowing them to establish, in lieu of the district common school therein, a graded common school, and whether a tax necessary to procure a suitable building should be voted by the electors of the proposed graded school district. The proposition was ordered submitted. At the election the officers returned, and the canvassing board certified, that both propositions had carried by a majority of the votes cast, and that appellees were elected trustees of the graded school district. The newly elected trustees, deeming the old school building in district No. 1 inadequate, proposed to sell the building, and to buy another. Certain citizens opposed the proposition, claiming that the vote by which the graded school was established was void, as was the vote by which the tax was authorized, and that the election of the trustees was void. They also denied that the trustees, even if the elections were valid, took the title to the school building and lot, or had power to sell it, or to invest the proceeds or any taxes raised to the purchase of the proposed site. The result was that the title of the plaintiffs to the lot they proposed to sell was so clouded that purchasers were deterred from bidding, and the contention of the dissident taxpayers clogged the action of the trustees so as to defeat their purposes. The plaintiffs asked that their title to the lot in question be quieted by the judgment of the court, and inasmuch as the legal title appeared to be vested in the trustees of the town of Columbia, who refused to join in the sale and conveyance, that the lot be sold by the court's commissioner, and the proceeds turned over to the plaintiffs. The board of education disclaimed any property interest in the subject of controversy, as well as any denial of the plaintiffs' title and authority in the premises. The trustees of the town by demurrer raised the question of their title; the facts being set out in the petition. Certain citizens and taxpayers of the proposed school district, who are appellants here, filed their intervening petition, alleging that the trustees of the town would not defend the action, being favorable thereto, and asked permission to defend on behalf of themselves and all other taxpayers concerned. Their petition was allowed. As defense they relied upon certain facts as showing that the elections were void, and that in any event the graded school trustees were not invested with the title to the lot in question. They also assailed the wisdom of the contemplated purchase of the other lot. A general demurrer was sustained to their answer because the facts stated did not present a defense to the cause of action set up in the plaintiff's petition, and, as they declined to plead further, the allegations of the petition were taken as true, and judgment rendered in conformity to its prayer. The trustees of Columbia and the interveners appeal from that judgment.

It is contended by appellants that the election by which the graded school proposition, including the tax proposition, was voted, was so irregular as that it was void. The irregularities relied on are: (1) That the petition of the county court did not show the location of the site of the graded school building with exactness, as required by the statute; (2) that the tax proposition included the leasing of a building, whereas the statute allows only the purchase or erection of a building; (3) that the election submitting the tax and district propositions was not held by secret ballot, whereas it should have been; (4) that the election of trustees was by secret ballot, whereas it should have been viva voce; (5) that one acted as judge of the election without appointment or authority and fraudulently interfered in its conduct; (6) that legally qualified voters were prevented by the fraud of the officers of election from voting, who would have voted against the propositions, and others not legally qualified voters were permitted to vote who voted for the propositions, the result of the election being changed by the combined actions referred to. As the facts were pleaded, either in the petition of the plaintiffs, or the answers of the interveners, the question presented was one of law; no issue of facts being raised by the pleadings.

The elections were held under the provisions of article 10 of chapter 113, Ky. St., relating to graded common schools (section 4464 et seq., Carroll's Ky. St. [Russell's St. §§ 5736-5785]). The provisions of that article are part of the common school law of the state, and are part of the original act of 1893 for the government of common schools. Graded schools are common schools. Riggs v. Stevens, 92 Ky. 393, 17 S. W. 1018, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 631; Trustees Harrodsburg v. Harrodsburg Ed. District, 7 S. W. 312, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 605; Williamstown Graded F. S. District v. Webb, 89 Ky. 264, 12 S. W. 298, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 456. In 1908 the Legislature adopted new provisions concerning the establishment of district schools. Act March 24, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 133, c. 56). Much of the confusion in this case has arisen out of what is conceived to be the different methods of holding elections in common school matters, and the qualifications of voters at elections affecting graded schools. We will consider that question first. The statute does not define the qualifications of the voters at graded school elections. They are alluded to merely as "the legal white voters in said proposed graded common school district." In section 4469, Ky. St. (Carroll's), it is provided: "The graded common schools, when organized as aforesaid, are hereby incorporated, and each of them shall be under the management and control of a board of six trustees. The first board to be elected at the same time and place, and by the same persons who vote at the election for the tax, as provided in sections 4464 and 4467 of this law, and the six persons receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected trustees." The allusion to the qualifications of voters contained in section 4464 has already been quoted above. In section 4467 the reference is merely to "each voter who may vote." Under these provisions it was held, in Sisk v. Gardiner, 74 S. W. 686, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 18, that women who were spinsters or widows were legally qualified voters in graded school elections. Nothing in the article concerning graded common schools expressly gave women the right to vote in those elections. The provision of section 4458, Ky. St., was looked to. That provision is contained in the subdivision of article 94 of chapter 113, relating to "district taxation" (Russell's St. § 5672).

In Lee v. Trustees Shepherdsville Graded Common School District No. 4, 88 S. W. 1071, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 55, it was held that an election for graded school trustees and for voting a bonded indebtedness, held between the hours of 1 o'clock p. m. and 6 o'clock p. m., was a literal compliance with the law, yet there is nothing in article 10 on that subject. Section 4434, Ky. St., being part of article 8 of chapter 113, dealing with "district trustees," and as to the time and manner of their election, provides that the election should be viva voce, and held at the schoolhouse of the district between the hours of 1 o'clock p. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. on the day fixed, and that "at this election the qualified voters of the district shall be the electors; and any widow having a child between six and twenty years, and any widow or spinster having a ward between the ages of six and twenty years may also vote." Russell's St. § 5710. See, also, Moss v. Riley, 102 Ky. 1, 43 S. W. 421, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 993. It will thus be seen the qualification of voters in graded school elections is that of the electors in common school elections; the term "common schools" being used to designate those common schools which are not graded or high schools. The act of March 24, 1908, supra, entitled "An act for the government and regulation of the common schools of the state," establishes in some particulars a radical departure from the pre-existing system. It relates more especially to the formation and changing of districts, to the unification of the system, to its centralization, and to the maintenance of the schools by county taxation, as well as local and district taxation. It is a revision of important parts of the old system, but without any design to render the system as a whole inharmonious or unnecessarily complicated. In this view we are to consider this proviso in the second section of the act of 1908: "Provided, that any graded common school district that may exist in any educational division or that may hereafter be established according to law, whether operating under special charter, or established by popular vote, as provided for in the laws relating to the graded common schools, and school districts now operating within municipal districts established and incorporated under special charter and supplementing the state school fund by a local tax of not less than twenty cents on each hundred dollars of assessed valuation of property, shall retain their present boundaries and be exempt from the provisions of this act." That means, we think, that in their boundaries, government, and regulation they are to be unaffected by the new statute. There is no qualification of voters provided for in graded school districts, except by reference to the qualification provided generally for school electors. When the Legislature changed the qualification in the revision of the law governing common schools in 1908, it must be deemed to have done so deliberately, and upon a careful study of the whole system. The effect of the proviso quoted above is the same as if the article on graded common schools (article 10, c. 113, Ky. St.) had been re-enacted as part of the act of 1908—and the special acts referred to in the proviso, also re-enacted, though their construction is not here involved. Sutherland on Statutory Construction, § 154, thus states the rule: "A revision is intended to take the place of the law as previously formulated. By adopting it the Legislature say the same thing, in effect, as when a particular section is amended by the words 'so as to read as follows.' The revision is a substitute. It displaces and repeals the former law as it stood relating to the subjects within its purview. Whatever of the old law is restated in the revision is continued in operation as it may operate in the connection in which it is re-enacted."

The act of 1908 prescribes the qualifications of voters thus: "All male persons over 21 years of age, who shall have resided in a school subdivision for sixty days next before an election, shall have the right to vote at such election." Whatever other construction may be placed upon that language, it leaves no doubt that women are no longer entitled to vote in the general common school elections, however just might appear their claim to the right of suffrage. By the same act it is also provided: "All elections for school trustees shall be by ballot. * * * The officers of said election shall be a clerk and two judges, and shall be appointed by the regular election commissioners in each county." On the subject of voting upon the question of establishing a graded common school and a tax to maintain it, section 4467, Ky. St. (part of art. 10, supra) reads: "The said sheriff or other officer shall appoint a judge and a clerk of said election, who shall take and subscribe to an oath for the faithful performance of his duties. On the day set apart for the election the officers shall open a poll, and shall propound to each voter who may vote the question: 'Are you against or for the graded common school tax?' and his vote shall be recorded for or against the same as he may direct." It was held, in Lee v. Trustees, supra, that that section required a viva voce vote on the subject of taxation. While the act of 1908 provides for a vote in school districts on the subject of local taxation, nothing is said as to how the vote shall be taken—whether by ballot or otherwise. In the election for trustees, voting by official ballot and the manner of preparing and furnishing the ballot are all provided for. From this, and the omission in the same act as to voting a tax, we infer that the Legislature intended the latter election should be viva voce. So, as there is nothing in the new act in conflict with the provision of section 4467, and particularly as the latter provides for a viva voce election on all questions except that of trustees, we must conclude that the elections in this case were regularly held, in the respect as to the manner of voting.

The act of 1908 provides that officers of election, two judges, and a clerk shall be appointed by the county election commissioners. Section 4467, Ky. St., provides for only one judge and a clerk. In this proceeding the sheriff appointed a judge and clerk. The county election commissioners met and ratified those appointments, and appointed one judge in addition. The latter failing to act, his place was filled by another. It is the last-named person whose presence it is claimed by appellants invalidated the election. We think he was properly there for the purpose of holding the trustee election. Even if he participated under a mistaken notion of authority in the other election, it is not averred that the regular judge and clerk did not of their own judgment and action do all that the outsider is claimed to have attempted to do. Nothing that he did affected the result. At most it would be a harmless irregularity.

The statute required (section 4464, supra) that the petition for the election shall indicate "with exactness" the "location and site of said schoolhouse," meaning the schoolhouse that will be provided for the proposed graded common school. The petition in this secured upon terms satisfactory to the trustees who may be elected in said proposed district, or at some other suitable point within the corporate limits of the town of Columbia." The graded district proposed in the petition for the election embraced territory not within the town of Columbia, and included all the town. The Columbia M. & F. High School building is the Columbia Male and Female High School building in the town of Columbia, and is a well-known point, the location of which the voters and the court will take notice. In the nature of things it is impossible to designate finally any point to be selected as the schoolhouse site, as it may not be possible to procure it at all, or upon reasonable terms. The idea is to settle as nearly as may be done the location of the proposed building. It is not contended by appellants that, if the designation had stopped at "M. & F. High School," it would not have been sufficient. That which was added was no more than what would have been implied if it had not been added, except that it indicated that in no event was the building to be located outside the corporate limits of the town. It is now insisted, as one of the grounds of this defense, by appellant, that the "M. & F. High School building" cannot and could not have been acquired by purchase, because the title is held in trust by the Transylvania Presbytery in special trust, the legal title being in divers individuals, some of whom are infants, and the reversion in still others. If, then, the designation had been of that building as the site, which would confessedly have fulfilled the statute, it would have followed that the trustees could have procured another site as near as they could to the one indicated. Indeed, section 4481, Ky. St., requires: "Said board of trustees shall provide funds for purchasing suitable grounds and buildings, or for erecting or repairing suitable buildings, and for other expenses needful in conducting a good graded common school in their graded common school district; and to this end they may use such part of the proceeds of the said tax as they may deem necessary." The trustees are proceeding to acquire the identical building named, and we have no doubt have the power to do so. Unless insuperable obstacles arise, they must do so, unless the people in the manner pointed out by the statute require otherwise. If the title is held as appellants say, still it may be acquired by condemnation, it seems, if the proper parties are not competent and willing to act in the premises. The other words of the description may be treated as surplusage.

The petition for election contained this erecting, purchasing, leasing, and repairing suitable buildings therefor if necessary." The language of the statute allowing the tax to be valid is (section 4464, supra): "For erecting, purchasing or repairing suitable buildings therefor if necessary." It will be seen that from a reading of section 4481, Ky. St., quoted above, it is made the duty of the trustees to provide a suitable building and to maintain a good graded common school in their district. We think the expression "and for other expenses needful in conducting a good graded common school" implies the power to rent a suitable building temporarily, and until one may be bought or built by the trustees. Section 4481 expressly allows the tax voted to be so applied. Its inclusion in the petition for the election was nothing more than the two sections (4464 and 4481) read together authorized. It meant that the trustees were to buy a building, the one named, if they could, if not, to buy a lot and build a house in that vicinity; to repair any building bought or built by them; and in the meantime to lease a suitable building for the accommodation of the school. We conclude that the election was valid.

Prior to 1860, under the old seminary grants then in vogue in this commonwealth, there was established a school in Columbia known as "Robertson Academy." It was built with public funds, and for the purpose of public education. In 1860, by an act approved February 27th, of that year (Sess. Acts 1859-1860, p. 328, c. 674), the trustees of the town of Columbia were authorized to sell the Robertson Academy property and apply the proceeds to grading, graveling, and paving the public square of the town. On March 12, 1869, the Legislature passed another act (Acts 1869, p. 220, c. 1954), reciting the foregoing facts, and that the town had sold the Robertson Academy property for $346, and used the proceeds as authorized in the act of 1860, empowered the town to raise by taxation and appropriation of its public funds not exceeding $600 to the purchase of a lot and the building of a schoolhouse in the town "for common school purposes." The act authorized the trustees of the town to take the title to the lot "to them and their successors in office as and for a common school house for said Columbia district." On April 23, 1869, C. J. Taylor and wife by deed referring to the above act conveyed to the persons named as trustees of the town of Columbia a lot in the town, in consideration of $140, "to have and to hold said lot of ground with all the appurtenances thereunto belonging to said persons, named as trustees, and their successors in office as and for the uses and purposes stated in said act." The common school district comprising the town of Columbia was then known as "District No. 29" in Adair county. The Legislature, by an act approved February 16, 1870 (Acts 1869-70, p. 274, c. 307), authorized the citizens of district No. 29 in Adair county to vote a tax to build a schoolhouse for said district.

Whether the house on the lot now in question (which is the lot conveyed by Taylor and wife) was built by the town as a municipal corporation under the act of 1869, or whether it was built by the tax authorized to be raised by school district No. 29 by the act of 1870, does not appear. Nor do we deem it material. The maintenance of public schools is a state question, done in the exercise of the state's sovereign power. When it authorized the appropriation of public lands to build an academy for public education, and subsequently let the town sell the academy lot and use the proceeds in paving its streets, it was competent for the Legislature to require the town to reimburse the state by buying another lot for common school purposes; and as the town did so, without complaint, its subsequent holding of the title as required by the act was a naked trust which the Legislature could end at its will. This was done when the Legislature enacted section 4484, Ky. St., reading: "The title to all common school and all county seminary property, the county court and the board of trustees of said seminary consenting, in the limits of any graded common school district organized under the provision of this law, shall be, and the same is hereby vested in the board of trustees of said graded common school district, and they are hereby empowered to sell and convey same, or to use same for graded common school purposes, as to them shall seem best; but when county seminary property shall be appropriated, all pupils of the county shall be permitted to attend such school at such reduced tuition from what is ordinary as shall be equitable and made good to them their interest in said seminary property. It is further provided, that when any graded school district shall embrace any school property owned or held in trust by trustees, said trustees, by a majority of their board, are hereby authorized and empowered to convey their school property to the trustees of the graded school, at such price and on such conditions as may be agreed upon by the trustees of both parties."

This is not county seminary property, as that term is used in the statute. It was at one time, it seems; but the Legislature, in the exercise of its power many years ago, changed it into common school property. It was not necessary then for the trustees (appellees) to have the consent of the county court or of the seminary trustees (there were none, so far as appears) to the vesting of the title in appellees. The town, as a corporation, had no beneficial interest in the property. Whether the trustees can or ought to buy the M. & F. High School property from Transylvania Presbytery, or any other owner, if there are others, is not presented in this record for decision. The elections complained of being valid, the discretion of the trustees will not be interfered with by the courts, certainly not upon less than such abuse of it as would be tantamount to fraud. No such case is presented. There need not have been a resort to a sale by the court's commissioner; but of that unnecessary act appellants cannot complain.

We perceive no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 61*)—COUNTY CLERK—LIABILITY FOR REFUSAL TO ISSUE LIQUOR LICENSE.

Though it was the duty of defendant county clerk, when persons, who had obtained a license from a city in the county to sell liquor, presented such license and the requisite license fee, to issue a state license, yet, as they could, on his refusal, sell liquor without violating the law, it was not necessary that they bring mandamus to compel him to issue a license, and his refusal did not subject them to any penalty for selling liquor without a license, so that they cannot recover on his bond the cost of maintaining the mandamus suit and defending a prosecution for selling without a license.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Powell County. "Not to be officially reported."

Two actions, both for the Commonwealth, one for the use of Conley & Rogers, the other for the use of Kennon and others, both against Robert Blackburn and others. From judgments for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Henry Watson, for appellants. C. F. Spencer, for appellees.

CARROLL, J. These two cases involving the same question of law will be disposed of together. The appellee was the county clerk of Powell county. These two actions were brought on his official bond to recover damages for his alleged failure to perform a ministerial duty, thereby subjecting the appellants to unnecessary cost and expense. The appellants had been awarded license by the council of Clay City, situated in Powell county, to retail spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors for a year. When the license was granted, they presented it to the county clerk and tendered the full amount of the license fee required by the state for the sale of such liquors and demanded a state license, which the county clerk refused to issue; he being of the opinion that the council of Clay City had no authority to grant license. Thereupon Kennon, for the purpose of testing the right of the clerk to refuse license, brought a mandamus suit against him to compel him to accept the license fee and issue the license. His suit was dismissed by the circuit court, that court also being of the opinion that the council had no right to issue license; but, upon appeal to this court, the judgment of the circuit court was reversed, and it was held that Kennon was entitled to license, and the clerk was directed to issue it upon the presentation of the license from the city council and tender of the fee. The opinion in Kennon v. Blackburn, 127 Ky. 39, 104 S. W. 968, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 1256, was handed down on the 31st day of October, 1907, and on the 4th day of November following, and before the judgment of this court had become effective, the appellants again tendered to the clerk the license fee and demanded license, which he again refused to issue. Soon after this, the appellants, without having obtained any license from the county clerk, proceeded to retail liquor under the license granted them by the city council. Afterwards they were indicted for selling liquor without license; but the indictments were dismissed. In these suits, after setting out the above facts, appellants aver that the arbitrary and wrongful action of the county clerk compelled them to go to the expense and cost of bringing the mandamus suit, and also subjected them to the annoyance and cost of defending the indictments brought against them. Claiming that they had been damaged in the sum of $1,000, they prayed judgment for this amount against the appellee and his sureties. The lower court sustained general demurrers to the petitions, and, the appellants declining to amend, their suits were dismissed, and they have appealed.

In our opinion the lower court properly ruled that the petitions did not state a cause of action. There can be no doubt that where a clerk, by his arbitrary and wrongful failure to perform a mere ministerial act, such as the issuing of license in a proper state of case, necessarily subjects the person who in proper time and manner demands a performance of the act to loss or damage, an action may be maintained against the clerk and his sureties upon his bond to recover damages that have directly resulted from his failure to perform the ministerial duty. McFarland v. Burton, 89 Ky. 294, 12 S. W. 336, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 499; Bates v. Foree, 4 Bush, 430. But, in the case before us, although it was the duty of the clerk to have issued the license, his failure to do so did not necessarily subject the appellants to any loss or damage. Having obtained from the city council of Clay City license to sell liquor, the only duty the clerk had to perform in connection with it was to issue a state license upon the presentation of the city license accompanied by the requisite amount of money, and when the appellants tendered to the clerk the city license and the amount of the license fee, and demanded that he issue license to them, they had done all that they could do and all that the law required them to do, and the failure of the county clerk to perform his duty did not render them guilty of violating the law, if thereafter they sold liquor during the time mentioned in the license issued by the city. This point was expressly decided in the case of Koch v. Commonwealth, 119 Ky. 476, 84 S. W. 533, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 122.

It follows from this that it was not necessary that appellants should have brought suit against the clerk to compel him by mandamus to issue license, and, further, that his failure to issue license did not subject them to any penalties for selling liquor without license.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Boyd County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by Wardie L. Patrick, by his next friend, against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Worthington, Cochran & Browning, for appellant. Dinkle & Prichard, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the Boyd circuit court, entered upon a verdict against the appellant, Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, in favor of the infant appellee, Wardie L. Patrick, for $2,000, in damages for injuries to his person from a collision with one of appellant's trains, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of its agents and servants in charge thereof. At the time of receiving his injuries appellee was 16 years of age, and the action was instituted by himself and next friend. The facts were that in December, 1905, appellee and a companion, Charles Picklesimer, a year his junior, went to the city of Ashland from their home in Magoffin county, seeking employment. After a few days' search they found work at the mill of the Herman Lumber Company. On account of a sleet and snow that fell, they were denied work one day at the mill, and upon again going to the mill in the afternoon, about 1 o'clock, they were advised that there would be no work for them there that ty-second street, going up what is known as Railroad alley, the usual and nearest route. On Railroad alley, which is a public street of Ashland, appellant has a double track, called the east-bound and west-bound tracks. The former, lying next to the hill, is used by appellant's trains running to Huntington, W. Va., and other points east, and the latter, lying next to the Ohio river, is used by its trains running to Cincinnati. Appellee and his companion, after passing Thirty-First street, and upon reaching a point half way between that street and Thirty-Second street, saw approaching them on the west-bound track a long freight train, running at considerable speed and making a loud noise. They thereupon swerved their course sufficiently to keep out of the way of the freight train on the west-bound track, and proceeded in the direction of the boarding house on Thirty-Second street to which they had started; Thirty-Second street being then about 20 feet distant. When they got to Thirty-Second street, the engine and a few cars of the freight train on the west-bound track had passed them. Upon appellee and his companion reaching Thirty-Second street, and while they were yet facing the east and in the act of turning to cross that street to get to the boarding house, a half square distant, an extra passenger train on the east-bound track, going at a high rate of speed, ran upon and against them, and dragged them under the engine and tender some distance, thereby killing Picklesimer and permanently injuring appellee upon his head and other parts of the body.

Appellant complains that the trial court improperly refused to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for it. We do not understand, from the brief of its able counsel, that it is claimed the peremptory instruction should have been given on the ground that appellee was a trespasser upon its track, for, when struck by the train, he and Picklesimer were on the crossing at Thirty-Second street, but because, it is insisted, he was guilty of contributory negligence in being upon the crossing and east-bound track at the time of the collision. Upon the facts furnished by appellee's testimony, the court could not, as a matter of law, hold that he was guilty of contributory negligence. Even before reaching the crossing at Thirty-Second street, he and his companion were walking along Railroad alley, a street or public way of the city, in constant use by its inhabitants, and when they got to Thirty-Second street, and on the crossing, they had, according to appellee's testimony, to stop until the freight train on the west-bound track passed them and the crossing to enable them to cross the west-bound track to get to the boarding house. They had barely stopped, and were in the act of turning toward the freight train, but without having gotten their faces in line to see the approaching passenger train, when it struck them. Under the circumstances, the mere fact that he was momentarily standing on the east-bound track was not of itself such evidence of contributory negligence on the part of appellee as would authorize the court to take the case from the jury. Whether, in thus situating himself, appellee exercised ordinary care for his own safety, was a matter to be determined by the jury. In view of the noise made by the freight train, to which his attention was particularly directed, because it was passing between him and the house to which he was going, and of the fact that the passenger train was an extra train, and, therefore, not expected, and the further fact that it was running, according to the testimony of three witnesses near by, at from 20 to 30 miles an hour without ringing its bell or giving other signal of its approach, it is not difficult to understand why the jury reached the conclusion that in the matter of receiving his injuries appellee was not guilty of such negligence as should defeat a recovery.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

We do not overlook the fact that appellant's train crew, and other witnesses introduced in its behalf, furnished much evidence conducing to prove contributory negligence on the part of appellee, that he suddenly and unexpectedly to the engineer and fireman of the passenger train got upon the track in front of it, that the train was running at a moderate and reasonable rate of speed when the accident occurred, and that its approach was signaled by the usual and constant ringing of the bell; but, however contradictory this evidence may have been of appellee's, it all, with his, went to the jury, and we have no right to say that they should have given it more weight than appellee's was entitled to receive, or to direct that the verdict be set aside because they gave appellee and his witnesses the greater credence. Although repeatedly urged to do so, this court has never given its approval to the doctrine that one having a right to cross or go upon a railroad track shall, before doing so, stop, look, or listen, to discover whether a train is approaching or is so near at hand as to make it unsafe to himself to do so; for, as said in Ramsey v. Louisville, Cincinnati & Lexington Railway, 89 Ky. 104, 20 S. W. 163, 12 Ky. Law Rep. 559: "It would be unreasonable to require of persons passing daily on foot or in vehicles along a public street in a populous, busy city or town, to stop at a railroad crossing in order to listen or look up and down a track, sometimes visible but a short distance, to ascertain whether a train is approaching, when they can without doing so have comparative security against inconvenience and injury by a reduction of the speed of trains, and easily and certainly warned of its approach by the bell or whistle." L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Lucas, 93 S. W. 308, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 359; Ky. Central Ry. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ky. 449, 20 S. W. 392, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 455, 18 L. R. A. 63; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Price's Adm'r, 76 S. W. 836, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1033. We do not mean to be understood as holding that one, in crossing or going upon a railroad track, where he is entitled to go or be, should neglect the use of his faculties or fail to exercise any reasonable precaution that would enable a person of ordinary prudence under the circumstances to discover the approach or presence of a moving train and thereby prevent injury to his person, but simply to declare that he need not stop to look or listen before thus venturing, in order to discover whether a train is approaching.

The instructions of the circuit court gave to the jury the law applicable to the facts of this case, and were as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the agents in charge of defendant's passenger train to use ordinary care to prevent collision with and injury to persons traveling the street where it intersects with defendant's railroad track by keeping a lookout in approaching said crossing, and in giving reasonably sufficient signals by ringing the engine bell to warn travelers of the approach of the train, and by running at such a rate of speed as was reasonably consistent with the safety of persons traveling the street. And if the jury believe from the evidence that on the occasion in controversy the defendant's agents in charge of its train failed in the performance of any or all of these duties, and by reason of such failure the collision occurred, then the jury should find for the plaintiff, unless they believe from the evidence the plaintiff failed to exercise ordinary care for his own safety."

No. 2: "The court instructs the jury, that it was the duty of the plaintiff, Wardie Patrick, on approaching the crossing mentioned in the evidence, to use such care as would be usually expected of an ordinarily prudent person to learn of the approach of the train and keep out of its way; and if he failed to exercise such care, and but for such failure would not have been injured, then the law is for the defendant and the jury should so find, even though they may believe from the evidence that the agents of defendant in charge of its train were negligent, as set out in instruction No. 1."

No. 3: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that, at the time and place of his injury, the plaintiff, Wardie Patrick, was not upon or traveling the Thirty-Second street crossing, but was walking upon defendant's tracks east of said crossing, then the law is for defendant, and the jury will so find."

No. 4: "If the jury find for the plaintiff under instruction No. 1, they will allow him such reasonable sum in damages as they may believe from the evidence will fairly compensate him for any suffering, mental or physical, which he has suffered as the direct result of said injury, and for any suffering they may believe from the evidence it is reasonably certain he will experience in the future as the direct result of said injury, and for all permanent reduction, if any of his power to earn money in the future as the direct result of said injury, not exceeding in the aggregate the sum of $2,000, the amount claimed in the petition."

No. 5: "Ordinary care is that degree of care which ordinarily prudent persons are expected to use under similar circumstances. Negligence is the failure to use ordinary care."

No. 6: "Nine or more of the jury concurring may return a verdict; but, if it is made by a less number than the entire jury, it must be signed by all the jurors thereto."

We do not think the instructions open to the objections made to them by appellant's counsel. It was not error for instruction No. 1 to confine the signals of the approach of the train by which appellee was injured to the ringing of the bell; for, according to appellant's evidence, no sounding of the engine whistle that could have been heard by appellee was done until the engine was within a few feet of, and in fact upon, him, which was too late to give notice of the coming of the train. Besides, nearly all of appellant's servants in charge of the passenger train testified that the bell rang as the train approached, and for a long distance before it struck, appellee. We fail to see that appellant was prejudiced by the instruction. The second objection to instruction No. 1 was removed by instruction 3, which in substance advised the jury that there could be no recovery unless appellee was upon the Thirty-Second street crossing when struck by the train. Instruction 2 could have been in no sense misleading or prejudicial, as the evidence showed that appellee was struck by the train upon reaching the Thirty-Second street crossing and as he was in the act of turning to cross the west-bound railroad track.

We have found no error in the admission or exclusion of evidence; and as, on the whole record, no reason has been shown for disturbing the verdict, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Boyd County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Charlie Picklesimer's administrator against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Worthington, Cochran & Browning, for appellant. Dinkle & Prichard, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. This case is a companion to that of Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company v. Wardie Patrick, by, etc., 122 S. W. 830, the opinion in which was this day handed down. The questions of law and fact in the two cases are the same, except that the collision with appellant's train only resulted in great bodily injury to Patrick, whereas appellee's intestate was killed. The opinion in the Patrick Case, supra, being conclusive of this case, an opinion herein, containing a further elaboration of our views upon the questions involved, is deemed unnecessary.

Wherefore the judgment in this case is also affirmed.

O'Rear, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Warren County.
"To be officially reported."

W. H. McMullen was convicted in the city court of a violation of the prohibition law, but on appeal to the circuit court the case was dismissed and the City of Bowling Green appeals. Affirmed.

H. H. Denhardt, W. B. Gaines, James Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for appellant. Sims, Du Bose & Rodes, Wright & McElroy, and John B. Grider, for appellee.

BARKER, J. The appellee, W. H. McMullen, was charged with a violation of the prohibition law. He was tried in the city court of Bowling Green, and a fine of $60 inflicted, from which he appealed to the Warren circuit court, where the appeal was tried upon an agreed statement of facts. The case was submitted to the circuit judge, Hon. John M. Galloway, a jury being waived, with the result that he found the defendant had not been guilty of an offense against the prohibition law, and delivered his reason therefor in the following opinion, which we adopt as the opinion of the court on this appeal:

"These five cases all involve practically the same question, and they are all submitted upon appeal by the defendants from judgments in the city court against each defendant for $60, upon conviction for selling by retail malt liquors in local option territory. This court is asked to determine whether or not defendants are guilty of violating the local option law as found in section 2557, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 3635), under the following agreed statement of facts, to wit: 'It is agreed that defendant, McMullen, sold a bottle of next-to-beer in Bowling Green, Ky., as charged in the warrant. Next-to-beer is a malt liquor or liquid, that is to say, containing malt as an ingredient, and used as a beverage, and is nonintoxicating, that is to say, that in the largest quantities in which it may be drunk it will not intoxicate. It is agreed that it contains less than 2 per cent. of alcohol and more than one-half of 1 per cent. Defendant has United States government license for the sale of malt liquors, and the agreement filed in the other cases is in substance the same as the one quoted.'

"It thus appears in the evidence that the liquor sold by defendants is what is termed 'malt liquor,' or a liquid containing malt, and that such liquor is a nonintoxicant, and will not intoxicate in the largest quantities in which it may be imbibed. It is insisted upon by counsel for the plaintiff that under and by virtue of section 2557, Ky. St., no spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors can be legally sold by retail in such prohibited districts, whether or not such liquor or liquid contains enough alcohol to intoxicate the drinker, and that it is not material whether the liquid is an intoxicant or will produce intoxication, if it may be called or termed a spirituous, vinous, or malt liquor. While defendants contend that, in order to convict them under this law, the liquor sold must be an intoxicant, and that, as it is agreed that the drinks they sold or are charged with selling were not intoxicants, they have not violated the statute, or, in other words, that the intent and purpose of this law is to make it unlawful and penal to vend such liquors as will intoxicate in local option precincts, and only such as will intoxicate. Counsel for both plaintiff and defendant have cited decisions of other states, based in the main upon their statutes, none of which appear to be entirely alike or similar to our law, and in this, as well as many other instances, these decisions run counter to each other; some tending to support the contention of the prosecution herein, and others looking to defendant's side or claims, so these citations are far from convincing either way.

"The first general local option law in the state was enacted in 1874 (see Gen. St. 1879, p. 946), and in it the same term is employed, to wit: 'A prohibition of the sale of spirituous, vinous or malt liquors.' The force and validity of this act (Acts 1873-74, p. 10, c. 117) was passed upon by the Kentucky Court of Appeals in Anderson v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush, 485, and in its opinion, written by Chief Justice Lindsay, the court said: 'We unanimously hold that the sale by retail of intoxicating liquors may be constitutionally regulated, and that in any locality where, in the opinion of the Legislature or of its constitutionally organized agencies, the peace and good order of society so requires, license to carry on the retail traffic may be refused altogether.' Our present Constitution (section 61) provides that the General Assembly shall, by general law, provide a means of taking the sense of the people in any county, etc., as to whether or not spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors shall be sold, etc. And such was the expression of the act of 1892 (Laws 1891-92-93, p. 214, c. 89); and the same words defining what may or may not be sold was written in the act of 1894 (Laws 1894, p. 125, c. 52, § 4), which is found in section 2557, Ky. St. So from 1874 to 1898 there was no change in the nomenclature of the liquors whose sale was forbidden in local option localities. Then in 1898 the law now found in section 2557a, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 3636), was enacted. This law, it will be seen, prohibits the sale, barter, or loan of any beverage, liquid mixture, or decoction of any kind which intoxicates in local option territory. And in Rush v. Commonwealth, 47 S. W. 586, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 775, it was held that the act of 1898 (Acts 1898, p. 84, c. 30), which provides a different penalty for the violation from the one found in section 2557, Ky. St., did not, as contended for, repeal or affect the law contained in said section 2557, but was intended to reach violations not covered by section 2557. In this Rush opinion the court says, 'It is further insisted that the act of 1898, being now in force, repeals the penalty, or rather reduces it, for the sale of intoxicating liquors in local option precincts or localities,' and that such contention is erroneous, and that the intention of the Legislature in passing the act of 1898 was to declare that to be an offense that theretofore had not been, or to clear the matter of doubt. And further, in the same opinion, the court says: 'The clear meaning and intention of this act [of 1898] was to provide a penalty for the sale in prohibited districts of the various nostrums, bitters, and such like intoxicants sold, and of which it is difficult to show the ingredients, or whether it comes under the strict definition of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors.' So they held that this act was made to embrace and cover all other intoxicants not found to come within the terms spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors. And in Edmonson v. Commonwealth, 110 Ky. 510, 62 S. W. 1018, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 1902, the court, in its opinion, said that the amendment of March 15, 1898, fixing the penalty under it, applied only to beverages, liquid mixtures, or decoctions, or, in other words, substitutes for spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, and hence its enactment did not repeal or affect section 2557 or the act of 1894. In Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 106 Ky. 602, 51 S. W. 17, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 222, defendant was convicted under a charge of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory. The proof was that he sold a phial of Jamaica ginger, and it was claimed there was a variance; but the court said not, if Jamaica ginger was a spirituous liquor, and the jury found that it was. And the court further said: 'But the objection is urged that there was no evidence to support this finding, as both the vendor and vendee swore it was not intoxicating. Evidence of a druggist was introduced that the regulation requirement of Jamaica ginger was 96 per cent. alcohol and 4 per cent. ginger. If the jury believed this testimony, and believed that the phial contained Jamaica ginger (and it was bought and sold as such), they were authorized to conclude that it was intoxicating.' The court further said: 'Moreover, we think that, without the druggist's evidence, it is matter of common knowledge that Jamaica ginger is an intoxicant, and a spirituous liquor, and it is hardly more necessary to introduce testimony of that fact than it would be of whisky.' The act of 1906, known as the 'Cammack Law' (Laws 1906, p. 86, c. 21), which is an amendment to section 2500, Ky. St., describes or defines the inhibited liquors by the term 'spirituous, vinous, malt, or other intoxicating liquors.'

'With these aids or helps found in our judicial and legislative expressions from time to time since 1874, when the first law was put upon our statute books upon this subject-matter, we are to interpret and determine what is the meaning, scope, and purpose of these words, 'spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors' as found and used for so long in our statutes. Does it mean that these liquids may not be legally vended in prohibited localities, whether they contain or have in their makeup a sufficient quantity of alcohol to cause the drinker, in the largest quantity in which it may or might be imbibed, to become intoxicated? Or was it the intent, purpose, and scope of this legislation, by the use of these common and general terms therein, to prohibit the sale of intoxicants, and not drinks, whatever they may contain, that will not intoxicate, such as it is agreed that the defendants sold or are charged with selling, and admit they did sell, in these prosecutions? It seems clear that in the Mitchell Case, supra, it was regarded as essential, in order to convict for a violation of the law for selling liquor in local option territory, that the liquid sold should be an intoxicant. Two defenses were made by defendant—one, that Jamaica ginger was not what is known as a 'spirituous liquor,' and the other, that it was not intoxicating; and under the evidence the jury found that it was a spirituous liquor, and that it was an intoxicant, and upon appeal the case was affirmed. And if such is the required rule as to what may be termed spirituous liquor, would not the same rule and construction apply to a sale of malt liquor, to wit, that it must be shown, upon a plea of not guilty, that the liquor was a malt liquor and that, as such, it was intoxicating? And the two cases cited in which the court construed the act of 1898, now section 2557a, Ky. St., it was certainly held that the enactment of that law did not in any wise repeal or affect section 2557, but that it was an amendment to said last-named section, intended to enlarge its scope, so as to embrace or include all other intoxicants not falling under the inhibition of section 2557, such as the court said it was difficult and often impossible to find out the ingredients contained in the liquid. As intimated in the Anderson Case, supra, there is grave question as to the power of the Legislature to enact a law prohibiting the sale of liquids that are not intoxicants, and not in their makeup detrimental to health or the peace or good well of society, although they may contain malt or spirituous or vinous liquors. The Legislature, when framing the Cammack law, put this construction upon these words 'spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors,' as found in the law, by using in reference thereto the words 'spirituous, vinous, malt, or other intoxicating liquors,' meaning plainly that the inhibition was to cover and include all intoxicating drinks. If not, why use the words 'or other intoxicating liquors'?

"So, while the question here presented has not been considered by our highest court in its present form, we have both judicial and legislative sanction which clearly indicate that these words, as found in section 2557, were intended to prohibit the use of intoxicants, and as spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors are as a general rule intoxicants, these terms were used in the several statutes and the Constitution as a name to designate intoxicating liquors; and when in 1898 it was found that other intoxicants were being sold which could not be shown or proven to be either spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, the legal horizon was enlarged by the act of that year, which provides a penalty for vending intoxicants whose makeup was unknown or shown to be other than the intoxicants already prohibited under section 2557. In construing statutes, the cardinal rule is to ascertain the legislative intent, and when it is ascertained, it controls, and in all cases the mere letter must yield to the spirit of the enactment. As is said in the Bible, 'The letter killeth, but the spirit maketh alive.' Certainly the purpose of the law-makers in enacting the local option law was to prohibit and prevent the evils of intemperance caused and coming from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. This being, as we view it, the correct construction or exposition of what is meant and included in and by the words 'spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors,' as used in section 2557, Ky. St., and it being agreed that the defendants did not sell liquors that would or will intoxicate, the cases against them will be dismissed."

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Henderson County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by J. T. Staples and others against R. H. Shiver and another. From a judgment dismissing the petition on sustaining a general demurrer thereto, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Vance & Hellbronner and W. P. McClain, for appellants. F. M. Hutcheson, for appellees.

BARKER, J. One D. L. McCain, being indebted to Mrs. Elizabeth Harding in the sum of $350, on the 10th day of December, 1903, executed and delivered to her his promissory note for that sum, with the appellants as sureties, by which he promised and agreed to pay to her the amount of her debt on January 1, 1905. As additional security he executed and delivered to her a mortgage on certain horses and mules named therein.

The maker of the note paid all of it off except $151.90, with interest from April 8, 1907. Afterwards Mrs. Harding assigned and transferred the note for the unpaid balance and the mortgage to J. H. Tillotson. On April 13, 1907, Tillotson, as holder of the note, instituted an action in the Henderson circuit court to enforce his mortgage lien upon the stock, and also for a personal judgment against the maker and his sureties, the appellants here. On the 25th of February, 1908, the cause coming on to be heard, a judgment was rendered enforcing the mortgage lien upon the stock. On May 2, 1908, the holder of the note, J. H. Tillotson, assigned the judgment in his favor to R. H. Shiver, and on June 3, 1908, the court rendered a personal judgment in favor of R. H. Shiver, for $195.91 against the sureties, the appellants here. On June 17, 1908, Shiver caused an execution to be issued on the judgment, which was placed in the hands of the sheriff of Henderson county, who was proceeding to execute it when this equitable action was instituted against R. H. Shiver and Ed Melton, sheriff of Henderson county, for an injunction to prevent its execution. A general demurrer to the petition as amended was filed by the defendants and sustained by the court, and, the plaintiffs (appellants) declining to plead further, their petition was dismissed; and of this ruling they are now complaining.

This being a collateral attack upon a judgment, it can only be upheld upon the theory that the judgment was void. The plaintiffs in this action could not have appealed from the judgment complained of, because, it being for less than $200, this court would have had no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal. But, if the judgment is void, its enforcement should be enjoined, and we have jurisdiction of the judgment of the trial court dismissing the petition seeking such an injunction. We are unable to perceive, however, upon what theory the judgment complained of is void. The Henderson circuit court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the appellants here were properly before the court there, and, this being true, however erroneous the judgment may be, it is not void. Jurisdiction is the right to hear and determine, and it certainly was within the competency of the circuit court to adjudge whether or not R. H. Shiver had been assigned the whole claim of J. H. Tillotson, or only the judgment in rem, and it was evidently determined that the whole claim had been assigned to him. With this question, however, the appellants have nothing to do, as they are not interested in it. If the court by its judgment gave R. H. Shiver more than he was entitled to as between him and J. H. Tillotson, this is a matter of which Tillotson might complain, but not appellants. Appellants do not pretend that they have now, or ever had, a just defense to the note on which they were sureties. As to whether they are required to pay to R. H. Shiver or to J. H. Tillotson is to them a matter of indifference. They can only be required to pay once. R. H. Shiver, as assignee of the claim of J. H. Tillotson against appellants, was entitled to have a personal judgment entered in his favor. Civ. Code Prac. § 20; Western Bank v. Colde-way's Ex'r, 94 S. W. 1, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 651; Cantrell v. Hewlett, 65 Ky. 811; Dougherty v. Smith, 61 Ky. 279; Warner v. Turner, 57 Ky. 759. But, even if we were to assume that he was not so entitled, the judgment would only be erroneous, and not void. This being true, the court properly sustained the demurrer as amended, and, upon the failure of the appellants to further amend, the court properly dismissed the petition.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Owen County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Suit by M. R. Roland against G. W. O'Neal. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. H. Settle, for appellant. Winslow & Howe, for appellee.

BARKER, J. This action was instituted by M. R. Roland to enjoin the appellee, G. W. O'Neal, from using a private right of way across the farm of appellant. The litigation originated as follows: Many years ago one Octave Salve owned both the farms of appellant and appellee, and that of Sallie Stribling. Some 25 years ago he sold to G. W. O'Neal the farm now owned and occupied by him. Afterwards he sold to Sallie Stribling the farm now occupied by her. About 5 years ago he sold to D. J. Gaines the farm now owned and occupied by Roland, and Gaines subsequently sold and transferred it to Roland. When Salve sold the farm to O'Neal there was no outlet from it to the Buck Run pike, except over the farms now occupied by Roland and Mrs. Stribling. Under these circumstances the law implied a grant of a reasonable right of way from Salve to his vendee, O'Neal, over the remainder of his land to the public pike, and when he afterwards conveyed to Mrs. Stribling and to Gaines (Roland's vendor) they took the lands purchased subject to this private right of way in O'Neal. This, as we understand the record, is not disputed; the real dispute here being which of two routes O'Neal is entitled to use. The situation can be better understood by a reference to the subjoined map, which was filed as part of O'Neal's deposition, and the correctness of which is not disputed:

Roland contends that the route through Mrs. Stribling's barn lot, and which runs through his place from "C" to "D" on the plat, is the easement to which appellee is entitled. On the other hand, O'Neal contends that the easement marked "passway in controversy," and which runs through Roland's farm from "A" to "B" on the plat, is his right of way. The evidence shows that O'Neal used the passway claimed by him continuously and without objection either by Roland's vendor, Gaines, or by Roland, himself, until this present controversy arose. Roland admits this, but says that this use was permissive. We fail to see how this alters the case. While O'Neal pleads a right of way by adverse user of 15 years or more, it may be conceded that plat, he could not afterwards withdraw his permission. O'Neal does not claim a right of way along the route marked "through Mrs. Stribling's barn lot," and the proof shows that this route is so steep as to be practically impassable for loaded wagons.

The chancellor, after all the evidence was in and the case submitted, found, in favor of O'Neal, that the easement marked "passway in controversy," and which runs through Roland's farm from "A" to "B," is the passway to which appellee is entitled. A careful reading of the record convinces us that his conclusion on the mooted issue was correct. It may be true, as contended for by appellant's counsel, that, as an original proposition, he would have had the right to select a reasonable passway over his farm for the use of appellee; but, when his vendor acquiesced in appellee's using the passway in controversy, that permission could not be withdrawn, and the appellee forced to choose another route. The fact that he at other times or occasions used another route does not militate against the conclusion we have reached. That was permissive also. Hereafter O'Neal will not have the right to use the route through Mrs. Stribling's barn lot in so far as it crosses Roland's place, without his permission; nor will he be entitled to use the new passway over Mrs. Sallie Stribling's farm purchased by Roland, which is shown on the plat, unless Roland consents thereto. He will be confined, of course, to the old right of way so far as Roland is concerned. Of course, the question as to whether he has a right of way across Mrs. Stribling's farm, between the points he claims, is not before us, and we do not therefore decide it. For the present, all that we decide is that the conclusion of the court that appellee had a right of way across appellant's farm, as indicated on the map, between the points "A" and "B," is correct, and that he has no right to use the right of way, shown on the map, over Mrs. Stribling's land, which was purchased by him.

It will be borne in mind that we are not discussing here the acquisition by O'Neal of an easement over Roland's land by adverse user for the statutory period. Of course, if this principle was involved, O'Neal would acquire no right to an easement by user so long as the use was permissive. The question we have is merely the location of a right of way which the law gave O'Neal, and when once located by permissive use the permission could not be withdrawn.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Warren County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Application by F. C. Schoenthaler, for a license to sell liquor under Ky. St. 1909, § 4205 (Russell's St. § 6147). From a judgment of the circuit court granting the application, the Commonwealth appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth. Thos. W. Thomas and W. B. Gains, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. In February, 1909, the appellee applied to the county court of Warren county for license to sell liquor under section 4205 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 6147), reading in part: "License to merchants, druggists or distillers shall be granted only upon satisfactory evidence that the applicant is in good faith a merchant, druggist or a distiller, and that the applicant has not assumed the name or the business for the purpose of retailing liquors." The county court rejected his application upon the ground that he was not a merchant in good faith. At the May term, 1909, he again made application, and the court, being of the opinion that its judgment entered in February, 1909, was a bar to a renewal of the application at any time within a year from that day, dismissed the application, and the appellee prosecuted an appeal to the circuit court. That court held that the February judgment was not a bar, and ordered that the case be remanded to the judge of the Warren county court to dispose of. From the judgment of the circuit court holding that the February judgment of the county court was not a bar, this appeal is prosecuted.

The precise question here involved was before us in Hensley v. Metcalfe County Court, 115 Ky. 810, 74 S. W. 1054, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 204. In that case it was held that the judgment of the county court refusing license was conclusive determination against the granting of license for the year covered by the first application, and that it was not error for the court on a second application

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ACTIONS—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Whether one had the right to rely on assurances of his boss as to the safety of the roof of a mine, rather than on the warnings of his associates, is a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the gist of the case was defendant's failure to use ordinary care to ascertain if the roof of its mine was safe, and no precautions had been taken to make it safe, a charge permitting a recovery for injuries by the fall of overhanging slate if defendant by ordinary care might have known of the unsafe condition, and failed to use ordinary care "to brace or prop the roof," was not erroneous for its omission to predicate liability on failure to scale the roof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 296*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where there was no evidence of negligence on the part of one injured by the fall of the roof of a mine except his continuing to work after his associates warned him of danger, a charge that he could not recover if he knew of the danger, or could have discovered it by using ordinary care, was sufficient.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Orville Phelps against the McHenry Coal Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. P. Taylor, for appellant. Heavrin & Woodward and Otto C. Martin, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. Orville Phelps was a laborer in the service of the McHenry Coal Company. A portion of the mine of the McHenry Coal Company was abandoned some 12 or 15 years ago, and during this time dirt and slate fell from the roof above to the floor, making a heap of debris some four or five feet high. The company undertook to clean this away for the purpose of using the space again in operating another part of the mine. On the afternoon of August 16, 1907, while hands were at work removing the debris and taking down the overhanging slate, Orville Phelps, who was driving the mule car and hauling the debris off, called the be ten years. You go back to your own entry." This Phelps did, but later he was put to work with another shift of hands cleaning out this debris; and while he was at work this slate in the roof fell, catching him and inflicting painful injuries. He brought this suit to recover for them; and a judgment having been rendered in his favor for $800, the coal company appeals.

There was evidence on behalf of the plaintiff tending to show that the roof was, in fact, in a dangerous condition, and that ordinary care had not been used by the master to furnish the servant a reasonably safe place to work. There was also evidence on behalf of the defendant to the effect that the plaintiff was warned of the danger by his fellow associates, and that with full knowledge he put himself in the way of it. There was sufficient evidence to take the case to the jury; for, if the plaintiff had been assured by the boss that the roof was safe, he was not required to make an examination of it himself, and whether he had the right to rely on what the boss said as to the safety of the roof rather than on what his associates said would be a question depending upon all the facts and circumstances, and properly to be determined by the jury.

The court among other things gave the jury this instruction: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that while plaintiff was an employé for the defendant and engaged at work for it at a point in its mines at McHenry, Ky., called No. 6 South, and while acting in the scope of his employment in obedience to the commands of Tom Gaddis or Marion Maddox, the defendant's agents and boss in the mine, and while in the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety was injured by the fall of the roof of the mine at that point, and if the jury further believe from the evidence that the roof at that point was dangerous and unsafe, and the defendant or its agents, Tom Gaddis or Marion Maddox, knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care might have known, of such dangerous and unsafe condition, and that the defendant failed to exercise ordinary care to brace or prop the roof overhead at the place where plaintiff was working, and by reason of such failure the place where he worked was not reasonably safe, and the plaintiff did not know of such danger, and could not discover same by the exercise of ordinary care in performing the duties of his employment, and that the plaintiff was injured as set out in the petition, the jury should find for him the damages he sustained thereby as a direct and proximate result thereof, not exceeding the amount sued for, $9,800." It is earnestly in-the roof before the men were sent underneath to shovel out the débris. But if the instruction, instead of using the words "the defendant failed to exercise ordinary care to brace or prop the roof overhead," had added thereto "or to scale the roof," the result of the trial would have been precisely the same; for there was no evidence at all that it had scaled the roof, or attempted in any way to make it safe. The gist of the case was that the master had failed to exercise ordinary care for the safety of the servant, and, under the evidence, this depended solely on the question whether ordinary care had been used to ascertain if the roof was reasonably safe; for no precautions had been taken to make it safe, and when the jury concluded that the place was not reasonably safe, and that ordinary care had not been used to ascertain the danger, they would have found for the plaintiff as readily under the instruction indicated as under that given by the court. The jury were in effect told by the instruction quoted that the plaintiff could not recover if he knew of the danger or could have discovered it by the exercise of ordinary care in performing the duties of his employment.

In view of the instruction quoted, the jury could not have been misled by instruction 3. By that instruction also, among other things, they were told: "If they believe from the evidence the plaintiff knew of the danger, or could have discovered it by the exercise of ordinary care in the duties of his employment, then the jury should find for the defendant." There was no effort to show negligence on the part of the plaintiff except his continuing to work after his associates warned him of danger; and we do not well see how this question could have been more clearly submitted to the jury than by the instructions quoted. On the whole record, the defendant had a fair trial on the merits of its case. It at least has no ground to complain of the instructions.

Judgment affirmed.

Where street car men knowingly operated on a steep incline a car with a useless brake, and relied entirely on reverse electric current, and a collision occurred because the current was cut off while the car was descending the incline, a verdict awarding $1,000 as punitive damages was not excessive.

4. TRIAL (§ 25*)—RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE.

Where, in an action for injuries to a street car passenger, plaintiff sought to recover punitive damages because of gross negligence, and the street railroad offered to confess judgment for a sum less than was claimed in the petition without confessing its guilt of gross negligence, the burden of proof was on plaintiff, and he was entitled to open and close.

7. JUDGMENT (§ 251*)—ERRONEOUS JUDGMENT—CORRECTION.

Where, in an action for personal injuries, the jury awarded a specified sum for compensation and another for punitive damages and another for medical attention, the error in awarding the latter sum, arising from the insufficiency of the petition, would be cured by disregarding that portion of the verdict, and judgment should be rendered for the other two sums, as directed by Civ. on Broadway street in Lexington, Ky. To recover damages for his injuries he instituted this action against the Lexington Railway Company, alleging that the collision in which he was hurt was the result of the gross negligence of the employes of appellant in charge of the car upon which he was riding. The railway company filed an answer admitting the negligence of its employes, and offering to confess judgment for $500, to be in full of the damages sustained by the plaintiff. It denied, however, gross negligence, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for his injuries for a greater sum than $500. The trial of the case resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,600, which the jury divided as follows: $100 for medical attention; $500 for compensation; and $1,000 for punitive damages. Upon the return of this verdict, the trial judge entered judgment for $1,600, and the defendant (appellant) is here on appeal.

The salient facts of the injury complained of are as follows: The car upon which appellee was riding is known as the "train car," because it meets the trains coming in on the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway at its station near the southern limits of the city of Lexington. On the day of the accident, the employes knew that the brake by which the speed of the car was regulated was entirely useless because of some defect which is not explained in the record, and, as a result of this defect, it was necessary, in order to stop the car, to reverse the current of electricity which constituted the motor power. Between the railroad depot and the main part of the city of Lexington there is a steep incline on Broadway street, at the foot of which the trains of the Louisville & Nashville and the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroads cross the street. Appellee had come in on the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway, and boarded the street car with several other passengers, for the purpose of riding into town. The car started, and it was at once apparent that the brake was entirely useless, and that, in order to control the speed of the car while going down the steep incline on Broadway, it was necessary to rely entirely upon the reverse current of the electricity. This, as said before, was well known to those in charge of the car, and they also knew that at the bottom of the hill they were liable to encounter the crossing trains of the Louisville & Nashville and Chesapeake & Ohio Railroads. They further knew that, if anything occurred by which the current was cut off while the car was descending the hill, they had no means by which to stop its headlong passage, or by which they could protect the passengers. It seems not even to have occurred to them to notify those in charge of the power house of their precarious condition, so that extra precaution might be taken to keep the current strong and regular. As soon as the car started down the hill on Broadway street, for some reason not explained the current was cut off, and the car at once started, under the influence of the law of gravitation, to run swiftly down the incline; those in charge having no power to control its rapid descent. At this time the passenger train of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad was crossing Broadway street at the foot of the incline, and appellant's flying car crashed into it, overturning the baggage car of the crossing train, and more or less injuring all of the passengers on board appellant's car. It seems to us that this conduct on the part of the employes of appellant was not only grossly negligent, but criminally negligent. To conceal from the passengers the defect in the brake, and then run the car down a steep incline, depending upon the uncertain current of electricity as the only protection against danger to life or limb, cannot be correctly characterized by any term less than "gross negligence." This being true, the appellee was entitled to an instruction that the jury might award punitive damages.

The court, on the subject of punitive damages, instructed the jury as follows: "Gross negligence is that kind of negligence which evinces a reckless disregard of, or a reckless indifference to, the safety of another or others." Of this instruction appellant complains. "Gross negligence" has often been defined as the absence of slight care, and, if there be any substantial difference between this definition and the instruction given by the court, it is a difference of which the plaintiff might complain, but not the defendant. It seems to us that the instruction of the court accurately defines the degree of negligence of which the appellant's employes were guilty. Appellant insists that the court should have defined "gross negligence" in this case as in L. & N. R. R. Co. v. McCoy, 81 Ky. 413, which is as follows: "In the management of a railroad, or any department thereof, 'gross negligence' is the failure to take such care as a person of common sense and reasonable skill in like business, but of careless habits, would observe in avoiding injury to his own person or life under circumstances of equal or similar danger to those which may be under investigation." A comparison of the instruction complained of with that which appellant insists should have been given will show that the difference was in favor of appellee, and not against it, and, while appellee might have complained of the instruction given, appellant cannot.

The appellant did not have the burden of proof upon the trial, and was not entitled to open and close the case. It is true, it offered to confess judgment for $500; but this was not as great a sum as that claimed in the petition, nor did the petition confess to the guilt of gross negligence, and therefore the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to prove the disputed part of the claim in the petition. Louisville & Eastern Ry. Co. v. Mann, 104 S. W. 362, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 986; Southern Ry. in Kentucky v. Steele, 123 Ky. 262, 90 S. W. 548, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 764; Id., 123 Ky. 262, 94 S. W. 653, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 690.

The appellant also insists that the court erred in giving judgment for the sum of $100 awarded in the verdict for medical services. This objection is based upon the fact that the petition alleges, in regard to his outlay for medical services, as follows: "That plaintiff has been compelled to pay for medical services on account of said injuries the sum of $—— and the further sum of $—— for medicine." We have uniformly held that, in order to recover special damage, it must be specifically alleged;

114 S. W. 295; Central Ky. Traction Co. v. Chapman, 113 S. W. 438; C. & O. R. R. Co. v. Crank, 128 Ky. 329, 108 S. W. 276, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 1202, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Dickey, 104 S. W. 329, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 894; Macon v. Paducah Street Ry. Co., 62 S. W. 496, 110 Ky. 687; Jesse v. Shuck, 12 S. W. 304, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 463. As the jury in its verdict specifically set forth the amount alleged for medical services, the plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment for that amount on the verdict. The court should have disregarded that portion of the verdict and entered judgment only for $1,500. Section 386 of the Civil Code of Practice is as follows: "Judgment shall be given for the party whom the pleadings entitle thereto, though there may have been a verdict against him." See, also, Chaney v. Bevins, 96 S. W. 1129, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 1219.

Inasmuch as the court entered a judgment for $1,600, when it should have entered one for only $1,500, the judgment must be reversed, with instructions to the court below, when the case returns, to enter a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $1,500; and it is so ordered.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. ENGLEMAN'S ADM'R.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 3, 1909.)

1. RAILROADS (§§ 312, 316, 350*)—SPEED OF TRAIN PAST PRIVATE CROSSINGS—SIGNAL—QUESTION FOR JURY.

A railroad company may run its trains at any speed it pleases over private crossings, and it is not required to give notice of their approach to such crossings, unless it has been customary for signals to be given which are relied on by persons using the crossing, and whether, in a given case, the custom of giving signals for a crossing prevailed to an extent that persons using the crossing could rely on the signals being given, is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 992, 994, 1006, 1007; Dec. Dig. §§ 312, 316, 350.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 350*)—DEATH AT CROSSING—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — PRESUMPTIONS.

There is no presumption that a person killed at a private railroad crossing is guilty of contributory negligence; that question being for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1167-1192; Dec. Dig. § 350.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 350*)—DEATH AT CROSSING—SIGNALS — RELIANCE UPON—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for death of a person killed at a private railroad crossing, whether the custom of giving signals for a crossing prevailed to an extent that persons using the crossing could rely on the signals being given held, under the evidence, a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 350.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 351*)—DEATH AT CROSSING—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for death of a person killed at a private railroad crossing, an instruction that it was the duty of defendant's employes in charge of the train, when approaching the crossing, to keep a lookout for persons traveling over the crossing, and to give reasonable signals of the movement of the train, and if defendant's employes negligently failed to perform these duties, and by reason thereof plaintiff's intestate was killed, etc., was erroneous; a proper instruction being that if it was customary for trains to give signals of their approach to the crossing, and this custom prevailed to an extent that persons using the crossing had reason to rely on such signals being given, and the train in question failed to give such signals, and by reason of such failure decedent was struck, the jury should find for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS — CONFORMITY TO EVIDENCE.

In an action for death of a person killed at a private railroad crossing, it was error to charge that, although the jury believed that the employes on the train gave reasonable signals of the approach of the train, yet, if the employes discovered deceased's peril in time to have avoided the collision by the use of the available means and appliances at hand, to find for plaintiff; there being no evidence to support it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

6. RAILROADS (§ 312*)—CROSSING ACCIDENT—DUTY OF ENGINEER IN APPROACHING CROSSING.

The engineer of a train approaching a private road crossing in the country is not bound to look away from the track to see if he can discover the top of any vehicle above the sides of the cut through which the road runs, but, on the contrary, is bound to watch the track before him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 312.*]

Nunn, C. J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lincoln County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by Bessie Kay Engleman's administrator against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Benjamin D. Warfield and J. W. Alcorn, for appellant. Robert Harding, E. V. Puryear, M. C. Saufley, and Greene, Van Winkle & Schofield, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. Bessie Kay Engleman, while driving a phaeton across the Louisville & Nashville railroad track at a private crossing known as "Woods' crossing," about 2½ miles north of Stanford, Ky., was struck by the north-bound passenger train and killed. This action was brought by her administrator to recover for her death, and, a recovery having been had in the sum of $10,000, the railroad company appeals.

The pike ran on the opposite side of the railroad from the home of the decedent. To get out to the pike from her home, she used a private road, and was struck where this road crossed the railroad. The road was used as an outlet by persons living on the farms of Samuel Harris and Eph Woods, including their tenants and persons going to or from their places on business or pleasure. There was a gate at the edge of the railroad right of way, 62 feet from the track. The private road passed through a cut just before it reached the railroad, so that a person driving a vehicle could not see an approaching train until he was within a few feet of the track, and those in charge of the train would be equally unable to see him until about the same time, unless the top of the vehicle was high enough to be visible above the cut as it approached the track. The evidence for the plaintiff tended to show that the crossing was especially dangerous, that the railroad trains were accustomed to give signals of their approach to the crossing, and that no warning of the approach of this train was given. There was also much evidence tending to show that the trains sometimes gave signals of their approach, and sometimes did not, although the engineer of this train testified that he regarded it a dangerous crossing, and always gave the usual crossing signals as he approached it. The evidence for the defendant tended to show that the decedent drove on the crossing without looking or listening when the train was very close to it, and when it was too late for those in charge of the train to avert the injury to her. It also showed that the train gave the usual crossing signals as it approached.

On this evidence, the court, refusing to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant, gave the jury the following instructions:

"No. 1. If you believe from the evidence that the railroad crossing over the private passway, known and spoken of in the testimony as the 'Woods crossing,' is a dangerous crossing for persons traveling thereover in buggies in an ordinarily prudent manner, then it was the duty of the employes of defendant in control of the train that struck the deceased, when moving the train on that part of the track approaching said crossing, to keep a lookout for persons traveling over same in a vehicle or vehicles, and to give reasonable signals and warnings of the movement of its train when approaching said crossing, and if you believe from the evidence that the defendant's employes in charge of said train negligently failed to perform any of these duties in the movement of said train, and that by reason thereof the plaintiff's intestate while crossing, or attempting to cross, said crossing, was run against and killed by said train, and that the deceased was at the time using ordinary care for her own safety, then you will find for the plaintiff in damages such a sum as you believe from the evidence will reasonably compensate the estate of the deceased for the destruction of her power to earn money, not exceeding the sum of $30,000.

"No. 2. Although you may believe from the evidence that the employes on the train gave reasonable signals of the approach of the train to the Woods crossing, yet if you further believe from the evidence that the employes in charge of the movements of the train discovered the peril of the deceased in time to have avoided the collision by the use of the available means and appliances at hand, then you should find for the plaintiff."

"No. 5. Unless the defendant's employes in charge of the train were negligent as defined in instruction No. 1 then you will find for the defendant; and although you may believe from the evidence that there was such negligence on the part of said employes, yet, if, in going on the track as she did, the deceased failed to use ordinary care for her own safety, and but for this would not have been injured, then you will find for the defendant, notwithstanding such negligence on its part."

It has been held by this court in a number of cases that the railroad company may run its trains at such speed as it pleases over private crossings, and that it is not required to give notice of the approach of the trains to such crossings, unless it has been customary for these signals to be given, and they were relied on by persons using the crossing. Johnson v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 91 Ky. 651, 25 S. W. 754; Louisville, etc., R. R. Co. v. Surv- ant, 96 Ky. 197, 27 S. W. 999, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 545; Davis v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 116 Ky. 144, 75 S. W. 275; Hoback v. Louisville, etc., R. R. Co., 99 S. W. 241. On the other hand, it has been held that where it has been customary for signals to be given of the approach of trains to a private crossing, and these were relied on by persons using the crossing, and a traveler on the crossing was struck by reason of a failure to give the customary signals, a recovery may be had. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Bodine, 109 Ky. 509, 59 S. W. 740, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 147, 56 L. R. A. 506; Early's Adm'r v. Louisville, etc., R. R. Co., 115 Ky. 13, 72 S. W. 348, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1807. There was some evidence here that the trains were accustomed to give the usual signals of their approach to this crossing, and that persons using the crossing relied thereon. This evidence was sufficient to submit the case to the jury under the rule referred to. No one saw the decedent as she approached the crossing. No one knows whether she stopped, looked, or listened, or what precautions she took. This being true, under a long line of decisions of this court, it is not presumed that she was guilty of contributory negligence, and the question is for the jury. The court therefore did not err in refusing to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant.

The rule that where it has been customary to give signals at a private crossing, and persons using the crossing have come to rely upon them, the signals may not be omitted without notice, obtains in other jurisdictions. Westaway v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 56 Minn. 28, 57 N. W. 222; Nash v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 117 N. Y. 628, 22 N. E. 1128; 33 Cyc. 946, and cases cited. But there was in this case evidence that the train failed to whistle or give any signals for the crossing as often as they gave such signals. In view of this evidence, it was a question for the jury whether the custom of giving signals for this crossing prevailed to such an extent that persons using the crossing had a right to rely on the signals being given. It is not material that some trains passed this crossing without giving the usual signals, for some trains fail to give signals at public crossings. The case turns on whether there was such a custom to give the signals that persons using the crossing had the right to rely on it. In lieu of instruction No. 1, the court should have told the jury, in substance, that if it had been customary for trains to give signals of their approach to the Woods crossing, and this custom had prevailed to such an extent that persons using the crossing had reason to rely on such signals being given, and the train in question failed to give reasonable signals of its approach to the crossing, and by reason of such failure the decedent was struck and hurt, they should find for the plaintiff as set out in the instruction; otherwise for the defendant.

There was no evidence in the case to war-

K. R. Co. v. Onan, 110 S. W. 381, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 462. An instruction of this sort should never be given, unless there is evidence to warrant it. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Joshlin, 110 S. W. 383, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 513.

In Southern R. R. Co. v. Winchester, 127 Ky. 154, 105 S. W. 167, where we had before us an instruction similar to No. 5, we said: "In lieu of the third instruction on another trial, the court will tell the jury that it was the duty of the intestate, on approaching the crossing, to use such care as may be usually expected of an ordinarily prudent person to learn of the approach of the train and keep out of its way; that, if the crossing was especially dangerous, it was incumbent on him to exercise increased care commensurate with the danger; and that if he failed to exercise such care, and but for this would not have been injured, then the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find, even though they may believe from the evidence that the defendant or its employes were negligent as set out in No. 1 and No. 2." Instruction No. 6 given by the court, practically conformed to the rule thus laid down, but, for brevity, on another trial the court will give the one instruction indicated.

The two instructions we have outlined, with instruction Nos. 4 and 8, given by the court, defining "reasonable signals" and "ordinary care," cover the whole law of the case. The other matters complained of will not, perhaps, occur on another trial.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

NUNN, C. J. I agree to the reversal, but do not assent to the opinion wherein it relieves the appellant from giving warning of the approach of the train to a known unusually dangerous private crossing. As decided by this court in the case of L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Bodine, 109 Ky. 509, 59 S. W. 740, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 147, 56 L. R. A. 506, the effect of the opinion is to give notice to railroad companies to cease to give warnings of the approach of their trains in such cases.

CITY OF COLUMBUS v. BANK OF COLUMBUS.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1909.)

1. TAXATION (§ 840*)—PENALTIES FOR NON-PAYMENT.

Where a bank paid a personal property tax unlawfully assessed, instead of a franchise tax assessed, but of which it had no notice, it is not liable for a penalty for nonpayment of the franchise tax.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1656; Dec. Dig. § 840.*]

it had no notice, it is only liable for the difference between such taxes, as it is entitled to credit for the amount paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 972; Dec. Dig. § 527.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 528*)—INTEREST ON TAXES UNPAID.

Where a city could not legally demand a franchise tax until after the commencement of the action therefor by the passage of an ordinance authorizing it, interest on the tax before judgment is not recoverable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 981; Dec. Dig. § 528.*]

4. COSTS (§ 51*)—PREMATURE ACTION—EFFECT OF AMENDMENT.

Plaintiff, who was not entitled to maintain an action at the commencement thereof, and before filing an amended petition, is liable for costs accruing before such amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 218-220; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1171*)—DETERMINATION OF CAUSE—REVERSAL—TRIVIAL MATTERS.

A judgment will not be reversed where the only error was the award of a trivial amount of costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4549; Dec. Dig. § 1171.*]

6. PLEADING (§ 252*)—AMENDMENT—EFFECT—NEW DEMAND.

A new demand, after filing an amended petition, is not necessary, where demand was made before action, and the allegations in the amended petition do not create a new cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 736, 739; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

7. TAXATION (§ 593*)—VALIDITY OF TAX—PRE-SUMPTION.

The levy of a tax by the proper authorities is presumed to be legal and correct, and the burden of proving its illegality is on a person resisting collection thereof.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hickman County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by the City of Columbus against the Bank of Columbus. From a judgment for plaintiff granting partial relief, it appeals, and defendant prosecutes a cross-appeal. Affirmed.

Shelbourne & Smith, for appellant. J. M. Brumel, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. The appellant by suit in the court below sought to recover of appellee a franchise tax and penalty for each of the years 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, and 1906, aggregating $475.77. Appellee filed a demurrer to the petition, which the court sustained upon the ground that the ordinances, under which appellant was attempting to collect the tax for each of the years named, were violative of the state Constitution, and therefore void, because they failed to specify the forming to the provisions of the Constitution, and therefore valid, by which another and legal levy of the franchise tax, for each of the years mentioned sought to be recovered of appellee, was made. To the petition as thus amended, appellee filed an answer traversing all the averments of the petition and amendment, and attacking affirmatively the validity of the tax ordinances in question, also the validity of all steps taken by appellant looking to the collection of the taxes claimed. It appears from the agreed facts found in the record that, though not called on during any of the years indicated to pay a franchise tax, appellee had paid each year a tax to appellant upon its tangible and intangible property, capital stock, etc., amounting in the aggregate to $300. The assessment of the tax paid by appellee for each of the years mentioned was made by the local assessor. Appellee owned no real estate during these years. During the same years, and for each of them, the state board assessed all of appellee's property in arriving at the value of its franchise tax; the aggregate of the franchise taxes covering the series of years being $371.18. The assessments made each year were duly certified by the state board to the clerk of the Hickman county court, but were never applied for nor used by appellant. On the hearing the circuit court gave appellant judgment against appellee for the difference between the total amount of the taxes paid by appellee during the years in controversy, and the total of franchise taxes assessed against it by the state board for the same years; such difference being $71.18. The judgment allowed appellant no penalties and only allowed interest on the amount recovered from the date of the judgment. From that judgment appellant has prosecuted an appeal, and appellee a cross-appeal.

Appellant complains that the circuit court erred in refusing to allow it judgment for the entire amount of taxes sued for, and penalties. There is no just ground for this complaint. Appellee paid in each of the several years for which taxes were claimed all the tax demanded of it, and what it thus paid each year was but a little less than the franchise tax assessed against it by the state board. It does not even appear that appellee did not know it was paying each year the amount assessed against it by the state board. During the whole of that time it made its regular reports as provided by law, and from these reports the state board assessed it for a franchise tax from year to year. These assessments were in every instance certified by the board to the clerk of the Hickman county court, and from them appellant could have gotten, but by its own fault failed to obtain, the tax for each appellee the penalties which, under other circumstances, it might properly have been required to pay. It was also right that appellee should have had credit for the tax it paid from year to year. Indeed, it was only justly liable for the difference between what it paid in taxes for the years in question and what it should have paid under the assessment of the state board for the same time; that difference being $71.18.

Appellant has no right to complain that the circuit court refused to allow it interest upon the tax for each year from the time it claims it should have been paid, as it had the use of what was paid each year by appellee and did not put itself in position to collect of appellee what it should have received until about 30 days before the institution of this action, and even then it could not legally demand or collect the additional tax until the enactment of valid ordinances authorizing it, which ordinances were not passed until after suit was brought and just before the amended petition was filed. The court therefore did right in only allowing interest on the amount of tax recovered from the date of the judgment. As a matter of law appellant should have been made to pay the costs of the action accruing down to the time of the filing of the amended petition. This is the only error in the judgment; but, as the amount of such cost is so small, we will not disturb the judgment on that account.

Appellee complains that no demand was made of it for the taxes after the filing of the amended petition. We have concluded that this complaint is not well founded. Appellee knew, from the demand made of it before the institution of the action, that it was owing the taxes claimed, or a part thereof, and the subsequent steps taken by appellant to authorize its collection did not create a new demand, as after the filing of the amended petition appellee owed the same amount of tax that it did when the demand therefor was made, for the assessment for each year made by the state board remained all the while unsatisfied.

Appellee's further contention, that the ordinances last enacted by the city authorities were never published as required by law, would have constituted just ground for attacking their validity, if it had made proof of such failure; but such proof was not made by appellee, nor does it appear in the agreed statement of facts, although its answer alleged that the ordinances were not published. In other words, the burden of showing that fact rested upon appellee, for this court has repeatedly declared that the creation or assessment and levy of a tax by the proper authorities must be presumed to be legal and correct, and that the burden of proving its illegality, if any, is upon the party resisting its payment. Morgan v. Board of Councilmen, 121 S. W. 1033.

Finding no legal ground for disturbing the judgment the same is affirmed on the original appeal and cross-appeal.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wayne County. "To be officially reported."

Action by Frank Waters and others against J. H. Keeney and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

T. J. Morrow, Cook & Jones, and Harrison & Harrison, for appellants. O. H. Waddle & Son, Jos. Bertram, and J. N. Sharp, for appellees.

CLAY, C. The appellees, Frank Waters and others, instituted this action against J. H. Keeney and others to recover a tract of land in Wayne county, Ky., consisting of 50 acres. J. H. Keeney and others denied the title of appellees and pleaded title in themselves by adverse possession. The jury returned a verdict in favor of appellees. From the judgment based thereon, this appeal is prosecuted.

The 50-acre tract of land was patented by James Coffey on the 27th day of June, 1841. Coffey, in his lifetime, sold this land to G. W. Troxell, but did not convey the same by deed or other writing. On January 27, 1881, four out of the five heirs of James Coffey, who was then dead, together with his widow, made a deed to G. W. Troxell conveying the land in question. The deed recited that it was made in consideration of $200 paid to James Coffey in his lifetime. Before procuring this deed, G. W. Troxell, on October 3, 1880, sold by title bond to James H. Davis 300 acres of land in Wayne county, including the land in controversy. On April 26, 1888, G. W. Troxell instituted an action against James H. Davis, wherein he sought to recover a balance of $50 due as part of the purchase money for the land sold to Davis. To this action Davis filed an answer, in which he pleaded inability of Troxell to make title to a large part of the 300 acres mentioned in the bond. This action was never tried. The last order was made at the May term, 1889, of the Wayne circuit court. In the year 1881 James H. Davis, who then held the title bond referred to, requested one John M. Foster, whom he had employed in removing the timber, to move upon the land and remain there until Davis told him to get off. Foster first moved upon the 50-acre tract in controversy. He remained there for about two years. He then built a house on an adjoining tract. A small portion of his garden extended into the 50-acre tract. At the time Foster moved upon the land, Davis was indebted to him in the sum of $70. Foster claims that, as Davis failed to pay this amount, he then began to claim the lands as his own. In the year 1905 appellants purchased the land in controversy from Foster. On July 31, 1906, Sallie Smith, the only remaining heir of James Coffey, deceased, together with her husband, conveyed her one-fifth interest in the land in question to appellees, Frank and Lille Waters. After the issues were made up, appellants became aware of the institution and pendency of the action of G. W. Troxell against James H. Davis. On January 28, 1909, they tendered an amended answer, in which they pleaded the outstanding title bond from G. W. Troxell to James H. Davis as a bar to a recovery by appellees. The court did not permit the amended answer to be filed. After the discovery of the record in the case of G. W. Troxell against James H. Davis, appellants went to the heirs of James H. Davis and purchased from them all their right, title, and interest in the 300 acres of land, including the land in controversy. Appellees are the only heirs of G. W. Troxell, deceased. They introduced evidence to the effect that the written contract of sale between G. W. Troxell and James H. Davis was rescinded.

Upon the trial of the case, the court instructed the jury to find for appellees the undivided one-fifth of the 50-acre tract of land in controversy under the title conveyed to them by the deed of Sallie and J. M. Smith. As to the remaining four-fifths of said tract of land, the court directed the jury to find for appellants, unless they believed from the evidence that an agreement was entered into between G. W. Troxell and James H. Davis, whereby the title bond from Troxell to Davis, introduced in evidence, should be canceled and said tract of land remain the property of Troxell, in consideration of Troxell releasing Davis from the payment of the balance of the purchase money due him from Davis for the land and in settlement of the controversy between them as to the payment of said purchase money and of the title to the lands referred to in the title bond. If they so believed, they were told to find for appellees.

It is first insisted by appellants that the court erred in refusing to permit the amended answer to be filed. It is perfectly manifest, however, that appellants were not prejudiced by this action of the court. They were permitted to offer in evidence the title bond from Troxell to Davis and all the record of the action instituted by Troxell against Davis. Appellants not only received the benefit of this evidence, but the court told the jury, in effect, to find for the appellants unless they believed the contract of sale was rescinded. No instruction more favorable to appellants could have been asked by them. Where a party gets the benefit of a defense pleaded by him, he cannot complain that the answer pleading the defense was not permitted to be filed.

But it is insisted that the court erred in admitting evidence of the parol rescission of the written contract of sale between Troxell and Davis. While there is some conflict of authority upon the question whether or not a contract in writing, and which is required by the statute to be in writing, can be rescinded by parol agreement, this question has been decided in the affirmative by this court and by many other courts of this country. Davis v. Benedict, 4 S. W. 339, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 200; Hall v. Wright, 124 S. W. —; Stearns v. Hall, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 31; Beach v. Covillard, 4 Cal. 315; Morrill v. Colehour, 82 Ill. 618; Howard v. Gresham, 27 Ga. 347; Long v. Hartwell, 34 N. J. Law, 116; Wulschner v. Ward, 115 Ind. 219, 17 N. E. 273.

It is also insisted by appellants that the evidence of the parol rescission in this case does not come up to the standard set in the case of Davis v. Benedict, supra, where it is held that the proof must be clear and convincing. Two witnesses testified upon this point. Neither one of them is impeached. Their evidence is to the effect that, after the institution of the suit by Troxell against Davis, they agreed to leave the matter to Joe Roberts and Isaac Foster to settle. They compromised the matter by permitting Troxell to take back the 50-acre tract and Davis to keep the timber which he had gotten from the land. Both Troxell and Davis agreed to this settlement. Furthermore, the very fact that the suit instituted by Troxell against Davis was permitted to remain upon the docket without action ever being taken by either party is a circumstance tending to support the testimony of the two witnesses. We therefore conclude that the evidence of the oral rescission and compromise was sufficiently clear and convincing to authorize its admission by the court and to justify the instruction complained of.

There was some evidence to the effect that W. A. Kinnie, agent of the Stearns Lumber Company, desired to purchase the Davis lands. He secured from Frank Waters and wife, two of the appellees, a contract empowering him, as their agent, to employ lawyers and institute suit for the purpose of establishing title to the land in controversy. By this contract Frank Waters and wife were to convey their interest in said lands to Kinnie in the event of a recovery. It also appears that Kinnie secured from Smith and wife a deed to their one-fifth interest in the lands in controversy. It is insisted by appellants that the above contract with Kinnie was champertous. However that may be, the law is well settled in this state that, by the terms of the statute, the champertous agreement to sell is rendered null and void—not the cause of action which is the subject of the champertous agreement. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Maxberry, 121 S. W. 447; Wehmhoff v. Rutherford, 93 Ky. 91, 32 S. W. 288, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 659.

Upon the whole case, we are unable to find any error in the record prejudicial to the substantial rights of appellants, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

The duty of a municipality to keep its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for persons traveling thereon extends to cases where the obstruction or unsafe condition of the street is brought about by persons other than the agents of the city; but the party seeking to recover for failure to perform such duty must show that the city had knowledge of the defect, or might have had knowledge thereof by the use of reasonable care.

falling on a defective sidewalk that the territory where the accident occurred had been annexed too late to be subject to taxation that year, and that the taxes for subsequent years were insufficient to improve streets or sidewalks, since the charter of such cities gives them the right to build sidewalks and assess the cost against the abutting property, so that it was unnecessary for the city to levy any general tax for such purposes.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Graves County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by W. F. Hughley against the City of Mayfield. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

M. B. Hollifield, for appellant. Hester & Martin, for appellee.

CLAY, C. This action was instituted by appellee, W. F. Hughley, to recover damages for personal injuries occasioned by his falling over an obstruction in one of the streets of the city of Mayfield. The jury returned a verdict in favor of appellee for the sum of $250, and the city appeals.

In the year 1907 the street on which appellee received his injuries, which is known as South First street, was annexed to the city of Mayfield. At the time appellee received his injuries, he was on his way from his home to a union labor meeting. It was a dark night, and there were no street lights in the immediate neighborhood. At the time he was engaged in conversation with a friend. The accident occurred in front of the residence of Caroline Armstrong. Having determined to build a sidewalk in front of her property, she made an excavation in order to make the grade of her walk conform to the grade of the other walks which had been built. In doing this, she lowered the ground and caused the stop box belonging to the Mayfield Water & Light Company to project above the ground to a height of about six inches. While appellee had a general knowledge of the location of the stop box, he momentarily forgot its presence and stumped his toe against it and fell to the ground. Appellant filed an answer containing four paragraphs. The first paragraph contained a general denial. The second paragraph contained a plea of contributory negligence. The third paragraph contained a plea to the effect that Caroline Armstrong, without any notice to, or any order, permission, or authority from, the city of Mayfield, undertook to build a sidewalk in front of her premises, and made the excavation which caused the stop box to project high and thus cause the injuries complained of. The fourth paragraph contained a plea to the effect that the annexed territory where the accident occurred was taken into the city when it was too late to subject the same to taxation for the year 1907, and that in the years 1907 and 1908 all the taxes were levied upon property in the city that were permissible under the charter of the city and the laws and Constitution of the Commonwealth, and that the city could not in either of said years improve the street or walkway in question without expending more money than was levied for public improvements.

It is first insisted by appellant that the court erred in sustaining a demurrer to the third and fourth paragraphs of the answer. This contention, however, is without merit. The rule is well settled that the duty and consequent liability of a municipality to keep its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for persons traveling thereon extends to those cases where the obstruction or unsafe condition of the street is brought about by persons other than the agents of the city; but, to impose liability upon the municipality in such cases, it devolves upon the party seeking a recovery to show that the city had knowledge of the defect, or might have had knowledge thereof by the use of reasonable care and watchfulness. 28 Cyc. 1353. Another statement of the rule is as follows: "A municipal corporation is liable for injury resulting from an excavation or obstruction in one of its public streets, made by an abutting owner for his own purposes, if the corporation had actual or constructive notice of the dangerous condition of the street for a sufficient length of time to enable it to guard the public safety." 28 Cyc. 1354.

Nor did the fourth paragraph present any defense. The charter of cities of the fourth class gives to the city the right to construct or reconstruct its sidewalks and assess the cost thereof against the property of the abutting landowners. It was unnecessary for the city to levy any general taxes for such purposes, and the fact that it did not have any funds levied for the purpose furnished no reason for not proceeding to have the sidewalk constructed or reconstructed as authorized by the charter. The evidence shows that the excavation by Caroline Armstrong was made about three months prior to the accident. Thus the city had plenty of time to order the work done.

While it is not shown that appellee's injuries were at all serious, we cannot say that the sum of $250 is excessive.

The instructions are not complained of,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes and there was sufficient evidence to justify the submission of the case to the jury.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 302*)—REVIEW—
GROUNDS OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The ground of a motion for new trial: "Error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to at the time by this defendant"—is so general that the action of the trial court cannot be reviewed.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1003*)—REVIEW—
VERDICT AGAINST WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

The only issue of fact in an action on an indemnity policy being whether plaintiff reported, in its application for the policy, that its net loss for the year and a half it had been in business prior to the application was only $1,500, and such representation, while appearing in the application when introduced in evidence, being in the handwriting of defendant's agent, and plaintiff agent, who made the application, having testified that he made no such representation, but that he told defendant's agent that plaintiff had no way of ascertaining what its loss had been, and plaintiff having exhibited what purported to be a copy of the application, which had been left with it, and which had no representation on the subject, it cannot be said on appeal that the verdict is so flagrantly against the weight of evidence as to authorize its being set aside.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Graves County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by the National Clothing Company against the American Credit-Indemnity Company of New York. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Moorman & Warren, for appellant. Robbins & Thomas, for appellee.

BARKER, J. This action was instituted by the appellee to recover judgment upon a policy of indemnity issued by appellant to it. The defense was that the appellee had fraudulently misrepresented the amount of its net loss upon the business done by it prior to the time of the application for the policy in question. It was agreed upon the record that, if the plaintiff (appellee) was entitled to recover at all, it was entitled to the sum of $2,913.00. After the issues were made up, the case was submitted to a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the appellee for the sum of $2,913.09. The defendant filed a motion and grounds for a new trial, which were overruled, and it is here on appeal.

The first question presented is the scope of our power to review the rulings of the lower court under the motion and grounds for a new trial filed by appellant. These are as follows: "The defendant, the American Credit-Indemnity Company, of New York, comes and moves the court to set aside the verdict herein, and grant it a new trial of this action, and in support of its said motion it assigns the following reasons: (1) That the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence, and is against the weight of the evidence, and is contrary to law. (2) Error of law occurring at the trial and excepted to at the time by this defendant." The second assignment of error is so general in its character that we cannot consider under it any of the errors of law discussed in the brief. This court has often held that, in order that we may review the errors complained of, they must be set forth specifically in the grounds for a new trial. This rule is only complied with when the errors complained of are so specifically set forth that the attention of the trial court is definitely directed to them. Thompson v. Commonwealth, 122 Ky. 501, 91 S. W. 701, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 1137; McLain v. Dibble & Co., 76 Ky. 297; Slater v. Sherman, 68 Ky. 206; Commonwealth v. Williams, 77 Ky. 297; Ohio Valley Ry. Co. v. Kuhn, 5 S. W. 419, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 467; Jones v. Wocher, 90 Ky. 230, 13 S. W. 911, 12 Ky. Law Rep. 105; Meaux v. Meaux, 81 Ky. 475; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. McCoy, 81 Ky. 403.

It follows from this principle that the only question which we are authorized to examine under the motion and grounds for a new trial under discussion is whether or not the evidence supports the verdict. The issue of fact presented was simply whether or not the appellee reported to the appellant, in its application for a policy of indemnity, that its net loss for the time it had been in business prior to the application was only $1,500. Undoubtedly the words constituting this representation appeared in the application when that paper was introduced in evidence; but they were in the handwriting of appellant's agent, and appellee's agent, who made the application, testified positively that he made no such representation, but, on the contrary, told the agent for appellant that his company had no way of ascertaining what the net loss in their business had been during the year and a half they had been in business prior to the application. Appellee also exhibited what purported to be a copy of the application which had been left with it, and this had no representation in regard to the net loss as is claimed by appellant.

Upon the whole, we think the jury had a right to find the issue of fact submitted to them in favor of appellee; certainly we would not be justified in saying that the verdict is so flagrantly against the weight of the evidence as to authorize its being set aside.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Perry County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Jason Cornett and others against Jerry Walker. Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Eversole & Eversole, Greene, Van Winkle & Schoolfield, and Wootton & Morgan, for appellant. John L. Dixon, for appellees.

CLAY, C. Appellees, Jason Cornett and others, instituted this action against Jerry Walker in trespass to try title. Appellant, Jerry Walker, denied the title of appellees and pleaded title in himself. The issues were completed by a reply. Evidence was heard and the case submitted to the jury, which returned a verdict in favor of appellees. From the judgment based thereon, appellant, Walker, appeals.

Many years ago Jackson G. Combs, who was surveyor of Perry county, made a survey on Second creek in that county for Andrew Combs. Previous to making this survey, he had made a survey in the name of William V. Lusk for several hundred acres of land. A patent was issued to Lusk in the year 1845. The Lusk survey embraced and covered a portion of the land embraced in the survey made for Andrew Combs. It appears that Jackson G. Combs was the real owner of the survey made for William V. Lusk. On May 19, 1852, Jackson G. Combs and Andrew Combs entered into a written agreement, by which they fixed an agreed line between their tracts of land. This agreement was signed by both parties and recorded in the Perry county court. By the agreement it was stipulated that the line between the lands of the parties thereto should begin at the stepping rock at the head of Jerry Combs' Branch and run the divide to the head of Raccoon. Thereafter Jackson G. Combs died, and all his interest in the survey was sold to J. H. Combs and William V. Lusk. On May 4, 1887, William V. Lusk, J. H. Combs, and Andrew Combs entered into a written agreement fixing the division line between their lands. By that agreement it was stipulated that the division line was to run as follows: "Beginning at the top of the mountain at the head of Big Branch, running with the divide to the Big Piney Knob at the head of Winder Rock; thence down the top of the short brushy point to the conditional line between Andrew Combs and Shade Stacy on Second creek; thence running with the line to the top of the divide between the forks of Second creek." The evidence for appellees tends to show that by this agreement Andrew Combs was to get all the land in the William V. Lusk patent on Second creek, while J. H. Combs was to have all the land that Andrew Combs had patents for on the river side. John S. Combs had surveys for land adjoining the land of Andrew Combs. Andrew Combs and John S. Combs agreed on a division line, and the same was marked out about 17 years prior to the institution of this action. According to the testimony for appellees, by the agreement thus made between John S. Combs and Andrew Combs, John S. Combs was to have all the land Andrew Combs owned on Big Branch, and Andrew Combs was to have all the land John S. Combs owned on what was called "Deaden Branch." On February 17, 1891, John S. Combs and his wife, Rebecca Combs, conveyed the land in controversy to appellees, Jason Cornett and others, by deed duly recorded in the Perry county clerk's office. The evidence for appellees tends to show that Mille Cornett, the mother of appellees, and appellees, had lived upon the land in controversy for 20 or 25 years. The land was a part of the William V. Lusk patent and survey, and appellees obtained the same by the deed from John S. Combs and the several conditional line agreements made between the former owners thereof. The testimony for appellant was to the effect that he and Robert F. Fields obtained title to the land in question by deed from Josiah Combs and wife and William V. Lusk, dated September 22, 1893, and recorded in the Perry county clerk's office. The evidence for appellant also tends to show that the land in controversy was not affected by any of the agreed lines relied upon by appellees.

Appellant insists that the court erred in failing to give a peremptory instruction in his favor, on the ground that appellees failed to show any record title. While the various patents and surveys relied upon by appellees were not introduced, witnesses were permitted to testify to them without objection, and appellant, himself, relies for title showing this fact, and the further fact that they obtained the land by the division lines referred to, appellees connected their title with the Lusk patent, the existence of which seems to have been admitted by all the parties, including appellant. That being the case, the court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury to find for appellant.

It is next insisted that the court erred in admitting evidence of the oral agreement as to the division line between Andrew Combs and John S. Combs, and that, even if it was valid between the parties, it was not binding on William V. Lusk, who was not a party thereto, and was not binding on appellant, who had no notice thereof. It is well settled in this state that a verbal agreement, entered into between the owners of the adjoining tracts of land, fixing the division line between their lands, so as to avoid litigation, is valid and enforceable, and is not within the statute of frauds. Fields v. Sizemore, 105 S. W. 438; Grider v. Davenport, 60 S. W. 866. It has further been held that an agreement between adjoining owners, fixing their boundary, executed either by a marked line or by actual, adverse possession, carries notice to all the world of the fact. Warden v. Addington, 115 S. W. 241. While it is true that Lusk was not a party to the conditional line agreement between Andrew Combs and John S. Combs, yet he was a party to the conditional line agreement by which Andrew Combs got all of the land in the Lusk patent on Second creek. If by that agreement William V. Lusk parted with his title to the land on Second creek, he could not thereafter convey to appellant the land to which he had no title. Appellant obtained only that which Lusk owned at the time. It is immaterial that Lusk was not a party to the oral agreement between Andrew Combs and John S. Combs, for he had parted with his title to the land in question.

The issue in the case was properly submitted to the jury, and, while there is a sharp conflict in the evidence, we cannot say that the finding of the jury is flagrantly against the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

LASSING, J. The Straight Creek Coal & Coke Company is a corporation owning large bodies of coal and timber lands in Bell county, Ky. For more than 10 years it has operated a coal mine on a tract of its land on the waters of Straight creek, about $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles eastwardly from Pineville. It also has a coke plant and a sawmill there. In order to get its products to the market, it owns and operates a railroad switch running from its mines and coke plant to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad at Pineville. The corporation owns no rolling stock except a few logging cars on which it brings its logs to its sawmill. It rents an engine from the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company with which to do the necessary switching of coal cars on the yards at its mines. In 1905 the corporation desired to develop a large body of its land which lays some four miles northwardly of its coal and coke plant. In order to do this, it entered into a contract with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company to build this four miles of additional switch from its mining camp to the property to be developed; the expenditure to be repaid to the Louisville & Nashville by the coal company's paying five cents per ton for every ton transported over the new switch. To further secure the payment of the cost of building the switch, the coal company executed and delivered to the railroad company a mortgage upon its whole railroad switch, and the railroad company agreed to maintain the switch during the existence of the mortgage, and to haul the coal company's coal from its mines to Pineville free of charge. In order to secure the right of way for the new switch, the coal company entered into contracts with the various landowners through whose lands it was proposed to run, by which it was agreed, among other things, that the owner conveyed a right of way 50 feet wide to the coal company, and the latter agreed that the landowner might have the use of the switch for transporting his coal to market at a trackage charge of five cents per ton. Along the line of the proposed new switch, the Howards owned a tract of land, and they (except one infant to be hereafter noticed) conveyed to the appellee by deed a right of way through their land. The deed contains the agreement between the owners of the land and appellee concerning the trackage charges to be paid by the vendors to appellee for the use of its switch. So far as it is necessary to notice this contract, it may be stated that, as a consideration for the right of way, the owners of the land and their assignees were to have the use of the switch at a trackage charge of five cents per ton. One of the Howards was an infant, and, although his guardian offered to convey to appellee for the ward his interest in the right of way, it was thought better that a friendly condemnation suit should be instituted and carried to judgment in order to fully bind the infant; and this was done. With this exception the record shows that the appellee obtained its entire right of way for the new switch by contract.

During the pendency of the negotiations between appellee and the Howard heirs for the right of way, certain individuals, who afterwards organized themselves into a corporation called the Straight Creek Coal Mining Company, were negotiating with the Howards for a lease of their property for the purpose of opening and operating a coal mine thereon. This corporation is the appellant in this action. After the switch was built, the appellant opened its coal mine, and for some time shipped coal over the switch to Pineville under the contract made by appellee and the Howards, and during this period paid the trackage charges in accordance with the terms of the contract between appellee and appellant's lessors, the Howards. Afterwards, however, appellant refused to pay further trackage charges, asserting that appellee was a common carrier and was discriminating against it by not charging other coal miners on its switch anything for trackage, and that therefore it was not required to pay anything for the use of the switch. This position is based upon the following state of facts: In order to induce the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company to build the four miles of switch involved here, the appellee company found it necessary to insure the railroad company against loss by reason of its outlay in building the switch; and to do this it entered into a contract with the railroad that it would make certain developments of coal mines upon its land, which would insure a large haulage over the road and furnish to the railroad company a large quantity of freight from Pineville to the various coal markets of the country. In order to make good this contract with the railroad company, the appellee leased parts of its land, which was to be developed by the switch, to two coal mining companies, and agreed, among other things, that in consideration for the payment by its tenants of eight cents royalty on each ton of coal mined, it would haul, or cause to be hauled, the coal of its tenants to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad for the purpose of being transported to the market; it being especially agreed that the eight-cent royalty was to cover both payment for the coal and the transportation of it from the mine to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. So that the real questions here are: (1) Is the appellee, in the use of its switch, a common carrier? (2) If it be such, does the effect of the contract between it and its tenants result in an illegal discrimination in the trackage charges as between appellant and the tenants? It is not disputed by any of the parties to this record that, if appellee is a common carrier, it may not discriminate in trackage charges between its patrons, and that, if it allows any of its patrons to haul over its switch free, then it cannot charge trackage against any of its patrons; and therefore, if it be ascertained that appellee is a common carrier, the question at once arises: Is the contract with its tenants a discrimination in freight or trackage rates between them and the other patrons along its line?

Appellee, being a corporation engaged in the coal mining business, points out that under the Constitution it cannot be a common carrier; and in support of this position relies upon the provision of section 210 of that instrument, which is as follows: "No corporation engaged in the business of common carrier shall, directly or indirectly, own, manage, operate, or engage in any other business than that of a common carrier, or hold, own, lease or acquire, directly or indirectly, mines, factories or timber, except such as shall be necessary to carry on its business; and the General Assembly shall enact laws to give effect to the provisions of this section." It is obvious that the foregoing provision of the Constitution prohibits appellee, if it be a common carrier, from owning or operating a coal mine. Section 815 of the Statutes (Russell's St. § 5352) authorizes, among other things, the owner of a coal mine within three miles of any navigable stream or railroad to condemn a right of way, not to exceed 50 feet wide, for the purpose of building a switch or track in order to get his produce to market. We cannot presume that the Legislature intended by section 815 to authorize a coal mining corporation to violate the Constitution by becoming a common carrier, and therefore we must assume that when the owner of a coal mine or stone quarry, in order to develop his property, builds a railroad switch or track, he does not thereby become a "common carrier" within the meaning of section 210 of the Constitution. But under section 815 of the Statutes "the owner or operator of such road shall be, so far as they are applicable, governed and controlled by the laws relating to other railroads, and shall have the same rights and privileges granted to corporations owning and operating lines of railroad." Assuming, then, for the purposes of this case (but not deciding), that appellee built, or caused to be built, its railroad switch under the provisions of section 815 of the Statutes, does the contract with its tenants discriminate against appellant and the other independent mining companies along its lines who are charged five cents per ton trackage? We think not. In the first place, the very object and end of building the switch was to develop appellee's land, and for this purpose it obligated itself to lay out the round sum of about $90,000, and upon which it pays interest until the principal sum is repaid to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. Appellee's tenants represent appellee and stand upon the same plane in the use of its switch, if appellee so desires, as does the appellee itself. The leases which appellee made to its tenants are the instrumentality for the development of the land and rendering it productive. If the appellee cannot lease its land, and is unable to open and operate mines for itself, then the whole purpose of the switch is frustrated. We therefore conclude that, as the switch was built to develop appellee's land, it has a right to either ship, or permit to be shipped by its tenants, all products of the land over the switch, free of charge.

But even if we felt less certain of this view than we do, there is nothing in this record to show that appellant has been discriminated against in favor of appellee's tenants. The tenants pay to appellee eight cents per ton, which by contract covers both royalty and trackage or freight charges. It must be conceded that it has the right to make its royalty as low as it pleases, even to giving its tenant the coal for the mining of it; and, this being true, appellant cannot claim to be discriminated against as long as the tenant is required to pay as much as five cents per ton for both trackage and royalty. Upon this view appellant cannot say that it is discriminated against until the tenant is required to pay less than five cents per ton for the coal and its transportation to Pineville. It is not disputed that the independent miners along the line of appellee's switch are required to pay precisely the same trackage, five cents per ton; and the only claim of discrimination is in regard to the two mining companies which are the tenants of appellee. It is not disputed that appellee owns the switch in question; that is, it is not disputed that it has obligated itself to pay the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company for building it the round sum of $90,000, that it pays part of this principal sum annually, and pays legal interest on the unpaid balance until the whole of the principal sum is finally discharged.

One of the contentions of appellant is that appellee has leased its switch to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, and therefore that company is operating it as a part of its general system, and that it is discriminating against appellant. But the evidence in this case indubitably shows that, while the first written contract drawn up between the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and appellee used the word "lease," afterwards it was changed, and a new writing drawn, which showed the real contract between the parties to be that the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company had a mortgage upon the switch of appellee in order to more fully secure the repayment of the funds expended by the railroad in the building of the switch; and the evidence further shows that the railroad company puts in its empty cars on the switch for the various mineowners along its line, and when these are loaded hauls them over the switch to Pineville free of charge. In other words, it makes no charge to any of the mining companies for what it does in the operation of the switch. The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company has adopted Pineville as the general distributing point for all of the mines in that neighborhood, say, in a radius of 15 or 20 miles, and it has one common freight charge from that point to the various markets which it enforces against all the shippers alike. This is called in the record the "Pineville rate," and it is clearly established that this rate is enforced upon all shippers without any discrimination whatever.

The appellant also complains that the trackage rate of five cents per ton is extortionate. The evidence, however, does not bear out this contention. All of the evidence in the case bearing upon this point tends to show that five cents per ton is a reasonable rate under the circumstances. Moreover, it is the rate that was agreed upon by the lessors of the appellee company as a consideration for the grant of the right of way. This is fully set forth in the deed from the Howards to the appellee. The deed also contains a provision that the contract for the use of the appellee's switch redounds to the benefit of all assignees of the owners of the land. It was under this contract that appellant began the use of the switch, and it paid the charges in accordance with the terms of the contract for some time. We conclude therefore that, under the conditions now prevailing, five cents per ton is a reasonable trackage charge. If, after the appellee company has been repaid its whole outlay, it should be ascertained that five cents per ton is too great a charge, then, upon a proper showing, the rate may be reduced. The appellee, while not a common carrier, is regulated by the general laws concerning railroads in so far as they are applicable, and therefore the appellee cannot prevent persons along its line from using its switch upon the payment of a proper charge; nor can it make this charge so great as to be either prohibitive or extortionate. But as the rate of five cents was agreed upon in advance, and, acting upon this agreement, appellee has built the switch and incurred a large indebtedness therefor, those who use it cannot be heard to say that this charge is too great or extortionate until appellee has been reimbursed for its outlay. It has to repay the railroad company the original cost price and pay interest on the unpaid balance until the whole is paid. It must also pay all taxes that are assessed against the switch. And certainly it would be inequitable to permit those along the line, who have contributed nothing to the building of the switch, who have no money invested in it, and who do not have to keep it in repair, to use it free of charge. This position would put the owner of the switch in a worse position towards its use than a stranger, because, if the stranger may use the switch without charge as freely as the owner, and pay nothing for the cost of building it, or taxes or repairs, this position is infinitely preferable to that of the owner. We conclude therefore: That the payment of the trackage charges is a condition precedent to the use of the switch; that the amount of five cents per ton, under present conditions, is not too great; and that appellant must pay it before it has a right to use appellee's property.

None of the cases cited by appellant are apposite to the question in hand. The appellee does not dispute that, if it is a common carrier, it may not discriminate between its patrons, and therefore it is not necessary to discuss any of the numerous cases cited to show that common carriers cannot discriminate in favor of, or against, any of those who ship over their lines. The case of Bedford Stone Co. v. Oman, 115 Ky. 369, 73 S. W. 1038, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 2274, did not involve the question we have here. There the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, under the evidence, owned the switch, and had absolute control of it as a part of its general system, and it was refusing to permit Oman to ship stone over the switch at any rate; in other words, it was refusing to serve him as a common carrier at all. And it was there held that the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, while it had such control and ownership of the switch, could not refuse to haul Oman's freight. That is not the question here. The Louisville & Nashville Railroad hauls the freight of appellant from the mine to Pineville without any charge to it, and from Pineville to the market it charges appellant the same rate that it charges all other shippers to the same place under the same conditions. The question is not between appellant and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, but between appellant and the Straight Creek Coal & Coke Company, the owner of the switch; that company being perfectly willing for appellant to use its switch, but asking from it a fair remuneration for its use. The Oman Case is the exact opposite of the case at bar. The case of Greasy Creek Co. v. Jelkico Co., 116 S. W. 1189, involved the constitutionality of section 815 of the Kentucky Statutes, which authorizes the condemnation of private property for coal switches. There was no question of freight rates involved or discussed. All that was decided there was that switches built under section 815 are governed by the railroad law in so far as it is applicable. The court said nothing in that case which would intimate that one mining company might use the switch of another mining company without paying a fair remuneration for its use.

There was no dispute between appellant and appellee of the proper amount which the latter should receive, if it had a right to recover at all; in other words, the number of tons shipped were not disputed, and applying the trackage charge of five cents for each ton would show the proper amount of recovery.

Upon the trial of the case before the circuit judge, he decided the issues herein involved in favor of the appellee, and gave judgment for the sum of $2,247.70, and this judgment is affirmed, both as to the Straight Creek Coal & Coke Company and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company.

On the cross-appeal brought by plaintiff, complaint is made that the court erred in failing to allow interest on its claim, at least from the date of the filing of the suit; plaintiff's suit being upon an open, running account. It was clearly within the discretion of the chancellor to allow interest or not; but, inasmuch as no claim for interest was made in the pleadings by plaintiff, it is in no position to complain that none was allowed, and for this reason the judgment is affirmed on the cross-appeal.

1. TAXATION (§ 40*)—ENFORCEMENT—UNIFORMITY.

Ky. St. 1909, § 2998 (Russell's St. § 947), providing that uncollected tax bills shall be deemed a debt and may be enforced as such, except those against persons under disability, by the remedies given for the recovery of debt, and that all unpaid tax bills shall draw a specified rate of interest, etc., exempts infants, married women, and lunatics from the method of procedure prescribed for the collection of unpaid tax bills, but makes all tax bills liable to the specified rate of interest, and is not invalid as making any difference in the levy of taxes, and the fact that it authorizes a personal judgment against an adult under no disability does not render the act unconstitutional.

2. USURY (§ 16*)—DELINQUENT TAXES—PENALTY—VALIDITY—USURY.

Ky. Action by the City of Louisville against William Specht. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Harrison & Harrison, for appellant. Clayton B. Blakey and Joseph S. Lawton, for appellee.

LASSING, J. This litigation calls in question the constitutionality of section 2998, Ky. St. 1909 (Russell's St. § 947). Its validity is assailed upon two grounds: First, that it affects only adult persons and does not apply to the property of infants, persons under the disability of coverture, or insane persons; and, second, because the rate of interest charged on tax bills is usurious and in violation of sections 2218 and 2219, Ky. St. (Russell's St. §§ 1814, 1815). Section 2998 of the Statutes, which is as follows: "All tax bills, uncollected in whole or in part, and which remain in the hands of the tax receiver on the first day of May succeeding the date on which they were listed with him for collection against any person owning property in his own right, shall be deemed a debt from such person to said city arising as by contract and may be enforced as such (except those against the persons under the disability of infancy, coverture or unsound mind) by all remedies given for the recovery of debt in any court of this commonwealth otherwise competent for that purpose; and those bills assessed against an administrator, executor or trustee shall be a charge against the whole succession of trust estates and may be in either case enforced accordingly, this being in addition to the other remedies hereinafter given. All tax bills remaining unpaid on the first day of May, succeeding the date on which they were listed with the tax receiver for collection shall bear interest at the rate of one-half of one per cent. for every month, or fraction of a month, from date until the first day of the next succeeding May, and thereafter shall bear interest at the rate of one per cent. for every month, or fraction of a month, until paid"—was, prior to its adoption in 1906, section 2998 of the Kentucky Statutes of 1903, and from a comparison of the two acts it will be observed that, so far as the first objection raised by appellant is concerned, the acts are identical, in that in each act there is an express provision that the tax owing by the property owner shall be deemed a debt compotent for that purpose. There is an express provision in each act exempting from this method of procedure infants, married women, and lunatics. This exemption, however, is in their favor merely as to the method of procedure; whereas, the tax and interest charged for delay in its payment are the same against all property, whether owned by adults or infants, women, married or single, and persons sane or insane. The statute makes no difference whatever in the levy of taxes or the rate of interest that shall be charged. The only difference is that a personal judgment may be taken against an adult under no disability; whereas, infants and persons under disability can, under the express provisions and terms of the act, have no personal judgment rendered against them, and the remedy must be a proceeding against the property itself. There is no provision that the property of an infant, or a married woman, or insane person should not be held liable to the payment of the same taxes and rate of interest as that of an adult.

In the cases of Walston v. City of Louisville, 66 S. W. 385, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 1852, and Woolley v. City of Louisville, 114 Ky. 556, 71 S. W. 893, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1357, this court passed upon the constitutionality of this act prior to its amendment in 1906, and held it to be constitutional, and, so far as the first objection raised by appellant is concerned, the acts are identical. No complaint can justly be made because the Legislature saw fit to define a different mode of procedure in enforcing the payment of tax claims against the property of infants and persons under disability from that which should be applied in enforcing similar claims against adults under no disability, so long as the tax sought to be collected against each is the same; and the act in question is undoubtedly so drawn as to apply equally to all property, for, in its concluding sentence, we find the following: "All tax bills remaining unpaid on the first day of May, succeeding the date on which they were listed with the tax receiver for collection shall bear interest at the rate of one-half of one per cent. for every month, or fraction of a month, from date until the first day of the next succeeding May, and thereafter shall bear interest at the rate of one per cent. for every month, or fraction of a month, until paid." This is the only portion of said act which fixes the rate of interest that shall be paid, and it will be observed that it applies alike to all property without exception. We therefore conclude that the objection raised by appellant to the validity of this act, on the ground that it is not uniform in its application, is not well taken.

collection of a rate of interest thereon in excess of 6 per cent., which by section 2218 of the statutes is established as the legal rate, it is in direct violation of section 2219, which provides that all contracts and assurances made for the loan or forbearance of money or other thing of value at a greater rate than the legal rate of interest, as provided for by section 2218, shall be void as to the excess of the legal rate. The trouble with this argument is that a tax is neither a contract nor a loan nor a forbearance of money in the sense in which these terms are used in the statute referred to. It remains a tax, and it is treated as a debt merely for the purpose of defining its mode of collection. The interest charge is upon taxes remaining unpaid at a designated date and is in the nature of a penalty for their nonpayment, and it has frequently been held that it is a matter of legislative discretion as to what penalty shall be imposed by the Legislature for the nonpayment of taxes, and this legislative will has never been disturbed or interfered with so long as the penalty has not been fixed at a figure that could be considered unreasonable, unjust, or confiscatory. In the two cases above referred to, of Walston v. City of Louisville, and Woolley v. City of Louisville, it was expressly held that the collection of an interest charge upon overdue taxes was in the nature of a penalty. It is true that the act in force when passed upon in those cases did not authorize the imposition and collection of 12 per cent. interest, but it did authorize the imposition and collection of interest at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent. for each month, or fractional part thereof, that the tax remained unpaid, which was a higher rate than authorized by section 2218, and the principle contended for by appellant in this case would therefore apply with equal force in those cases. The court having upheld the validity of the act, even though it authorized an interest charge in excess of 6 per cent., settled the principle for which the city here contends, to wit, that the imposition of an interest charge on overdue taxes is in the nature of a penalty, imposed upon the delinquent taxpayer because of his delinquency, and, being a penalty, the amount thereof is clearly a matter of legislative discretion. Nor does the fact that the act authorizes the imposition and collection of 12 per cent. interest on taxes remaining unpaid at a certain day in cities of the first class justify the charge that the act is special legislation, for the Constitution, by express provision, requires that the General Assembly shall assign the various cities and towns in the state to the classes in which they properly belong. For governmental purposes, the organization the designated class, they have uniformly been held to be general in their application. Louisville is a city of the first class, and is the only city in that class in this commonwealth. Hence, while all laws governing cities of the first class must necessarily be applicable to the city of Louisville alone, they are nevertheless general laws, and this court has so recognized and held in the case of Walston v. City of Louisville, supra.

In framing these general laws for the regulation and government of the various classes into which the cities and towns of the state are divided, the members of the General Assembly realized that it was necessary to impose upon the taxpayer a burden in excess of the legal rate of interest, in order to enforce the speedy payment by the taxpayer of the taxes, for it can readily be seen that, if only the legal rate of interest were imposed upon the taxpayer for the nonpayment of his taxes when due, it would merely have the effect of making the city a lender of money to the various taxpayers until such time as suited their convenience to pay, and the city would be without means to carry on the various departments of its government. Hence there is incorporated in the charters of the cities of the various classes a provision whereby the taxpayer is called upon to pay an interest charge in the nature of a penalty upon all taxes that remain due and unpaid after a given period. This interest charge varies. In cities of some classes it is more, while in others it is less, than in cities of the first class; but, being uniform in each class, it meets the requirements of the Constitution calling for uniformity.

The only appreciable difference between the act here complained of and the act which it amended and superseded is that in the act under consideration the rate of interest for the second year's delinquency is increased from one-half of 1 per cent. for each month, or fractional part thereof, that the tax remains unpaid, to 1 per cent. This change was found to be absolutely necessary in order to enable the city to collect its revenue. So long as the penalty for failure to pay amounted to but little more than the rate at which money could be borrowed, the taxpayer did not pay his taxes, and the city was without means necessary to enable it to run its government. It became apparent that a more severe penalty would have to be imposed in order to speedily collect the taxes, and hence the increase in the rate of the interest charge; but this increase in rate called into play the application of no new principle, for the old rate was in excess of the legal rate, and the only complaint is that this present rate is usurious, not that it is

Where plaintiff was injured while riding in a freight car, he assumed the risks incident to the movement of such trains carefully managed, including the necessary bumping and coupling, but did not assume the risk of any unnecessary bumping, particularly when resulting from the negligence of train operatives; the carrier being required to exercise the utmost care consistent with the prudent ordinary operation of such trains.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Warren County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Eldon L. Campbell against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Benjamin D. Warfield, and Sims, Du Bose & Rodes, for appellant. Greene, Van Winkle & Schoolfield, B. F. Proctor, and G. H. Herdman, for appellee.

O'REAR, J. Appellee was taken by appellant as a passenger on one of its freight trains from Louisville to Bowling Green. The former was accompanying a car load of horses, and was riding in the freight car containing them. After the horses were loaded, and just before the car was attached to the remainder of the train with which it was to be conveyed, appellee went into the car, which was the place set apart to him by appellant. His presence and purpose were known to appellant's servants who were engaged in switching the car. Appellee claims that, whilst he was so situated, the switch engine and other cars of appellant were backed violently and negligently against the car in which he was, throwing him down, breaking and spraining his ankle. He brought this suit for the damage done him.

The evidence shows the manner of the movement of the cars, as well as appellee's position. While it is conflicting, appellee testifying that the concussion was violent and unusual, and appellant's servants in charge of the switching testifying to the contrary, it was clearly a question for the jury whether the claim of the plaintiff was sustained. The verdict was for the plaintiff, and his damages were assessed at $1,125, $125 of which was for his medical bill, the amount and value of which was undisputed in the evidence. That appellee was injured in his ankle is not questioned. The extent of the injury was controverted in the evidence. It was appellant's theory that the injury was sustained by appellee while crossing the railroad yard in getting to the car, and from causes undisclosed but disconnected with any act of the railroad company. The weight of the testimony, as it appears to us, and doubtless appeared also to the jury, is that the injury was inflicted as the result of the bumping of the cars, and while appellee was in the car. Having taken appellee as a passenger on its freight train, and suffering him to ride in the freight car with the horses, appellant was bound as a carrier of passengers to the exercise of the utmost care and skill consistent with the prudent, ordinary operation of such freight trains. On the other hand, appellee assumed the risks incident to the movement of such trains, carefully and prudently managed, including the jerking, bumping and coupling of its cars and locomotives; but unusual and unnecessary bumping and jolting were not assumed by the passenger as risks, particularly when they were the result of the negligence of the train operatives. These views were fairly submitted to the jury in the court's instructions.

The contention made in appellant's brief that its theory of the cause of the injury was not submitted to the jury is not well taken. Although the evidence in appellant's behalf in that respect was meager, the court did submit the question to the jury. The instruction, not contained in the original bill of exceptions as brought up, was identified in a supplemental bill made by the court, and which has been filed in an additional transcript.

Another ground for reversal urged by appellant is that the court erred in admitting life tables in evidence in plaintiff's behalf as tending to show the probable duration of his life, or expectancy. It is argued that this evidence was inadmissible, upon the theory that appellee's injury was curable, and that the impairment of his money-earning capacity was temporary. The evidence for the plaintiff conduced to show, and, if believed, did establish, that his injury was one that permanently crippled and disabled him; that while it had improved, and would probably continue to improve, the effect of it, as weakening the ankle and reducing his strength and capacity to labor, was permanent. The medical men introduced as witnesses for the defendant took a less serious view of the matter; but the evidence on that point, about equally balanced, left the question for the determination of the jury, who in their verdict seem to have taken rather a middle ground. The relevancy of the life tables depended upon the nature of the plaintiff's claim, and the evidence in support of it as to the permanency of his impairment. We perceive no reason why in such cases life tables are not relevant. It is admitted in argument by appellant that in case of death, in suit to recover damages for the destruction of the power of the decedent to earn money, such evidence is admissible, under the authorities. So is it, we think, when the impairment produced by the injury is permanent. The question for the jury is: What damage has the plaintiff sustained by reason of the injury? The measure is, rather one element of the measure is, the extent to which the plaintiff's money-earning capacity has been reduced. If the reduction is permanent, then what length of time will it probably affect the plaintiff is a relevant inquiry. A very old person similarly injured would not, probably, sustain the same pecuniary loss as a young man would. The probable duration of the life of the injured person, if shown, enables the jury to more justly estimate the loss inflicted.

The remaining ground urged for reversal is that the verdict is grossly excessive. Even if the injury is curable, the evidence shows that it would probably be a long time before it would be accomplished. The loss or reduction of the plaintiff's earning capacity for even a year or so, coupled with the great pain and suffering caused by such an injury—one of the most painful—are enough to redeem a verdict for $1,000 from being classed as so excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. Indeed, we cannot say that it is excessive at all.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. CITY OF LOUISVILLE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1195*)—FORMER APPEAL—OPINION—LAW OF THE CASE.

Where, on a prior appeal of a proceeding for the assessment of damages to a railroad company for the construction of a street over its right of way, the Supreme Court directed that the jury be instructed to allow the difference between the value to the railroad company of the right to the exclusive use of the land occupied by the street and the value after the city acquired a crossing, such decision constituted the law of the case, and the court did not therefore err in refusing to charge on new trial that the jury should award such sum as would, at 6 per cent. interest, produce an income sufficient to represent the increased cost to the railroad company of maintaining its tracks, cross-ties, and roadbed directly resulting from the establishment of the crossing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4661-4665; Dec. Dig. § 1195.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 128*)—CROSSING OVER RAILROAD—DAMAGES.

In proceedings by a city to acquire a crossing over a railroad right of way, additional cost of maintenance of the railroad after the construction of the street was a proper element in determining the damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 351; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 205*)—STREET CROSSING OVER RAILROAD—CONDEMNATION—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

Where, in proceedings to acquire a street crossing over a railroad's right of way, a witness testified that the damage to the railroad company would be only nominal, a verdict adopting such view was not contrary to the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 544; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 203*)—DAMAGES—NATURE OF USE—EVIDENCE.

Where, in a proceeding by a city to condemn a street crossing over railroad right of way, there was no proof that the railroad company would ever desire to lay a third track over the crossing, evidence that the grade established for the street would prevent such use, and that the damage on that account would be from $15,000 to $25,000, was properly rejected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 542; Dec. Dig. § 203.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 96*)—CROSSINGS—STREET GRADE—CHANGE.

Where the grade established by a street laid out over a railroad track would prevent the use of the ground by the railroad company for a third track, it would be the duty of the city to change the grade so as to make it possible for the railroad company to lay an additional track or tracks whenever it became reasonably necessary to do so for the accommodation of its business.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

"Not to be officially reported."

Proceeding by the City of Louisville against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company to obtain a street crossing over defendant's right of way. From a judgment assessing nominal damages in favor of defendant railroad company, it appeals. Affirmed.

Benjamin D. Warfield and Helm & Helm, for appellant. E. C. Underwood and Clayton B. Blakey, for appellee.

CLAY, C. This is the second appeal of this case. The opinion on the former appeal may be found in 114 S. W. 743. In remanding the case for a new trial, this court used the following language: "The only instruction that should be given is one saying to the jury that they must find for the railroad company such a sum as will amount to the difference between the value to the railroad company of the right to the exclusive use of the land occupied by the street for the purpose for which it was being used, and the value after the city acquires the privilege of participating in such use by the opening of the street across it, and the evidence should be confined to this point." Upon the return of the case, the trial court instructed the jury as directed in our former opinion, and a verdict was returned awarding appellant damages in the sum of $1. From the judgment based thereon, this appeal is prosecuted.

The court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury to award appellant such sum as would, at 6 per cent. interest per annum, produce an income sufficient to represent the increased cost to appellant of maintaining its tracks, cross-ties, and roadbed, directly resulting from the establishment of the street over them. The former opinion directed that but one instruction be given. That opinion is the law of the case. Evidence tending to show that after the construction of the street it would cost more to maintain the tracks was permitted to go to the jury. Such evidence bore upon the question submitted in the instruction given. The jury had the right to consider it, and doubtless did consider it in reaching a verdict.

Nor can we say that the verdict is flagrantly against the evidence. One witness testified that by reason of the extension of the street it would cost $40 more per year to maintain the tracks. Another witness testified that the difference in the value of the use would be $200. He arrived at this conclusion, however, by saying that the land was worth $2,000 per acre, and that the proposed street would occupy one-tenth of an acre, which was worth $200. According to this method of calculation, this witness made the diminution in the value of the use of the land equal to the value of the land itself. Another witness testified that the damages would be only nominal. This is the view adopted by the jury. They evidently believed that the use of the land would be none the less valuable because of the street. The court refused to permit appellant's witnesses to testify that the grade established for the street would prevent the use of the ground by appellant for a third track, and that the damage on this account would be from $15,000 to $25,000. The court did not err in excluding this testimony. The avowals did not show a present necessity for a third track and a fixed purpose to lay such a track. The railroad company might never desire to use the strip for a third track. That being the case, there would be no diminution in the value of the use of the land because the laying of a third track was rendered impossible by the grade adopted for the street. It would not be fair to the city to require it to respond in damages for an injury which, as a matter of fact, might never take place. Inasmuch, however, as the ground belongs to appellant and was acquired for railroad purposes, and its right to use it for its reasonable necessities is superior to the right of appellee, we conclude that, if at any time it becomes reasonably necessary for appellant to lay an additional track or tracks for the accommodation of its business, and this is rendered impossible by the grade established for the street, it will then be the duty of the city to change the grade of the street so as to render it possible for the railroad company to make such reasonable use of the ground in question as could have been made prior to the construction of the street. In this way the rights of the railroad company will be fully protected.

Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH v. EWING.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1909.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 71*)—LICENSES—MERCHANTS—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, on application for a retail liquor license, held to show, notwithstanding applicant's testimony to the contrary, that he was not in good faith a merchant, and that he had assumed the business for the purpose of retailing liquor; so that under Ky. St. 1903, § 4205 (Russell's St. § 6147), authorizing such a license only on satisfactory evidence to the contrary, the county court did not exercise reasonable discretion in granting him a license.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 71, 72; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Warren County.

"To be officially reported."

Clarence Ewing applied for a liquor license, and, from a judgment of the Circuit Court affirming the judgment of the County Court in granting the license, the Commonwealth appeals. Reversed, with directions.

T. W. Thomas, W. B. Gains, Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

CARROLL, J. This appeal is prosecuted by the commonwealth from a judgment of the Warren circuit court affirming a judgment of the county court granting Ewing a merchant's license to sell liquors under section 4205 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 6147), reading, in part, as follows: "License to merchants, druggists or distillers shall be granted only upon satisfactory evidence that the applicant is in good faith a merchant, druggist or a distiller and that the applicant has not assumed the name or the business for the purpose of retailing liquors." We are asked to reverse the judgment upon the ground that Ewing was not, at the time he applied for license, a merchant in good faith, and that he assumed the business of being a merchant for the purpose of obtaining a license to retail liquors.

The only evidence in the record is that of Ewing, and two other witnesses who testified that they had never heard anything against his moral character. From Ewing's testimony we gather the following facts: Delafield precinct, in Warren county, adjoins the city of Bowling Green, and is the only precinct in the county in which license to sell liquors may be granted. The remainder of the county, including the city of Bowling Green, has voted against the sale of liquor. In this precinct a short distance from the city there is a place called the "boat landing" on Barren river, and in the immediate neighborhood of this boat landing there are several groceries and a few people. In the entire precinct there are 230 voters. Ewing some time in February, 1909, leased a lot 40x50 feet near the boat landing for a term of one year with the privilege of renewing the lease. On this lot he put up, at a cost of some $300, a plain room 20x40 feet, and on March 1, 1909, opened a grocery store in it with a stock of goods worth about $250. Previous to this time he had never engaged in the grocery or any mercantile business. His principal occupation seems to have been clerking in places where whisky was sold. On March 1st there were four other grocery stores in the immediate neighborhood of Ewing's place, and all of them had license to sell liquor under the statute supra. Twelve days after he opened his grocery, he put up notices that he would apply for license, and on the 22d of March made the application. In the course of his examination, he said that he was a merchant in good faith and did not engage in the business for the purpose of getting license to sell liquor; but his statement is not corroborated by any other fact or circumstance in the record. On the contrary, we should say that it appears at first blush that his sole purpose in opening the grocery was to engage in the sale of liquor, and that it affirmatively appears that Ewing was not a merchant in good faith, and that he had assumed the name and the business for the purpose of retailing liquors. There is no evidence that the place had any business attractions whatever for a person who wished to engage only in the sale of merchandise, and it is inconceivable that a person of ordinary intelligence, as we assume Ewing to be, should attempt to establish himself in the grocery business at this point unless his intention was to use his pretense of a grocery for the purpose of getting license to engage in the more profitable business of selling whisky. That he was not a merchant in good faith, and that he did assume the business as a mere subterfuge behind which to hide his real purpose, is apparent in almost every line of his evidence. We are not concluded by his statement that he was a merchant in good faith, nor are we estopped by it from looking into the truth of the matter as it appears in the record. Courts, in the interest of justice and truth, may, and often do, look beneath the surface of things to discover the real nature of the transaction under investigation, and are frequently justified in putting aside as unworthy of serious consideration statements which, although apparently candid, are really used as mere forms of expression to bring the actor within the protecting circle of some rule of law or statutory phrase. In the enactment of this statute, the Legislature was careful to provide not only that the applicant for license should establish by satisfactory evidence that he was a merchant in good faith, but also that he had not assumed the name or the business of a merchant for the purpose of obtaining license. A person may be a merchant in good faith in the sense that he is engaged in the business at a place and under circumstances indicating his intention to follow it as a business; but proof of this fact alone would not entitle him to license to sell liquors. He must, in addition, show that he did not engage in the business for the purpose of obtaining license. It was the legislative purpose that the evidence in support of both these propositions should be clear and convincing, and, when a person applies for license to sell liquor, the question of his good faith and intent should be carefully inquired into in order that the statute may not be used as an instrument to enable persons not bona fide merchants to sell liquor. It is manifest that, in cases like this, no rule of general fitness can be laid down by which the lower court may be guided in granting or refusing license. Each application must stand or fall on the evidence introduced concerning it; but it may safely be said that in every case the previous occupation, as well as reputation of the applicant, the length of time he has been engaged in the business at the place where he applies for license, the value of his stock of goods, the probability of it being a good location from a business standpoint, the volume of business done by him, the number of people in the neighborhood, and its proximity to other similar places of business, are matters pertinent to be inquired into and considered by the court in arriving at a conclusion, and the burden is upon the applicant to establish that he comes within the class to whom license may be granted.

In disposing of this case we have not overlooked or underestimated the weight that should properly be given to the judgment of the court granting the license. In more than one like case we have held that the discretion vested in tribunals authorized to grant license will not be interfered with unless it has been abused, or, in other words, not reasonably exercised. And this well-settled practice we have no disposition to modify or depart from; but, in the case before us, we feel obliged to say that in our opinion the county court did not exercise a reasonable discretion in granting Ewing license.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed, with directions to proceed in conformity with this opinion.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH-CABLE CO. v. LOUISVILLE COTTON OIL CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 30, 1909.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 6*)—CONTENTS.

The office of a bill of exceptions is to bring before the court the record, authenticated by the trial judge, of things that transpired in the trial court, that do not appear on the record book of the trial court, and it is not necessary to put in the bill of exceptions the pleadings, orders of court, or any motion or paper that is mentioned in the orders of court which have been offered or filed as a part of the record, though it may not be copied on the record book, as the fact that it is there mentioned is sufficient identification to make it a part of the record.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 783, 784.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 523*)—RECORD—CONTENTS—DEPOSITIONS.

The bill of exceptions spoke of depositions for plaintiff, after naming the witnesses who gave evidence by deposition, and recited that the depositions would follow immediately after the bill of exceptions in the clerk's transcript, and the depositions so followed. As to the depositions for defendant, the bill recited that the depositions of the witnesses named were set out in the transcript of the evidence, which was not true; but they were copied by the clerk in his record. The stenographer's transcript of the evidence, approved by the trial judge, stated that the depositions of the designated witnesses were read. Held, that the depositions were in the record on appeal and could be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2372; Dec. Dig. § 523.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 523*)—RECORD—CONTENTS—DEPOSITIONS.

While depositions filed with the clerk should be copied in the record he makes for the court on appeal, and should not be embodied in the transcript made by the official stenographer, under Ky. St. § 4639 (Russell's St. § 3110), which contemplates that the stenographer shall only take notes of and make a transcript of the oral testimony, yet where the depositions appear in the stenographer's transcript, signed by the judge, or where the bill of exceptions shows that the depositions of named witnesses were read as evidence, and they are copied by the clerk in the record made out by him, or where the stenographer's transcript shows that the depositions of named witnesses were read, and they are copied by the clerk in the record, the depositions will be considered as a part of the record.

7. SALES (§ 23*)—MUTUAL AGREEMENTS.

Where an offer was to buy 10 tanks of bleachable prime summer oil at 27 cents, and the acceptance added the words, "Memphis Exchange rules and arbitration," and there was evidence that the quoted words did not impose any condition not contemplated by both parties, there was a binding contract.

8. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*)—DELAY IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGES—DAMAGES—KNOWLEDGE OF PROBABLE CONSEQUENCES.

A telegraph company is not liable for damages for negligent delay in the delivery of a message that it could not reasonably know or contemplate, when it received the message, would follow from its failure to transmit and deliver with reasonable diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 65; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

9. DAMAGES (§ 23*)—CONTRACTS—SPECIAL DAMAGES.

Parties contracting contemplate that a failure to perform it will result in some damage to the party not in default; but special damages are not recoverable unless they were within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made, or the defaulting party had notice that such damages would result from its breach.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 58, 62; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

10. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*)—NEGLIGENT DELAY IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGES—SPECIAL DAMAGES—KNOWLEDGE OF CONSEQUENCES OF DELAY.

Where a message, partly in cipher, furnished to a person of ordinary prudence notice that it was important and its prompt delivery essential, or where the telegraph company or its operator receiving it had notice of the importance of the message, special damages are recoverable for the failure to promptly deliver it; but where the message does not convey any information of its importance, and the company or its operator receiving it has no information of its importance, only the price paid for sending the message may be recovered for negligent delay in the delivery of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 65; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

ligent delay in delivery of a message, denied that it had notice that the message was important and its prompt delivery essential, and the evidence leaves the matter in doubt, the question is for the jury.

12. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*)—NEGLIGENT DELAY IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGE—SPECIAL DAMAGES—KNOWLEDGE OF CONSEQUENCES OF DELAY.

Where a telegraph company, or its operator receiving a message, had notice from the sender, obtained directly, with reference to the message, or received in the course of business dealings with him, or information from other sources, of the importance of the message, the company is liable for special damages, reasonably following as a consequence of its negligent delay in delivering the message, though the message is wholly unintelligible to the operator.

Nunn, C. J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

"To be officially reported."

Action by the Louisville Cotton Oil Company against the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Lawrence S. Leopold, Richard & Ronald, and Wm. W. Cook, for appellant. Henry W. Sanders and Morton K. Yonts, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. At 4:16 p. m. on September 11, 1905, R. D. Winship & Co., a firm of brokers in Chicago, sent the following telegram to the Louisville Cotton Oil Company: "Accclimate can sell handsome Bleachable fasten bastille Chicago September Answer." This cipher telegram, when translated, means: "On firm offer can sell 10 tank cars Bleachable prime summer yellow oil 27c. Chicago September Answer." At 4:40 p. m. on the same day, the Louisville Cotton Oil Company answered this telegram in the following message: "Absurdity Bastille Car Chicago handsome Bleachable Fasten Memphis Exchange rules and arbitration Obedient buyers name"—which, when translated, means: "Telegram received and offer accepted 27 cents Chicago 10 tank cars Bleachable prime summer yellow Memphis Exchange rules and arbitration. On receipt of this please telegraph buyers name." This telegram was received at the Chicago office of the cable company at 4:55 p. m., and sent by a messenger boy to the office of Winship & Co. The boy, finding the office closed, left the telegram under the door, where it was found by Winship & Co. the next morning, when they reached their office. The failure on the part of Win-ship & Co. to receive the telegram on the day it was sent resulted in the cancellation of the order, as the offer contained in the telegram of Winship & Co. was good only if accepted by the cotton oil company on September 11th, and notice of such acceptance delivered to Winship & Co. on that day. Thereupon the cotton oil company brought this suit for damages against the cable company, charging that by its negligence in failing to deliver the telegram it lost the sale of the oil, and that on the following day the market price of such oil declined, and the highest price thereafter obtainable was 24 cents per gallon, at which the oil was sold, making a loss to the cotton oil company of $1,875. In its answer the cable company set up: (1) That the telegram it failed to deliver was a cipher message, the meaning of which was unknown to it, and the damages claimed by the cotton oil company were not, and could not reasonably have been, contemplated by it at the time it received the telegram for transmission as the probable result of a failure to deliver it; (2) that the telegram sent by the cotton oil company was not an acceptance of the offer made in the telegram of Winship & Co., and therefore no contract would have been completed between the parties if the telegram had been received by Winship & Co. The trial before a jury resulted in a verdict in favor of the cotton oil company for $1,500.

Before coming to the merits of the case, we will dispose of a question of practice raised by counsel for the cotton oil company, who insists that we cannot consider the evidence in the case because all of it is not embraced in a properly certified bill of exceptions. On the trial of the case several witnesses testified orally in behalf of each of the parties, and there was read the depositions of R. D. Winship, Clarence Wimpenny, L. C. Doggett, W. E. Griffith, George J. Harding, and Charles A. Stearns. In the official stenographer's transcript of the evidence, attested by the stenographer and examined and approved by the trial judge, is contained the evidence of all the witnesses who testified in person, and also a statement that the depositions of certain witnesses, naming them, were read in evidence to the jury. The depositions are not included in the stenographer's transcript of the evidence, but are found in the record made by the clerk. In the bill of exceptions, examined and approved by the trial judge, there appears the following: "The plaintiff introduced as evidence in its behalf John G. Cafferty, Charles B. Finck, Charles A. Ludwig, and read in evidence the depositions of R. D. Winship, Clarence Wimpenny, and L. C. Doggett, as shown by said transcript of evidence. Said depositions will follow immediately after this bill of exceptions in this transcript."
* * * The defendant introduced L. R. James, F. J. Welsh, Ruby Melchels, and J. S. Wright, and read to the jury the depositions of W. E. Griffith, George J. Harding, and Charles A. Stearns; all of which is fully set out in said transcript of evidence."

Reading together the bill of exceptions, incorporated in the record made by the clerk, and the stenographer's official transcript of the evidence, it is shown beyond question that the depositions of the persons named were read in evidence; but the point is made that, as the evidence of the witnesses who testified by deposition does not appear in the bill of exceptions or in the transcript of the evidence, it cannot be considered, and, this being so, we must presume that the omitted evidence supported the averments of the petition and was sufficient to sustain the verdict. The sole purpose and office of a bill of exceptions is to bring before this court a record authenticated by the trial judge of things that transpired in the trial court that do not appear on the record book of the trial court. It is not necessary to put in the bill of exceptions the pleadings, orders of court, or any motion or paper that is mentioned in the orders of court as having been offered or filed as a part of the record, although it may not be copied on the record book, as the fact that it is there mentioned is sufficient evidence of its identification to make it a part of the record for this court when copied by the clerk accompanied by his certificate.

Under the old system, and before the advent of the official stenographer, it was the practice for attorneys to write out a bill of exceptions containing the substance of what the witnesses said and the exceptions and objections thereto, and when any deposition, instruments of writing, or record was introduced, to recite in the bill, in substance, that the plaintiff (or defendant, as the case may be) read in evidence a deed from A. to B., or the deposition of H., followed by the words "here insert," which was a direction to the clerk to insert the document or deposition at that place when he came to prepare a transcript for this court. And so, in reference to instructions, the bill to illustrate would usually read: The plaintiff offered and the court gave instruction A, reading as follows, "here insert." Occasionally a bill is made up in this way now, although, with few exceptions, the oral evidence is taken down by the official stenographer, who makes out a transcript for use in this court as provided in section 4639 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 3110). Under the new practice that has come into vogue with the official stenographer, it occasionally happens that the depositions read on the trial will appear in the transcript made out by the stenographer, and also in the record made out by the clerk, and often the depositions will appear in the stenographer's transcript of the evidence and not in the record made out by the clerk, and sometimes in the record and not in the transcript of the evidence. Indeed, pear, so that it is authenticated by the trial judge as having been read on the trial, as the Civil Code of Practice provides, in section 335, that "no particular form of exception or bill of exceptions is required."

The bill of exceptions in this case, in speaking of the depositions for the cotton oil company, after naming the witnesses who gave evidence by deposition, recites that "the depositions will follow immediately after this bill of exceptions in the clerk's transcript," and they do. In reference to the depositions read in behalf of the cable company, it recites that the depositions of the witnesses in its behalf, naming them, are set out in the transcript of the evidence; but they are not, although they are copied by the clerk in his record. It thus appears from the stenographer's transcript, signed by the judge, as well as from the bill of exceptions, signed by the judge, that the depositions were read, and the mere fact that they do not happen to be copied in the record or transcript at the place they should be will not be allowed to overturn the conclusive fact that they were read on the trial, or justify us in refusing to consider them as a part of the record in this court. While upon this point we may say that, although it is right that depositions and other papers that are filed with the clerk should be copied by him in the record he makes for this court, as a part of the legitimate emoluments of his office, and that they should not be embodied in the transcript made by the official stenographer, as the statute (section 4639) contemplates that the stenographer shall only take notes of and make a transcript of the oral testimony offered or introduced, yet, if the depositions appear in the stenographer's transcript, and it is signed by the judge, or if the bill of exceptions shows that the depositions of certain witnesses, naming them, were read as evidence, and they are copied by the clerk in the record made out by him, or if the stenographer's transcript shows that the depositions of certain witnesses, naming them, were read in evidence, and they are copied by the clerk in the record, they will be considered by this court as a part of the record. As said in Sinclair's Adm'r v. I. C. R. Co., 100 S. W. 236, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 1040: "In fact, when the evidence is taken by the official stenographer, and his transcript contains all the evidence introduced and offered, and all exceptions, objections, and avowals concerning same, and is certified to as correct by the stenographer and approved by the judge before whom the trial was had, and made a part of the record by an order of court, no bill of exceptions is necessary unless it be to make a part of the record the instructions and other matter not contained in the transcript of the official the objections and exceptions relating thereto, and when it shows that it contains all the instructions and all the evidence and the exceptions, objections, and avowals, and is properly certified and approved, it becomes a complete bill of exceptions, when filed by an order of court, although another bill of exceptions may be prepared containing matter that for any cause has not been presented in a bill of exceptions." To the same effect is McGeever v. Kennedy, 42 S. W. 114, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 845. Neither the cases of L. & N. R. Co. v. Finley, 86 Ky. 297, 5 S. W. 753, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 660, McAllister v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co., 78 Ky. 531, and C. & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Smith, 101 Ky. 107, 39 S. W. 832, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 1079, nor the line of cases in reference to instructions which are referred to in Gambrell v. Gambrell, 113 S. W. 885, are in conflict with the views we have expressed. An examination of them will show that, when the court refused to consider the depositions and instructions as not properly a part of the record, it was because they were not identified by the attestation of the trial judge.

Getting back to the merits of the case, the right of the cotton oil company to recover damages rests altogether on the proposition that, if the message sent by it had been received in due time, a valid contract would have been made between the parties; or, in other words, a contract that either of them might have brought an action in damages for a breach of. Unless such an action could be successfully maintained, the cotton oil company cannot recover more than nominal damages for the failure of the cable company to deliver the message. If no valid enforceable contract would have been made by the two telegrams, it necessarily follows that the cotton oil company cannot recover damages from the cable company that would only have resulted if the contract had been made. The question then comes up: Did the telegrams make a contract between the parties sending them? The cable company insists they did not, because the acceptance contained a qualifying clause; in other words, was not an unconditional acceptance of the offer. If this position is well taken, no more than nominal damages can be recovered, as the authorities in this state and elsewhere are uniform that to close a contract the proposition to sell or buy, as the case may be, must be accepted in the very terms in which the proposition is made. If any qualifications or conditions are added to the acceptance, the offer is not accepted, and hence no contract is made. In Ellison v. Henshaw, 4 Wheat. 225, 4 L. Ed. 556, the law upon this point is thus stated: "It is an undeniable principle of the law of contracts that an offer by a bargain of one person to another imposes no obligation upon ture from, those terms, invalidates the offer, unless the same be agreed to by the person who made it. Until the terms of the agreement have received the assent of both of the parties, the negotiation is open and imposes no obligation upon either." This was approved in Provident Savings Society v. Elliott, 93 S. W. 659, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 552, and again in New York Life Ins. Co. v. Levy, 122 Ky. 457, 92 S. W. 325, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 6, 21, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 739, in which last-mentioned case the question is elaborately discussed and many authorities are cited sustaining the rule announced.

It will be observed that the offer was to buy 10 tanks of bleachable prime summer yellow oil at 27 cents, while the acceptance, although it agreed to the offer of 27 cents, for 10 tank cars bleachable prime summer yellow oil, followed this by the words "Memphis Exchange rules and arbitration," and from a mere reading of the telegrams it would seem that these words did annex a condition, and that the message of the cotton oil company was only a qualified acceptance of the offer, and one that would require an answer accepting the added condition before the contract could be said to be closed; but there is evidence that these apparently qualifying words did not in fact impose any condition or add any terms that were not contemplated and agreed to by both of the parties at the time the telegrams were sent and received. The president of the cotton oil company, as well as Winship, testifies that the message of the cotton oil company was an acceptance of the offer, and, although the evidence is not satisfactory, there is more than one suggestion in it that, in contracts like the one in question, it is understood by the parties that the Memphis Exchange rules and arbitration apply to all contracts of this kind. If it is true that it was mutually understood by the parties and within their contemplation, at the time the telegrams were sent, that the Memphis Exchange rules and arbitration should apply to the contract, or there was in existence at the time a well known and established custom entering into contracts like this that the Memphis Exchange rules and arbitration should apply, or, to put it in another way, if when Winship & Co. sent the telegram they understood and agreed that the Memphis Exchange rules and arbitration should apply to it, the fact that these words were used in the message of acceptance would not modify or qualify the offer, but, on the contrary, would make a complete contract between the parties. What is mutually understood and agreed to by the parties will enter into and become a part of a contract, as will a well-established custom of the trade enter into and become a part of it when the custom is known and understood by the parties duce evidence to show that this message was an acceptance of the offer, and the custom of the trade in reference to such contracts, and likewise competent for the cable company to introduce evidence to show that it was not an acceptance and that there was no such custom. If there is conflict in the evidence on these points, the court should, in addition to other instructions, tell the jury, in substance, that, if the telegram sent by the cotton oil company to Winship & Co. changed or modified the terms upon which Winship & Co. offered to buy the oil, the cable company was not liable for any damages exceeding the cost of the telegram, although it may negligently have failed to deliver it within a reasonable time.

As to whether or not a telegraph company is liable in more than nominal damages for its failure to transmit and deliver in reasonable time a cipher message, there is some conflict in the authorities, and the question has never been directly passed on by this court, although it was mentioned in Western U. Tel. Co. v. Eubanks, 100 Ky. 591, 38 S. W. 1068, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 995, 36 L. R. A. 711, 66 Am. St. Rep. 361. The weight of the adjudged cases undoubtedly is that where the message is in cipher and unintelligible, except to the sender and addressee, and the company has no information or notice except that gathered from the telegram itself as to the importance of its delivery, the injured party cannot recover more than nominal damages. Primrose v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883; Thompson on Negligence, § 2472; Jones on Telegraph & Telephone Companies, §§ 531-538; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 27, p. 1062; Candee v. Western Union Tel. Co., 34 Wis. 471, 17 Am. Rep. 452. But, on the other hand, there are a few courts that hold that the company is liable for all special damages the complaining party suffered by its negligence, although the message was wholly in cipher or couched in language that did not convey its real meaning or importance. Daughtery v. American Union Tel. Co., 75 Ala. 168, 51 Am. Rep. 435; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 77 Va. 173, 46 Am. Rep. 715. Although a telegraph company is a public servant and owes to the public duties that it cannot contract against or avoid responsibility for, nevertheless it should not be held liable for any loss or damage that it could not reasonably know or contemplate, when it received the message, would follow from its failure to transmit or deliver it with reasonable diligence; or, in other words, loss that it had no notice or information of when it entered into the contract of carriage. The whole doctrine of liability for breach of contract is based upon the proposition that, when parties enter into a valid contract, it is within the contem-damage the delinquent party must make good if it was a reasonable and natural consequence of his breach. But special or extraordinary damages cannot be recovered unless it can be shown that they were within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made, or that the defaulting party had notice that such damages would result from his breach, and, in the absence of notice, it cannot be said that it was contemplated by the parties that this class of damages would result from a failure to perform the contract according to its terms.

This rule in reference to special damages has been applied by us in actions against common carriers of goods, and we have held that, whenever a person damaged by unreasonable delay in the transportation of freight seeks to recover more than nominal damages, or to recover special or extraordinary damages, such as loss of profit or loss of custom, or the like, it must be shown that the carrier was either notified of the importance of prompt delivery, or the nature of the goods furnished in themselves such notice. L. & N. R. Co. v. Mink, 126 Ky. 337, 103 S. W. 294, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 833; Illinois Central R. Co. v. Nelson, 97 S. W. 757, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 114. This rule we think it fair and just to apply to telegraph companies. If the message on its face, although partly in cipher or unintelligible, would furnish to a person of ordinary prudence notice that it was important and its prompt delivery essential, or if the company or its operator receiving it has notice of its importance, then special damages may be recovered for the failure to promptly transmit or deliver it. On the other hand, if the message is of such a character that it does not convey any information of its importance or the necessity for its prompt transmission or delivery, and if the company or its operator receiving it has no information or notice of its importance, only nominal damages, or, in other words, the price paid for sending the message, can be recovered if the company is negligent in its transmission or delivery. Whether special damages can be recovered is not dependent upon the proposition that the message on its face is intelligible. If the company or the operator receiving it has notice from the sender, obtained directly with reference to the particular message, or received in the course of business dealings with him, or information from other sources, of the importance of the message, it will be liable for the special damages that reasonably and naturally followed as a consequence of its negligence, although the message may be wholly unintelligible to the operator, and no person excepting the sender and addressee have knowledge of its meaning. The essen-sage. It is a matter of secondary moment how this notice is obtained. If the company denies that it had notice, and the evidence leaves the matter in doubt, it is a question for the jury, and the complaining party may introduce in evidence such facts and circumstances as throw light upon the question of whether or not the company, at the time it received the message, did have notice of its importance. Jones on Telegraph & Telephone Companies, § 538; Postal Tel. Co. v. Lathrop, 131 Ill. 575, 23 N. E. 583, 7 L. R. A. 474, 10 Am. St. Rep. 55.

Under this view of the law, the court on another trial may permit the cotton oil company to introduce evidence showing its course of dealings with the cable company, the number and kind of messages sent by and received from it, and any other facts or circumstances tending to show that the company or its operator receiving the message had notice at the time of its importance; and the jury should be instructed, in substance, that if they believe from the evidence that the cable company knew, or in the exercise of reasonable prudence should have known, from the message or other facts within its knowledge, that the message related to a commercial transaction of importance, then it had such notice as would make it liable in special damages if it negligently failed to deliver in a reasonable time the message.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed, with directions for a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

NUNN, C. J. I dissent from that part of the opinion which establishes the doctrine that it is necessary for the sender of a message to expose his trade or other secrets to the telegraph company, a public service corporation, before it can be made to respond in damages for its negligence in the transmission and delivery of the message.

ULRICH et al. v. KOUSTMER et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Nov. 30, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 195*)—POLICE AND FIRE COMMISSIONERS—HOLDING OVER.

Ky. St. 1900, § 3137 (Russell's St. § 1144), part of the charter of cities of the second class, provides that four persons shall be appointed as police and fire commissioners for a term of one, two, three, and four years, respectively, and thereafter yearly, as their terms of office expire, respectively, there shall be one appointed for a term of four years. Held, that such a commissioner does not hold over after expiration of his term till his successor is appointed and qualified, there being no provision therefor, and there being no such provision in section 3118 (section 1216), part of such charter, relative to the term of the superintendent of public works, while there is such provision in sections 3126 and 3143

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 177*)—POLICE AND FIRE COMMISSIONERS—VACANCY IN OFFICE—APPOINTMENT.

Under Ky. St. 1909, § 3137 (Russell's St. § 1144), part of the charter of cities of the second class, providing that the mayor, subject to the approval of the board of aldermen, shall appoint four persons as police and fire commissioners; that they shall be appointed for a term of one, two, three, and four years, respectively, and every year thereafter as their terms of office shall expire, respectively, there shall be one appointed for a term of four years, and the mayor shall fill all vacancies—the mayor in making an original appointment (that is, appointing one, after the terms of the first four appointees have expired, to serve for four years) must submit the name of the appointee to the board of aldermen for its approval, and, it having refused to approve the appointee, a vacancy, such as the mayor may fill without the approval of the board of aldermen, does not arise on expiration of the term of the outgoing member, but the mayor must submit another name for its approval.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Campbell County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Julius H. Ulrich and others against Frederick Koustmer and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed in part and reversed in part, and remanded for further proceedings.

R. W. Nelson, Thos. P. Carothers, Aubrey Barbour, Brent Spence, and Nelson & Gallagher, for appellants. Samuel E. Anderson, Wm. A. Burkamp, C. T. Baker, Geo. H. Ahlering, and Harry Webber, for appellees.

NUNN, C. J. This controversy depends upon the construction of section 3137, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 1144), which is as follows: "The mayor, subject to the approval of the board of aldermen, shall appoint four citizens and freeholders of the city, who shall have been electors of the city for five years preceding their appointment, and who shall not be less than thirty years of age, and not related to the mayor by blood or marriage, who, together with the mayor, shall compose a board of police and fire commissioners. The mayor shall be ex officio chairman of said board. Said commissioners shall be appointed for a term of one, two, three and four years, respectively, upon the taking effect of this act; and every year thereafter, as the terms of office of said commissioners shall expire, respectively, there shall be one commissioner appointed for a term of four years, and the mayor shall fill all vacancies that may occur in said board," etc. This section is contained in the charters of second-class cities. The city of Newport being one of that class, the mayor on April 27, 1894, after the act became a law, according with the statute, and on the same date each year thereafter the mayor named a person to act in the place of the one whose term expired, and sent the name to the board of aldermen for confirmation. There seems to have been no friction in the naming and confirming a person to hold the position until April, 1909, when the mayor, Edward L. Krieger, named one Bowman to fill the position, and sent his name to the board of aldermen for confirmation, which the board refused to do. The mayor failed to name another person in lieu of Bowman until after the term of Richard Pfingstag expired. He then declared a vacancy in the office, and appointed one Lindsay to fill the unexpired term.

This action was instituted, in which it was alleged, in substance, that Pfingstag was still a member of the board and had a right to hold the position until his successor was duly appointed, approved, and qualified; that the appointment by the mayor of Lindsay to fill the alleged vacancy was void, and that he, Pfingstag, had a right to act as a member of said board; that the mayor and one Koustmer, a member of the board, were threatening and about to induct Lindsay into office, and an injunction was sought to prevent it. The case was tried in the lower court, and judgment was rendered to the effect that Pfingstag's term of four years had expired, and that he had no right to hold the office until his successor was duly appointed and qualified, and that there was a vacancy in the position when the mayor appointed Lindsay and that the appointment of Lindsay was legal; that it was not necessary in such a case to submit his name to the board of aldermen for its confirmation. The injunction was dissolved, and this appeal prayed. Immediately thereafter, and within the time fixed by law, the appellants moved a judge of this court to reinstate the injunction, and on June 9, 1909, W. E. Settle, at that time Chief Justice of this court, entered the following order, to wit: "It is the opinion of this court, in which a majority of its members and all who are present concur, that the injunction granted appellants should have been continued in force until a hearing of the case is had in this court upon the appeal and on the merits. It is, therefore, adjudged that the injunction dissolved by the circuit court be, and it is, re-instated to continue in force during the pendency of the appeal, and until the case shall be decided by this court upon its merits." Counsel cite several authorities which seemingly support their contentions as to each of the questions involved. We will not take the time, however, to consider and discuss them in this opinion, as they construe statutes dif-second class came from the Legislature as a whole, and it is not the province of the court to add to it when the meaning is plain. The statute, in so many words, fixes the term each of the persons appointed is to hold. It was in the province of the General Assembly to determine whether or not they should hold until their successors were appointed and qualified. Sections 3118, 3126, 3137, and 3143 of the Statutes (Russell's St. §§ 1216, 1028, 1144, 1060) throw much light upon the question as to whether Pfingstag is authorized to hold the office of police and fire commissioner until his successor was duly appointed and qualified. Section 3118 relates to the appointment by the mayor of a superintendent of public works, and says that he shall be appointed, "for a term of two years," subject to the approval of the board of aldermen. Section 3126 provides that the mayor shall appoint an auditor, subject to the approval of the board of aldermen, to serve for two years, or until his successor is duly appointed and qualified. Section 3137, the one under consideration, provides that four persons shall be appointed as police and fire commissioners, their term to expire in one, two, three, and four years, respectively, and thereafter, yearly, there shall be one appointed for a term of four years. Section 3143 fixes the term of the commissioner of the waterworks. "Their terms of office shall be three years and until their successors are duly appointed and qualified." Here we have two instances expressly stating that the officers shall hold over until their successors are duly appointed and qualified, and in the other two no such power or right is conferred. The expression in the two instances that they should hold over and in the other two a failure to confer the right shows plainly that the General Assembly did not intend that the right to hold over should exist. This court has no power to add words to a statute when it is unambiguous. We are therefore of the opinion that Pfingstag's power as a police and fire commissioner ceased at the expiration of his term of four years.

The other question is also easy of solution. The statute unquestionably authorized the mayor to fill all vacancies in the office without submitting the names of such appointees to the board of aldermen for its approval. See the case of Watkins v. Mooney, 114 Ky. 646, 71 S. W. 622, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1469. It was also decided in that case, with equal definiteness, that the mayor in making original appointments—that is, in appointing some one to serve for four years—should submit the name of the appointee to the board of aldermen for its approval, and this is in accord with the express terms of the statute.

The General Assembly, when it enacted the statute. The term of office succeeding Pfingstag had never been filled, so that it could become vacant, and the statute requires the mayor to appoint some one for the term and submit his name to the board of aldermen for approval. In our opinion there must have been some one duly appointed and qualified filling the office before a vacancy can occur as contemplated by the statute. It was the duty of the mayor to have submitted the name of Lindsay as his appointee to the board of aldermen for its approval before he could have been legally inducted into office. In the case of Watkins v. Mooney, supra, this court said: "It is argued, and this we conceive to be the main argument for the appellee in his behalf, that there is no apparent reason, and, in fact, none, why the legislators should require the mayor's appointees, original and for full terms, always to be confirmed by the board of aldermen, and yet allow him to fill vacancies in the same board without such confirmation. The argument seems to us to be almost irresistible when presented to that body who make the law. But the consequences are not so much to be regarded in the construction of the statutes as the language employed, where the language is unambiguous. In fact, as long as the language of the statute is not ambiguous, the courts have no discretion as to the meaning they will give to it. * * * A distinction is obviously intended to be made between original appointments of members of the board and appointments to fill vacancies; otherwise, there is no sense or meaning in the provision directing and authorizing the mayor to fill all vacancies. If the Legislature had intended that appointments to fill vacancies should be submitted for confirmation to the board of aldermen, it would doubtless have put in after the word 'mayor,' as it expressly did when providing for the original appointment, 'subject to the approval of the board of aldermen.'" Evidently the General Assembly intended that in selecting police and fire commissioners for a term of four years the mayor and board of aldermen should exercise their judgment in the matter, and the mayor alone could not have the power. To give the statute the construction contended for by appellees would thwart this object, as the mayor could fail to appoint and send in the name until after the term of the outgoing member had expired, or send in the name of a person that he knew was unfit, and that the board would reject, and then wait until the term of the outgoing member expired and declare a vacancy and appoint a person without submitting his name to the board for confirmation, and in this way govern and control the matter himself, and obtain a board of police right to hold over beyond his term is affirmed, and that part declaring Lindsay duly appointed to fill the vacancy is reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

SCHWALK'S ADM'R v. CITY OF LOUISVILLE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 747*)—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE—GOVERNMENTAL DUTIES.

A municipal corporation in maintaining a city hall for the use of its officers and agents as a place for transacting its business performs a public and governmental duty, and is not liable for the negligence of its agents and servants in the transaction of such business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 747.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 217*)—EXEMPTIONS—PUBLIC PROPERTY USED FOR PUBLIC PURPOSES—CITY HALL.

Under Const. § 170, which declares that public property used for public purposes shall be exempt from taxation, the city hall maintained by the city of Louisville is exempt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 355, 356; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 733*)—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE—GOVERNMENTAL DUTIES.

In exempting municipal corporations from liability for defects in its public buildings used for public or governmental purposes, or the negligence of its employees in their care, the law places them on the same footing with the state and counties thereof as to buildings owned and used by them in aid of government.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 733.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 733*)—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE—GOVERNMENTAL DUTIES—EXCEPTION TO RULE.

That municipalities are liable for negligence in not keeping their streets in repair affords an exception to the general rule exempting municipalities from liability for negligence in the performance of a public, governmental duty imposed upon them for public benefit, and for which they in their corporate capacity derive no pecuniary profit.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 747*)—PERSONS EMPLOYED IN CITY HALL—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE—RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR—"PUBLIC OFFICERS."

Persons employed in a city hall in managing and conducting the affairs of the municipality are public officers, charged with the performance of public duties; and the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to such employments.

Nunn, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division.

"To be officially reported."

Action by S. J. Schwalk's administrator against the City of Louisville. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bennett H. Young, Marion W. Ripy, and E. C. Walde, for appellant. Huston Quin, Clayton B. Blakey, and Elmer C. Underwood, for appellee.

SETTLE, J. On August 30, 1906, Simon J. Schwalk lost his life while going to some part of the city hall in Louisville upon an elevator used in the building. The city hall is owned by the appellee, city of Louisville, and practically the whole of the city's business is conducted within its walls.

The appellant, Columbia Finance & Trust Company, was appointed and duly qualified as administrator of Schwalk's estate, and on March 27, 1907, instituted this action in the court below to recover of the appellee city damages for his death; it being, in substance, alleged in the petition as finally amended that the death of its intestate was caused by the negligence of appellee, its agents, and servants in failing to maintain the elevator in a reasonably safe condition for use, and in permitting it to be operated by an inexperienced and incompetent negro boy. After the petition had been twice amended, the circuit court sustained a demurrer to it, and, appellant refusing to plead further, judgment was rendered dismissing the action. Appellant's dissatisfaction with that ruling and judgment resulted in this appeal.

The judgment of the circuit court is bot-tomed upon the theory that the duty of the city of Louisville to provide and maintain a city hall for the use of its officers and agents and as a place for transacting its business affairs is a public and governmental duty and obligation for the negligence of its agents and servants, in the performance of which the city is not liable in an action for damages. This court is fully committed to the doctrine thus announced. As said in Taylor v. Owensboro, 98 Ky. 271, 32 S. W. 948, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 856, 56 Am. St. Rep. 361: "Municipal governments are auxiliaries of the state government. They are created principally to aid in securing a proper government of the people within the boundaries of such municipalities, and to make more effectual the maintenance of public order." Louisville Bridge Co. v. City of Louisville, 81 Ky. 189; City of Louisville v. Commonwealth, 1 Duv. 295, 85 Am. Dec. 624. The Constitution of the state gives full recognition to municipal corporations, and that they are to be treated as parts of the government machinery and necessary auxiliaries in carrying out the ends of government. Under section 170 of the Constitution, which declares that "public property used for public purposes" shall be exempt from taxation, it has been held by this court that waterworks, a park, public wharf, and even bonds owned by a city and applied exclusively to governmental or public uses cannot be subjected to taxation. City of Louisville v. Commonwealth, 1 Duv. 295, 85 Am. Dec. 624; City of Owensboro v. Commonwealth, 105 Ky. 344, 49 S. W. 320, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 1251, 44 L. R. A. 202; Board of Councilmen City of Frankfort v. Commonwealth, 94 S. W. 648, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 699; Commonwealth v. City of Covington, 128 Ky. 36, 107 S. W. 231, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 837, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214. Under the rule stated by the foregoing authorities, appellee's city hall is exempt from taxation. As the maintenance of a city hall for the use of the court, officers, and employes of a municipality, as well as for the transaction of its business, is but the exercise of a purely governmental function, it would seem to follow that the city cannot be held liable for acts of negligence on the part of its officers or agents engaged in its work or business therein.

The general rule on this subject is well stated in Burdick's law of Torts as follows: "Nonliability of City—There is a substantial agreement that it is not liable for the torts of its fire or police departments, nor for those of its boards of health or education; nor for those of any other officers, agents, or servants in the discharge of functions which primarily belong to the state, but the performance of which it has delegated to the municipality. Neglect of officers in guarding prisoners, or in caring for jurymen, or in keeping courthouses, townhouses, jails, or other public buildings in repair, will not subject the corporation to legal liability. Nor will the negligence of an employe of a charity hospital render the city which maintains it, liable to damages." The doctrine thus stated by Burdick has been applied by this court to relieve cities and towns of responsibility for the torts or negligence of their agents in the following cases: Twyman's Adm'r v. City of Frankfort, 117 Ky. 518, 78 S. W. 446, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1620, 64 L. R. A. 572; Pollock's Adm'r v. City of Louisville, 13 Bush, 221, 26 Am. Rep. 260; Jolly's Adm'r v. Hawesville, 89 Ky. 279, 12 S. W. 313, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 477; Prather v. Lexington, 18 B. Mon. 559, 56 Am. Dec. 585; Having v. Covington, 78 S. W. 431, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1617; Ernst v. Covington, 116 Ky. 830, 76 S. W. 1089, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1027, 63 L. R. A. 652, 105 Am. St. Rep. 241; Clark v. Nicholasville, 87 S. W. 300, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 974; Jones v. City of Corbin, 96 S. W. 1002, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 874; Board Park Com'rs v. Prinz, 127 Ky. 460, 105 S. W. 948, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 359. And also held in the cases further cited to exempt state and city eleemosynary institutions from such liability. Leavell v. Western Ky. Asylum, 122 Ky. 213, 91 S. W. 671, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 1129, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 269; Williamson v. Industrial School of Reform, 95 Ky. 251, 24 S. W. 1065, 15 Ky. Law Rep. 629, 23 L. R. A. 200, 44 Am. St. Rep. 243. In respect to such nonliability for defects in its public buildings, such as a city hall, prison, schoolhouse, or other structure used for public or governmental purposes, or the negligence of its employes in their care, cities seem to be placed by the law on the same footing with the state and the counties thereof as to buildings owned and used by them in aid of government; and in the recent case of Simons v. Gregory, 120 Ky. 116, 85 S. W. 751, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 509, it was held by this court that neither Jefferson county, the county judge, members of its fiscal court, jailer, nor other of its county officers could be made liable in damages for injuries received by one through the fall of an elevator in the Jefferson county courthouse. According to the great weight of authority, cities and towns are not liable for negligence in the performance of a public, governmental duty imposed upon them for public benefit, and from which they in their corporate or proprietary capacity derive no pecuniary profit. However, the universally recognized liability of such municipalities for negligence in not keeping their streets in repair affords an exception to the general rule, which, as said in Snider v. City of St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 53 N. W. 763, 18 L. R. A. 151 (a case almost identical in point of fact with this): "We think the courts would do better to rest either upon special consideration of public policy or upon the doctrine of stare decisis than to attempt to find some strictly legal principle to justify the distinction. * * *"

It is, however, insisted for appellant that a municipality is charged with the performance of duties of a private and corporate character as well as those of a political or governmental nature, and that, as to the former, the municipality stands upon the same footing with a private corporation and may be held to the same responsibility with a private corporation for injuries resulting from its negligence. This is undoubtedly true, but unfortunately for this contention in maintaining a city hall appellee does not act in its capacity as a private corporation, but, as we have attempted to show, in the performance of a purely governmental function, because of which no liability resulted to it from the death of appellant's intestate. If it could be demonstrated by allegation and proof that the building in which the intestate met his death is maintained by appellee merely as an investment for profit, expected to be realized by its sale or in the way of rents from private persons occupying it as tenants, or it were devoted to any other use for which

be sound. But appellee has not put the building in question to such a use as any of those mentioned, but, on the contrary, erected, and has always used it, as and for a city hall, within and from which to manage and conduct the affairs and business of the municipality. It is, in brief, a building wholly devoted to public and governmental uses. This being true, we deem it our duty to adhere to the doctrine announced by past deliverances of this court, that a municipal corporation is not amenable to actions for negligence in the performance of public duties incident to the exercise of its governmental functions; that persons employed in the performance of such duties by the municipal corporation act as public officers, charged with a public service, and, being mere agencies or instruments by which such public duties are performed, that the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to such employments. To hold otherwise and impose upon the municipality responsibility for the negligence of such employees would indirectly fasten upon it a liability from which it is by law on consideration of public policy exempt.

We will not enter upon a discussion of the authorities from the courts of other states relied on in argument by counsel in support of their respective contentions, as we should be and are controlled in the conclusions we have reached by this court's several previous adjudications of the questions herein involved. Being of opinion that the law exonerates appellee from responsibility for the death of appellant's intestate, the judgment is affirmed.

WARREN'S ADM'R v. JEUNESSE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 2, 1906.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 513*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—SUBJECTS FOR EXPERT TESTIMONY—REASONABLY SAFE APPLIANCES.

In an action for death of a servant, where an issue is made whether an appliance, alleged to have caused the death, was reasonably safe, competent and experienced persons may, as experts, give their opinion based upon actual experience, observation, or technical knowledge, with their reasons therefor.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—INSTRUMENTALITIES—SUFFICIENCY—EVIDENCE—CUSTOMARY USE.

The fact that an appliance is in customary use is not the correct test of its sufficiency; but evidence that a master, charged with negligence resulting in the death of a servant from an instrumentality, followed the custom of other persons in the same line of business, was compe-

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—DEATH OF SERVANT—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for death of a servant alleged to have been caused by defective instrumentalities, including an engine, testimony of a witness that when he examined the engine months afterwards it was sufficient was inadmissible, where he could not say, except inferentially, that the engine was in the same condition as when the accident happened.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—DEATH OF SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for death of a servant, a charge that if the master negligently failed to furnish reasonably safe machinery, and such an unsafe condition was known to the master, his agents or servants superior in authority to decedent, or whose duty it was to furnish and supervise the place and machinery, etc., and such unsafe condition was unknown to decedent, and he was injured while exercising ordinary care for his safety, he could recover, was not improper as confining to servants superior to decedent the knowledge of the defective appliance to fasten negligence on the master.

5. DEATH (§ 58*)—ACTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a death action brought under Ky. St. § 6 (Russell's St. § 11), passed pursuant to Const. § 241, providing an action for death from negligent act, and that the General Assembly shall provide how the recovery shall go, plaintiff need not prove that decedent exercised ordinary care for his own safety, or did not know of the danger; but proof of contributory negligence as a defense may be made in that decedent was not exercising ordinary care and did know of the unsafe appliance or place.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 78; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 205*)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

While a servant assumes the ordinary risks incident to the employment, he does not assume any risk growing out of defects in places and appliances which the master is bound to exercise ordinary care to keep in reasonably safe condition; the ordinary risks assumed covering only such risks as grow out of the employment when the place and appliances furnished are reasonably safe.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 547; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 295*)—DEATH OF SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for death of a servant alleged to have resulted from defective instrumentalities, as to which defective condition there was some evidence, a charge that, in entering upon the work in which he was employed, decedent assumed the ordinary risks incident thereto, and, if his injury was received because of one or more of the ordinary risks incident to the work, plaintiff could not recover, was misleading in failing to exclude risks of the place or appliances being unsafe.

defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed for new trial.

Morton K. Yonts and J. Morgan Chinn, for appellant. Trabue, Doolan & Cox, Stanley E. Sloss, F. J. Canty, and H. M. McConnell, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellee was a contractor engaged in the construction of a large building in Louisville. In lifting lumber and other material from the ground to the upper floors of the building, a block and tackle was attached to the top of the building, and from this was suspended a long rope that reached to the ground. When it was desired to lift material, a chain would be fastened around it, and attached to the rope, and the material lifted by power furnished by a gasoline engine 15 feet away, on which there was a drum around which the rope would be wound as the material was pulled up. There was also what was called a guide or "tag" rope attached to the chain at the point where it was wrapped around the material. This rope was intended to be used by the person who looked after the lifting of the material, and by means of it he could steady the package as it was being pulled up and keep it from striking the walls of the building and clear of obstructions. William A. Warren, an intelligent, capable young man, about 18 years of age, who was engaged in attending to the hoisting of material, was killed by being struck on the head by a long slender strip of iron that slipped out of a bundle containing a number of such strips as it was being lifted to the top of the building, by means of the machinery mentioned. The deceased had been working about the building in various capacities for some two months, and frequently during this time had fastened the chain around lumber and other material and guided it on its upward journey by the tag rope. When he was first put at this work, and at different times afterwards, he was warned by the foreman to fasten the chain around whatever was being carried up as tightly as could be, and keep a close watch on the package as it went up, so that if any of the pieces slipped out and fell he could get out of the way, as it was a common occurrence for pieces of material to slip out of the bundle and fall.

In this action to recover damages for his death, three grounds of negligence were set up: (1) That the place where the deceased stood while engaged in his work was unsafe; (2) in failing to provide a safe and proper contrivance for tying and keeping in a bundle the material to be hoisted; (3) in allowing the gasoline engine and appliances risks incident to the work were open and obvious and well known to the deceased, who voluntarily assumed the labor. In reference to the first cause of alleged negligence, there was evidence conducing to show that the deceased, in tying the chain around the bundles and in looking after the guide rope, was required to stand on a narrow plank platform, on either side of which were openings into a deep cellar; but the evidence is not clear upon the question as to how or in what manner the openings in the cellar floor contributed to the accident or resulting injury. As to the second cause, a number of experienced contractors and builders were introduced to testify as experts concerning the safest and most secure way of fastening the chain around the bundle to be lifted. Some of these witnesses testified that two chains should be wrapped around it, some little distance apart, and both of them attached to the rope by which it was pulled up, thus holding the material in a horizontal position, while others said that the proper method was to tie one chain around it as was directed to be done by the persons in charge of the work at the time appellee was killed. Others said it was safer to wrap the bundle with a rope than with a chain, although the chain was used by many experienced contractors. Upon the third point, the engine was being operated by a brother of the deceased, who testified that, on account of defective construction or insufficient repair, it would stop or jerk occasionally, and this contributed to loosening the material being hauled up, and increased the probability of pieces slipping out. He also said that the wire rope, as it wound around the drum in lifting, would sometimes, on account of the engine not being properly set, wind up on one side of it, in place of winding evenly over the whole surface, and this had a tendency to cause the rope to slip, and that the engine brake was out of repair. Other witnesses testified that the engine and appliances were in good working order. In short, we may say that there was some evidence for and against each allegation of negligence. From a judgment entered upon a verdict in favor of the defendant below, now appellee, this appeal is prosecuted.

The errors assigned consist in giving and refusing instructions, and the admission of incompetent evidence. The instructions complained of are instructions Nos. 1 and 2, reading:

"No. 1. It was the duty of the defendant to exercise ordinary care to furnish deceased a reasonably safe place in which to do the work for which he was employed and in which he was engaged at the time of his and machinery, and such unsafe condition, if there were any unsafe condition, was known to the defendant, his agents or servants, superior in authority to the deceased, or whose duty it was to furnish and supervise the place and machinery, or could have been known to them or any of them by the exercise of ordinary care, and was unknown to the deceased, and while exercising ordinary care for his own safety he was injured thereby, then the law is for the plaintiff, and you should so find; but, unless you believe from the evidence that the place or machinery or appliances were not reasonably safe for the work, and unless you further believe from the evidence that such unsafe condition, if it was unsafe, was known to the defendant or his agents or employees superior in authority to the deceased, or whose duty it was to supervise and direct the place and appliances, and unless you further believe from the evidence that such unsafe condition, if it was unsafe, was not known to the deceased, and you further believe that he was injured by reason of such unsafety, then the law is for the deceased, and you should so find.

"No. 2. In entering upon the work in which he was engaged and for which he was employed, the deceased assumed the ordinary risks incident to the work; and if you believe from the evidence that the injury which he received was received by reason of one or more of the ordinary risks incident to the work in which he was engaged, then and in that event the law in the case is for the defendant, and you should so find."

Taking up first the errors pointed out in the admission of evidence. It is insisted that, in substance and manner, the questions and answers of the witnesses introduced to show that the method employed in hoisting the material at the time the deceased was killed was in general use by the trade and regarded as reasonably safe were objectionable. It is clearly competent, in cases like this, where an issue is made as to whether or not an appliance is reasonably safe, to introduce competent and experienced persons to testify as experts. In Louisville Veneer Mills Co. v. Clements, 109 S. W. 308, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 106, we said on this point: "Whether the appliances furnished are reasonably safe or not is a question of fact to be determined by the jury from the evidence, and, to the end that the jury may intelligently consider and dispose of this question, it is competent for the parties to show by evidence the character of appliances furnished, as well as the character of appliances in general use in similar employments, so that the jury may determine whether or not the and advisability of each of them. One person may use one kind of appliance or method in the performance of his work and regard it as being the safest and best, while another may have a different method or appliance and think it the safest and best; and so, when the question comes up whether or not the master has furnished the servant with reasonably safe appliances, it is entirely proper to permit experienced persons to give their opinion regarding the safety of the appliance, and this opinion may be based upon actual experience, or observation, or technical knowledge of the matter. In inquiring of witnesses upon this subject who have qualified themselves to give evidence, they should be asked whether or not, in their opinion, the appliance in use is reasonably safe for the purpose intended, and be permitted to give the reasons why they think it is or is not, as the case may be. If this character of evidence was not admissible, the jury in many cases would be unable to say whether or not the machinery or appliance in question was reasonably safe or not, as it might concern a matter entirely outside of the ordinary and common knowledge of the jury. Ford v. Providence Coal Co., 124 Ky. 517, 99 S. W. 609, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 698. The fact, however, that an appliance or instrumentality is in customary use is not the correct test of its sufficiency. A thing might be used by a great many people, and yet be entirely unsafe and insufficient. Columbus & Hocking Coal & Iron Co. v. Tucker, 48 Ohio St. 41, 26 N. E. 630, 12 L. R. A. 577, 29 Am. St. Rep. 528. But evidence that the person charged with negligence followed the custom of other persons in the same line of business may be received when it is introduced in connection with evidence of the safety of the appliance or method for the purpose of showing that the thing is in customary use because it is regarded as safe, and has been found to be so by experience, observation, or technical knowledge, as the case may be. Thompson on Negligence, § 7882. The evidence of Stoddard as to the sufficiency of the engine was not competent. He did not know, and could not say, except inferentially, that it was in the same condition when the accident happened as it was when he examined it months afterwards.

In the criticism of instruction No. 1, the argument is made that the words limiting the knowledge of the unsafe condition to superior servants, or to such servants as were charged with the duty of supervising the place and machinery, should have been omitted. In support of this contention, we are cited to the case of Van Dyke v. Memphis Packet Co., 71 S. W. 441, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1283, and Cooper v. Oscar Daniels Co., 96 place was known "to the defendant, his agents or servants superior in authority to the deceased, or whose duty it was to furnish and supervise the place and machinery;" whereas, in the cases mentioned the instruction was confined to knowledge on the part of the defendant or any of its agents or employés superior in authority. And it was held that this limitation was erroneous; the court saying in the Van Dyke Case that the master is responsible not only for the acts and omissions of the servant superior to the one injured, "but is responsible to the servant who is injured from a want of proper care in the person to whom the duty is delegated without regard to the rank or title of the agent entrusted with its performance." And so we do not think the objection well taken, as the knowledge to fasten negligence on the master was not confined to the servants superior to the deceased, but extended to any servant or employé "whose duty it was to furnish and supervise the place and machinery."

This instruction is also assailed upon the ground that it made the fact that the deceased was exercising ordinary care for his own safety, and his ignorance of the unsafe condition of the place and machinery, conditions precedent to a right of recovery in behalf of his administrator. As the action was brought under section 6 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 11), enacted in pursuance of section 241 of the Constitution, to recover for death, it was not necessary that the plaintiff should prove that the deceased exercised ordinary care for his own safety, or did not know of the danger. Cumberland Tel. & Telegraph Co. v. Graves, 104 S. W. 356, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 972; Lexington & Carter Co. Mining Co. v. Stephens, 104 Ky. 502, 47 S. W. 321, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 696. But it has never been ruled by this court that in an action under this statute the plea of contributory negligence was not available. On the contrary, it has always been recognized as a defense. Passamanek v. Louisville Ry. Co., 98 Ky. 195, 32 S. W. 620, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 763; Clarke v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 101 Ky. 34, 39 S. W. 840, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 1082, 36 L. R. A. 123. The personal representative of a servant whose life is lost by his own negligence or want of ordinary care can no more recover damages in an action under the statute than could the servant if he had only been injured and had brought suit in his own name to recover for the injuries. The only difference in the two states of case is that, where the action is brought by the injured servant, he must generally allege and prove that he was exercising ordinary care for his own safety and was ignorant of the unsafe condition of

that the deceased was exercising ordinary care or was ignorant of the danger. But, nevertheless, the defendant may show, to establish contributory negligence, that the deceased was not exercising ordinary care, and that he did know of the unsafe appliance or place. In neither case can there be a recovery if the injury was due to the negligence or want of care on the part of the injured person. It would be better practice to put the whole law of contributory negligence in a separate instruction; but often this is not done, and we have more than once approved instructions similar to the one given in this case. Cumberland Tel. & Telegraph Co. v. Graves, 104 S. W. 356, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 972; Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Ware, 74 S. W. 289, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 2519; C. & T. P. R. R. Co. v. Evans, 110 S. W. 844, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 596; Mead v. Ashland Steel Co., 125 Ky. 114, 100 S. W. 821, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 1164.

The objection to instruction No. 2 is put upon the ground that it failed to point out that the deceased did not assume the risk of the place or appliances being in an unsafe condition. The rule in this state is that, while the servant assumes the ordinary risks incident to the employment, he does not assume any risk growing out of defects in places and appliances that it is the duty of the master to exercise ordinary care to keep in reasonably safe condition. The ordinary risks assumed by the servant only cover such risks as grow out of the employment when the place and appliances furnished the servant are reasonably safe. This view of the law was fully declared in Pfisterer v. Peter, 117 Ky. 501, 78 S. W. 450, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1605, Brent v. L. & N. R. Co., 104 S. W. 961, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 1216, and many other cases.

Counsel for appellee argue that the facts of this case are so different from those appearing in the Pfisterer and Brent opinions that, conceding the instruction to be erroneous, it was not prejudicial. It is a rare thing that the facts in two cases are exactly alike; but, when a principle is deliberately announced by this court as the law upon a given statement of fact, the principle so declared should be followed and applied in other cases presenting like questions of fact until it is authoritatively adjudged not to be the law. Attempts to make refined and obscure distinctions between cases as to the law applicable, when a substantial and common-sense view of the facts does not justify it, not only leaves the final decision of cases in doubt, but confuses the law and renders it difficult for trial judges to correctly understand and apply it. Having this view of the matter, we do not feel authorized to differentiate this case from the ones mentioned. In each of them the action was brought by the servant to recover damages on account of the failure of the master to furnish for his use reasonably safe appliances and places, and this court held that an instruction in all respects similar to the one we are considering was prejudicial error. In the Brent Case, as in this, the argument was made that the error in the instruction as to assumed risk was cured by an instruction in which the court told the jury that it was the duty of the master to furnish a reasonably safe place; but the court, declining to follow the argument, said: "The employe does not assume such risks as arise from the negligence of the employer in failing to furnish him a reasonably safe place in which to work, and reasonably safe instruments and materials with which to work, and, where this failure is the only negligence complained of, any instruction as to ordinary risks assumed by the employe must be misleading. * * * A jury of laymen were bound to conclude that the court's instructions were directed to the question in issue, and that there was some risk attendant on the use of the defective hand car, if it was defective, which appellant assumed. They would naturally conclude that the breaking of a defective pin was one of the risks included within the meaning of instruction No. 5. It may be admitted that a lawyer could take the instructions, and by reading them in pari materia conclude that the court intended to exclude danger in using the defective pin from the risk referred to in instruction No. 5; but a jury of laymen would perhaps not be able to do this, and would conclude, to the manifest prejudice of the appellant, that the consequences of the use of the defective pin was one of the risks to which instruction No. 5 is directed." In that case it is true the only negligence complained of was a defect in the hand car; whereas, in this case the appliances or instrumentalities with which deceased was required to work were alleged—and the allegation was supported by some evidence—to be unsafe. If we could say that instruction No. 2 was limited to the risk of pieces of the material being lifted falling out of the bundle, and did not have reference to defective or unsafe appliances, the cases could be distinguished; but the jury, in reading the instructions together, had the right to infer that the deceased assumed all the risks through or by which he might be injured. Of course, this was not what the court intended, and a lawyer would be able to read the instructions as a whole and understand that the court, in saying that the deceased assumed the ordinary risks incident to the employment, meant such risks as did not grow out of unsafe appliances or places. If the jury construed the instructions, as they might well have done, to mean that the deceased assumed all risks incident to his labor, they would be fully justified under the evidence in returning a verdict for the appellee, although they might have believed that the appliances used in connection with the work were not reasonably safe.

For the reasons given, the judgment must be reversed, with directions for a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

GRAYSON COUNTY v. ROGERS.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 1, 1909.)

1. JUDGES (§ 22*)—SALARY OF OFFICERS—CHANGE DURING TERM.

Under Const. § 161, providing that the compensation of county officers shall not be changed after their election or during their term, and section 235, providing that the salaries of public officers shall not be so changed, if the fiscal court does not fix the salary of the county judge before his election, it may do so afterward; but, if such salary is fixed before election, it cannot be changed during the term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. § 76; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

2. COUNTIES (§ 53*)—RECORDS—CORRECTION.

A mistake in the entry of an order of the fiscal court may be corrected by that court summarily during the term at which it was made, or after the term, on reasonable notice to persons affected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 70; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

3. COUNTIES (§ 42*)—DISQUALIFICATION—PROBATIONARY INTEREST.

Neither a county judge nor his son can act as member of the fiscal court in fixing the salary of the county judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

4. COUNTIES (§ 46*)—SALARY OF COUNTY JUDGE—AUTHORITY OF FISCAL COURT.

As the county judge cannot also hold the office of supervisor of roads, the fiscal court has no authority to make such judge an extra allowance of salary as such supervisor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 54; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

5. COUNTIES (§ 57*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK—PROCEEDINGS OF FISCAL COURT.

Under Ky. St. §§ 1835, 1842, 1843 (Russell's St. §§ 2971, 2976, 2977), requiring the clerk of the fiscal court to keep a record of the proceedings, which shall be publicly heard, approved, and signed before adjournment of the court, an alleged error in an order of that court fixing the salary of the county judge cannot be shown in a collateral action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 433*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL RECORDS.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to show an error in the entry of an order of the fiscal court fixing the salary of the county judge.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Grayson County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Grayson County against H. C. Rogers, Sr. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

HOBSON, J. H. C. Rogers, Sr., was county judge of Grayson county for the term beginning on the first Monday in January, 1902, and expiring on the first Monday in January, 1906. During the term he was paid a salary of $650 a year. After the expiration of his term, this suit was filed against him by Grayson county to recover $400; it being alleged that he had been paid $100 for each year of his term more than he was entitled to. The circuit court dismissed the petition, and the county appeals.

The facts of the case are these: A. L. Wells was the judge of the Grayson county court for the term beginning on the first Monday in January, 1898. At the March term, 1898, the fiscal court entered the following order: "It is ordered that the salary of A. L. Wells, the judge of the Grayson county court, be and the same is hereby fixed at $550 per annum, payable quarterly in equal installments, to be paid on the order of the county judge." The usual order was made for the payment of the salary for each of the succeeding years of Wells' term. At the March term, 1902, which was the first term after Rogers qualified as county judge, he asked the court to make him an allowance of $750 a year. Some discussion ensued. A vote was taken. The majority were in favor of making him an allowance of $650 a year. But at this point a discussion arose between the county attorney and Z. T. Proctor, a member of the bar, in which the latter insisted that the fiscal court was without authority to allow more than $550, the amount which had been allowed Wells during the preceding term. The court, being in doubt, entered the following order, which was regularly approved and signed: "It is ordered that the county judge's salary be fixed at $550 per year, payable quarterly." On the same day the court made this order: "It is ordered that John E. Stone pay out of any money he has in his hands left after paying claims he has heretofore been ordered to pay the following: H. C. Rogers, Sr., $137.50, J. C. Graham, $100, J. R. Coyle, $181.25, being the first quarter of their salaries as county judge, county attorney, and school superintendent for the year 1902." Also on the same day it made this order: "It is ordered that the following persons be, and they are hereby, allowed the following amounts, and the sheriff of Grayson county is hereby ordered to pay the same out of the county levy for the year 1902: * * * H. C. Rogers, Sr., $412.50; this being the second, third, and fourth quarters of his salary as county judge." On a subsequent day of the same term this order was entered: "It is ordered that Judge H. C. Rogers, Sr., be and he is hereby appointed county supervisor of roads." On the same day the following or-of Grayson county is hereby ordered to pay the same out of the county levy for the year 1902: * * * H. C. Rogers, Sr., salary as county supervisor of roads, year 1902, $100." The court then adjourned for the term. A special term of the court was called for April 29, 1902, at which there were present the county judge and three magistrates; one of them being his son. At this special term an order was made, which is as follows: "It is ordered that the order heretofore made, appointing H. C. Rogers, Sr., supervisor of roads, be and the same is now set aside, and that the salary allowed him as supervisor shall be paid to him for extra services he will have to perform as county judge growing out of the working of the roads by taxation." At the March term, 1903, orders were entered similar to those made at the March term, 1902, allowing Rogers as county judge a salary of $550, and allowing him as supervisor of roads $100. At the March term, 1904 and 1905, orders were made allowing him as county judge a salary of $650. These allowances were all paid, and this action by the county is based upon the idea that he was only entitled to a salary of $550 a year.

The first question arising in the case is as to the effect of the orders made during the preceding term, allowing A. L. Wells, as county judge, annually a salary of $550. In Butler Co. v. James, 116 Ky. 577, 76 S. W. 403 (25 Ky. Law Rep. 801), where we had the question before us, we said:

"Before the adoption of the present Constitution, it was customary for the court of claims to make allowances annually to the county judge and county attorney, and it is apparent from the above orders that the fiscal court of Butler county has been proceeding in the same way since the adoption of the present Constitution, not observing its provisions:

"The compensation of any city, county, town or municipal officer shall not be changed after his election or appointment or during his term of office; nor shall the term of any such officer be extended beyond the period for which he may have been elected or appointed." Section 161.

"The salaries of public officers shall not be changed during the term for which they are elected; but it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to regulate by a general law, in what cases and what deductions shall be made for neglect of official duties. This section shall apply to members of the General Assembly also." Section 235.

"Under these provisions it has been held that the fiscal court cannot make any change in the salary of the county judge during his term of office, and that, while it is the duty of the fiscal court to fix the salary of the county judge for his entire term before his election or qualification, yet, if it shall fail to do so, it may fix his salary thereafter. Marion County Fiscal Court v. Kelley, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 174, 58 S. W. 815; Barrett v. Falmouth, 109 Ky. 151, 58 S. W. 520, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 667.

"The purpose of the constitutional provision is to leave the officials, whose duty it is to fix the salary, free from the importunity and personal influence of the incumbent of the office, and to secure for him for his term, when his salary is once fixed, the amount so agreed to be paid him, and thus make him more independent in the discharge of his official duty. Under these provisions of the Constitution, it is the duty of the fiscal court to fix the salary of the county judge, and other county officers, to be allowed by it before their election—that is, there should be a general order fixing the salaries, and not an allowance each year for that year—and when the salaries are once fixed, they cannot be changed to affect those already elected or appointed, and any change will not take effect until the next election or appointment."

The rule thus declared has been followed by the court in several subsequent cases. Under it, if the fiscal court has not made an order fixing the salary of the county judge before the election of the incumbent of the office, it may make such an order after his election. But if the court, prior to his election, has made an order fixing the salary of the office, then this cannot be changed after his election and during his term of office. The orders of the Grayson fiscal court, made previous to the year 1902, are somewhat different from those before us in the cases referred to, and, whether they should be construed as fixing the salary of the office we need not determine; for, if the salary of the county judge had not been fixed by a previous order, the order which the court made at the March term fixed the salary at $550 in accordance with the rule above laid down, and this order of the fiscal court is, nothing else appearing, conclusive of the amount of salary the county judge should receive, not only for that term, but for all subsequent terms, unless changed by the fiscal court before the election of the officer to be affected.

It is earnestly insisted for the county judge that the court really voted to fix the salary of the county judge at $650 a year; that the order fixing the salary at $550 was entered as it was because the court was in doubt as to its power to allow more, but intended later, if it could, to increase the allowance $100, and this it undertook to do by the subsequent order; that the county judge was not appointed supervisor of roads, and no allowance was made to him as such, but he was allowed $100 additional as county judge; that the orders as they appear on the record were so entered by clerical misprision; and that when this mistake was discovered, a special term of the court was held at which the order was corrected so as to read as the court intended. The weight of the evidence sustains the county judge on the question of fact, and the circuit court, being of opinion that a mistake had been made in the entry of the orders, and that the county judge had received no more than the fiscal court intended to allow him, dismissed the petition.

There is no doubt that if a mistake is made in the entry of the orders of the fiscal court, it may be corrected by the court that made it, summarily during the term at which it is made, or after the term, upon reasonable notice to the persons affected. But the order made by the fiscal court at its special April term is void for the reason that the county judge could not sit in his own case. For the same reason his son could not act in a matter in which his father was interested. Beside the judge and his son there were only two magistrates present, and there being no quorum of the court present, the order of the court made at the special term was void. The order of the fiscal court made at the March term, allowing the county judge $100 as supervisor of roads, was also void, as the fiscal court was without authority to make such an allowance. Davless Co. v. Goodwin, 116 Ky. 891, 77 S. W. 185, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 1081. The case therefore comes to the question, May parol evidence be heard in this proceeding to show that there was a mistake in the orders of the fiscal court, and may the court in this collateral proceeding correct the mistake? The fiscal court is created by section 144 of the Constitution: "Counties shall have a fiscal court, which may consist of the judge of the county court and the justices of the peace, in which court the judge of the county court shall preside, if present; or a county may have three commissioners, to be elected from the county at large, who, together with the judge of the county court, shall constitute the fiscal court. A majority of the members of said court shall constitute a court for the transaction of business."

Among other things, the statute regulating the court provides:

"The clerk of the county court of each county shall, by virtue of his office, be clerk of the fiscal court. He shall attend its sessions and keep a full and complete record of all its proceedings, with a proper index." Section 1835, Ky. St. (section 2971, Russell's St.).

"Not less than a majority of the members of the fiscal court shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and no proposition shall be adopted unless by the concurrence of at least a majority of the members of the court present." Section 1837 (section 2973).

"Before every adjournment the minutes of the proceedings of said court shall be publicly read by the clerk of the court, and corrected, if necessary; and the same shall be

No minute or order of the fiscal court shall be valid until the same be read and signed as aforesaid, nor unless the record shows by whom the court was held." Section 1843 (section 2977).

It is manifest from these provisions, not only that the court must keep a record of its proceedings, but that it can only speak by its records. If, by clerical misprision or otherwise, the record does not speak the truth, the court may correct it; but, unless the court does correct it, it is conclusive in collateral proceedings. To allow proof as to how the magistrates voted to contradict the record, which has been read and signed as provided by the statute, would be to determine what the court did, not from its record, but from parol evidence. The purpose of the statute, in requiring that before every adjournment, the minutes of the proceedings shall be publicly read and corrected if necessary, and then signed when approved by the justices of the peace present, is to make the record, when thus made, the only evidence of the action taken by the court, unless it is corrected by as such supervisor, is to allow him to impeach by parol the record of the court over which he presided, after the record has been approved by the justices of the peace present, and signed by him as county judge. To allow such evidence would be to make the action of the fiscal court depend, not upon what was shown from the record, but upon the recollection of those present as to what had taken place; and this was the evil the statute was designed to guard against.

We, therefore, conclude that the order of the fiscal court made at the March term, fixing the salary of the county judge at $550, is the only legal allowance made by the fiscal court at that term to the defendant, that the salary of the county judge, having been fixed at that term, could not be changed thereafter during his term so as to affect him, and that the orders of the court made for the subsequent years, in so far as they allowed him more than $550 a year, were void.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

CAMERON v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 24, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 595*)—CONTINUANCE—ABSENCE OF WITNESSES.

An indictment of accused for assault to murder was returned April 21st, and process for a witness for accused was issued on the 24th, and the return on the same day showed that the witness was out of the county, and judgment of conviction was entered on the 29th. Accused made a first application for a continuance to procure such witness, who, he claimed would testify that the prosecuting witness told him, shortly before the alleged assault, that he expected to kill accused if he got a chance, and that he communicated such threat to accused. Held, that as sufficient diligence was shown, and as the evidence of the absent witness would have been important in corroborating accused's testimony, as to the threats, etc., and as affecting the punishment, it was error to deny the continuance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1323-1327; Dec. Dig. § 595.*]

Appeal from District Court, Medina County; R. H. Burney, Judge.

T. R. Cameron was convicted of assault to murder, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

James H. Robertson and John R. Storms, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of assault to murder, and his punishment assessed at five years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The assault was alleged to have been committed upon Milford Berry. The evidence, in brief, shows that there had been an ill feeling between the parties, and that Berry had been insulting, and grossly so, to appellant. The witness Woschlegel stated that Berry came to his store and told him he wanted to see appellant, because appellant had been telling lies on him, and he would make appellant take them back or he would take it out of him; that he was tired of his talking about him, and left the store with the remark that he would go look for appellant; that Berry was mad. Clements testified that Berry had been unfriendly towards appellant for more than a year prior to the difficulty. Mask testified that on one occasion in June, 1908, Berry came to his store and asked him if he had seen appellant. He stated he wanted to see appellant, as appellant had been telling lies on him, and he wanted to make him take them back or he would take it out of him. He seemed to be very angry. The witness Hurt testified that the evening before the difficulty appellant was walking along the sidewalk, but said nothing to Berry. Berry said to appellant: "Go to hell; see if you can hear that." Appellant looked around and walked on. Berry, on cross-examination, stated that on the evening before the difficulty appellant passed him, and he asked appellant if he (appellant) wanted a job. Appellant made no reply. Witness then said to him: "Come; help me carry brick up there." Appellant made no reply, and Berry said: "Go to hell; see if you can hear that." He admitted being unfriendly towards appellant for a long time, and denied none of the statements imputed to him.

Appellant testified in his own behalf, and stated that the statements testified by the other witnesses were communicated to him, and, further, that prosecuting witness, Berry, had been angry with him, and used insulting language towards him, for a long time, and on one occasion in front of the Mercantile Company Berry had cursed him, and he (appellant) did not reply to it, but passed on, and again at Holloway's gin Berry had cursed him in the presence of Frank Holloway, but on that occasion appellant passed on and made no reply; that he (appellant) went down to Woschlegel's store one time, and he told him (appellant) that Berry had been there, and he (appellant) went home in order to avoid trouble; that at the Mercantile Company Berry cursed him and said to him, "Go to hell, you damn skunk;" that at the gin Berry asked him if he "had them spells often," and appellant made no reply, and Berry then said, "Go to hell; see if you can hear that;" that on one morning he passed the building where Berry was at work, and Berry asked him if he wanted a job, and to this appellant made no reply; that Berry then said, "Go to hell; I guess you can hear that;" that appellant moved on, and did not stop; that on the day following the incident just mentioned appellant passed along and Berry said to him, "Good morning, you damn old son of a bitch; I wonder if you can hear that;" that appellant then told him he could not take that, and struck him; that he did not intend to kill him, but wanted to make him leave him alone; that this conduct continued from June, 1908, down to the time of the difficulty. Appellant says he had been informed by Holloway that Berry had stated to him (Holloway) that he intended to kill appellant. Appellant is a man 54 years of age, and Berry is a young man.

The question discussed is the refusal of the court to grant a continuance. The alleged absent witness is Frank Holloway, mentioned in statement above. It was the first application, and the diligence, we think, is ample. The indictment was returned on the 21st of April. The process was issued on the 24th of April, and the return was made by the sheriff on the same day, showing that Holloway was at the time out of the county. The judgment was entered on 29th of April. The facts expected to be shown by the absent witness are thus stated: Frank Holloway would swear that prosecuting witness,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Milford Berry, told him that he expected to kill defendant, if he ever got a chance, and that said threat was communicated to appellant by Holloway; that this threat was made just a short time before appellant is alleged to have committed the assault upon Berry; that at another time this witness will swear that he heard Berry curse and abuse defendant in hearing of defendant a short time prior to the alleged assault, and subsequent to the threat to take defendant's life; that the language used by the prosecuting witness was as follows: "Damn you, do you have them spells often," and that appellant then started to walk on, and that the prosecuting witness further said, "Then go to hell, damn you." The immediate facts attending the assault are about these: Appellant was passing near where Berry was at work, carrying bricks to be placed in a building that was being erected, and Berry made the remarks testified to, such as, "Go to hell, you God damn son of a bitch," etc., and that he (appellant) immediately stuck his knife in him. Berry ran, appellant threw a brick or a piece of brickbat at Berry, and Berry threw brick at him (appellant). The knife is not shown to have been a deadly weapon, but is a pocketknife.

We are of opinion, under the circumstances, a continuance should have been granted. Threats to take the life of appellant under the circumstances of this case might have had a considerable bearing in the minds of the jury, and were material testimony, especially in view of the extreme insulting language used by Berry at the time of the assault upon him. Appellant testified, it is true, that the threat had been communicated to him; but Holloway would have corroborated appellant upon that phase of the testimony, as well as in regard to the other remark that Berry is charged with having made in the presence of Holloway. Holloway was, therefore, a very important witness. The testimony places the case within very close lines as to whether it could be an assault with intent to murder. The evidence sought would have been important, as affecting the punishment which the jury would assess. We are, therefore, of opinion this application for continuance should have been granted.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

YELL v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 24, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1064*)—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—GENERAL ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

Accused's motion for a new trial, which merely quoted several paragraphs of the charge and complained of harmful error in giving them, without pointing out the defect, was too general to warrant consideration of the assignment on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

Appeal from District Court, Palo Pinto County; W. J. Oxford, Judge.

Frank Yell was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was convicted in the district court of Palo Pinto county on March 10th of this year on a charge of burglary, and his punishment assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for a period of two years.

1. In his motion for a new trial appellant complains of two or three paragraphs of the court's charge, in which he says, quoting the paragraphs, that the court erred to his injury, without in any manner undertaking to set out wherein the charge complained of was error, or what the supposed defect was. In the absence of motion for a new trial pertinently pointing out the defect in charges given, we are not authorized to consider same. That the complaints to the charges of the court in this case are too general is undoubtedly sustained by the authorities. Thompson v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 265, 22 S. W. 979; Reynolds v. State, 17 Tex. App. 413; Shelton v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 588, 114 S. W. 122. In the last-named case we held that where, upon appeal from a conviction of murder, the complaint was that the charge of the court was too general and uncertain, and was well calculated to confuse and mislead the jury, the exception could not be considered, as it failed to point out in what way the charge was objectionable. The exception in that case was much more specific than the one in the motion here.

2. It is further complained that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction. We cannot accede to the correctness of this contention. On the contrary, a careful inspection of the record convinces us that the testimony is abundantly sufficient to sustain the conviction.

Finding no error in the judgment, it is hereby in all things affirmed.

MASON v. STATE.

Accused was indicted January 19th for perjury committed seven days before. A copy of the indictment was served on the day it was returned into court, and on the following day he ment of the trial within the term. Held, that the denial of an application for a continuance was erroneous.

2. PERJURY (§ 37*)—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, on a trial for perjury, accused testified that he had been sick some time before he gave his testimony, that if he had ever received the money which the witnesses testified he did receive, and which he denied receiving, he did not remember it, that his memory was not good, and that it was more than four years since the money was claimed to have been paid him, the refusal to charge the substance of Pen. Code 1895, art. 202, that a false statement, made through inadvertence, or under agitation, or by mistake, is not perjury, was error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. § 135; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

Appeal from District Court, Delta County; R. L. Porter, Judge.

D. M. Mason was convicted of perjury, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. E. Sharp and Patteson & Patteson, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was convicted on January 23d of this year in the district court of Delta county on a charge of perjury, and his punishment assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for a period of 2 years and 6 months.

1. We think the judgment of conviction must be set aside, and the cause reversed, for several reasons. In the first place, we think appellant's application for a continuance should have been granted. The record shows that he was indicted herein on the 19th day of January of this year, on account of testimony given before the grand jury on the 12th day of the same month, that service of copy of the indictment was made on him on the same day it was returned into court, and that on the following day he made application to take the deposition of his wife, who was alleged to reside in the city of Hugo, Choctaw county, Okl. In the light of the entire record, we think the testimony was material, and that the court should have granted the application. The record shows that court adjourned on the 23d day of January, and that the testimony could not have been procured by any postponement of the trial for any time within the then term of court.

2. Again, we think the court erred in not giving in charge to the jury the substance of article 202 of our Penal Code of 1895. This article is as follows: "A false statement made through inadvertence or under agitation or by mistake is not perjury." The testimony of appellant given on the trial is to the effect, in substance, that he had been sick some time before he gave his testimony bedoes not now remember having received same. He also testifies his memory is not very good, and that it had been more than four years since the $4 was claimed to have been paid him, that he had been confined in jail for a long time, and had been sick the past month almost the entire time, and was sick when carried before the grand jury and was now sick. In this connection counsel for appellant requested the court to give the following special instruction: "You are charged by the court that if you believe from the evidence that the defendant did receive the $4 in money as alleged by the indictment in this case, but you further believe that the defendant had forgotten at the time he testified before the grand jury, or if you have a reasonable doubt as to his having forgotten at the time he is alleged to have testified before said grand jury, the receipt of said money, then in either event you will acquit the defendant." This special charge, or its substance, should have been given, in connection with article 202 of our Penal Code of 1895. These issues were in no manner submitted to the jury by the court, and in view of the evidence it was the right of appellant to have his defense submitted in a clear and explicit manner to the jury. Brookin v. State, 27 Tex. App. 701, 11 S. W. 645.

The other questions raised on the appeal are not likely to occur on another trial. We have considered the exception to the indictment, and think it sufficient.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

RAMSEY, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a conviction of theft of personal property over the value of $50, had in the district court of El Paso county on June 23d of this year, wherein appellant's punishment was assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for a period of two years.

There is no bill of exception in the record, except a general one, grouping all the matters complained of on the trial, and which is too general to be considered; and the complaint of the court's charge is of the most general character, being to the effect, in substance, that the court erred materially in failing in his charge to the jury to instruct them as to what standard of value they should be guided by in determining the reasonable value of the articles alleged to have been stolen, and in failing to peremptorily instruct the jury to find the defendant not guilty as requested. An examination of the charge of the court does not disclose to us any error therein. The property alleged to have been stolen consisted of one saxophone, of the value of $64, two bracelets, of the value of $90 each, and eight neckties, of the value of 50 cents each. A short time after the theft, appellant was found in possession of and offering the saxophone for sale. To the witness Jaffa, who was a secondhand dealer, he explained that the saxophone had been sent to him by an uncle or brother in California to be sold. To the officer, Hinkley, he stated that this instrument had been sent him for sale by his brother. Appellant claimed to have found the saxophone, and introduced several witnesses to this effect. He denied that he had ever stated that a sick musician had sent it to him to sell, or that his uncle or brother had sent it to him to sell.

The jury were fully instructed with reference to the effect of recent possession of stolen property, as well as reasonable explanation thereof. The testimony, while not entirely satisfactory, is, as we believe, under the authorities, sufficient; and we do not think we would be authorized to set aside the verdict of the jury so determining, or put ourselves in opposition to the action of the trial court, which permitted such verdict to stand.

The judgment is affirmed.

LINDLEY v. STATE.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*)—APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS—FORMER CONVICTION—SPECIAL PLEA.

Where there is no special plea in the record on appeal, the court cannot assume that such a plea of former conviction was interposed as would require a submission of the issue to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1144.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 739*)—FORMER CONVICTION—SPECIAL PLEA—RECORD.

Where the evidence did not show that the judgment of conviction pleaded in bar was final, or whether an appeal had been taken therein, or a motion for new trial therein granted, the court properly refused to submit the issue of former conviction, notwithstanding Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 750, providing that, where a special plea is interposed, the jury must in their verdict say whether the matters therein alleged are true.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 739*)—FORMER CONVICTION—SPECIAL PLEA—RECORD.

Where, under the conceded facts, the judgment of conviction relied on in bar is no defense, the evidence and plea of former conviction may be disregarded; but, where there is any view of the evidence under which the plea amounts to a bar, the issue must be submitted.

Appeal from Titus County Court; W. E. Riddle, Judge.

Ollie Lindley was convicted of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Rolston & Ward, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant prosecutes this appeal from a conviction had in the county court of Titus county on March 9th of this year, wherein he was convicted of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors in violation of the local option law.

The sole question presented, in different forms, is that the judgment ought not to be sustained for the reason that the court erred in refusing appellant's special instruction touching his plea of former conviction, and that the verdict of the jury is insufficient, in that it does not dispose of such plea. These contentions cannot be sustained, among other things, for the following reasons: First, there is no special plea contained in the record, and we cannot assume that such a plea was interposed as would have required a submission of this issue to the jury. In the next place, the record does not show that the judgment of conviction, pleaded in bar in this case, was a final judgment, or whether an appeal had been taken therein, or a motion for new trial therein granted. While article 750 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895 requires and provides that, where a special plea is interposed, the jury must in their verdict say whether matters therein alleged are true or untrue, it has been uniformly held that, where no evidence has been introduced in support of such plea, the court is neither required, nor is it its duty, to submit such plea to the jury. Johnson on in bar is no defense, the evidence and plea of former conviction may be wholly disregarded. Of course, where a special plea is interposed, and there is any evidence, or any view of the evidence, under which such special plea would constitute a bar, it should be submitted. As stated in this case it does not appear by any evidence whether judgment relied on was or not final. In the case of Dupree v. State, 120 S. W. 871, it was held that the trial court would take judicial notice of a conviction there, which, if final, would be available as former conviction, and of the fact that an appeal therefrom is pending. As stated, in this case there is no evidence at all as to whether a motion for new trial was yet pending, whether an appeal had been prosecuted, or whether the judgment was in full force and unsatisfied. As presented in the record before us, we think the point made is not available as a defense. Finding no error in the record, the judgment is in all things affirmed.

BREACH OF THE PEACE (§ 4*)—INDICTMENT—REQUISITES.

An indictment, charging that defendant and two others unlawfully met together with the intent to aid each other to repair to the vicinity of the residence of V. and there disturb her and two others, inmates thereof, by loud and unseemly noise, and that they did then and there by such means disturb V. and the other inmates of such residence, in the enjoyment of her and their right to peace, etc., was fatally defective, for failure to allege that V. owned any residence, or occupied a house as a residence, and that defendants went to her residence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Breach of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 4*]

Appeal from Somervell County Court; Jno. A. Herring, Judge.

Jess Bales was convicted of a breach of the peace, and he appeals. Reversed.

F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. The charging part of the indictment is as follows: "Jess Bales, John Connally, and W. B. Prewett * * * did then and there unlawfully assemble and meet together, with the intent and purpose to aid each other to repair to the vicinity of the residence of Mrs. Ann McVicker, and there disturb the said Mrs. Ann McVicker, Mrs. Laura Shook, and Mrs. W. L. Hudspeth, inmates thereof, by loud, unusual and unseemly noise; and they did then and there from disturbance."

Appellant moves in arrest of judgment, alleging the insufficiency of the indictment, and especially pointing out the fact that it does not allege that Mrs. McVicker had or owned the residence, and that the pleading is vague and inferential. We are of opinion that the motion should have been sustained. See Follis v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 535, 40 S. W. 277; Luter v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 69, 22 S. W. 140; Blackwell v. State, 30 Tex. App. 672, 18 S. W. 672. It will be noticed, from a reading of the indictment, that it does fail to allege that Mrs. McVicker owned any residence, or occupied a house as a residence; and it further fails to allege that they went to the residence of Mrs. McVicker. Under the authorities cited, we are of opinion that the motion should have been sustained.

The judgment is reversed, and the prosecution is ordered dismissed.

MUNGER v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909. On Rehearing, Dec. 8, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1093*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—CONSTRUCTION—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT OF FACTS.

Where a bill of exceptions, setting forth accused's objection to a 7 year old boy as a witness because he did not understand the nature of an oath, merely stated that the objection was overruled and the boy allowed to testify, without giving any of the proceedings had in regard to testing his competency, it cannot be aided by going to the statement of facts or other parts of the record.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a rape case, where the offense was alleged to have been committed on or about March 24, 1909, a charge that if accused, as charged, on or about the 23d day of March, 1909, as alleged, had carnal knowledge, etc., was not reversible error, where there was no question of limitation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

3. RAPE (§ 64*)—PUNISHMENT.

Upon conviction of a boy under 17 years old of rape, the punishment is imprisonment for life or for not less than 5 years; the maximum punishment of death provided by White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 639, not applying where accused is under 17 years old.

4. INFANTS (§ 69*)—PUNISHMENT—IMPRISONMENT—PERSON OVER SIXTEEN.

Where accused at the commission of the offense was over 16 years old, his imprisonment would be in the penitentiary; and there was no error in not submitting the issue of his age, that

8. WITNESSES (§ 45*)—COMPETENCY—CHILDREN.

Where a 7 year old boy testified that he knew that he would be punished if he testified falsely, and that to hold up his hand and swear meant that he would be punished if he did not tell the truth, he was a competent witness, though he testified that he did not know the nature of an oath, or what it meant to swear.

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 1033, 1051*)—REVIEW—NECESSITY FOR EXCEPTIONS.

To take advantage, on appeal, of insufficient proof of venue, there must have been a contest over it in the trial court and the matter preserved by bill of exceptions, except where the issue is fought out on the trial as to whether the offense was in the county where the venue was laid, when it will be noticed without bill of exceptions.

Appeal from District Court, Austin County; L. W. Moore, Judge.

Willie Munger was convicted of rape, and appeals. Affirmed.

Bell, Johnson, Matthaël & Thompson, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. This is a conviction for rape upon a girl under 15 years of age; the punishment being assessed at 5 years in the penitentiary.

The state's case shows rape upon a little negro girl, Lovey Green, who was about 12 years of age. She swears positively to the rape. Her little brother was in company with her, and she and he both testify that appellant jumped out of the bushes on the side of the road, and carried the little girl out in the bushes. The girl testified to the rape, and they both testified that the boy ran home to tell their father and mother, the mother examined her and found evidence of sexual intercourse. Other witnesses testify to seeing appellant riding in the direction of where the rape is said to have occurred, and a very short time before it occurred. These witnesses also testify to seeing the two children not far away from the same place and going in the same direction in which appellant was traveling, and just a few moments before the alleged offense occurred.

Appellant, testifying in his own behalf, denies the entire transaction, but stated that he saw the two little negro children at or near the place designated, and told them to get out of the road, and, if they did not, he threatened to run over them with his horse. It is shown by his own, as well as other, testimony introduced in his behalf, that he had been at his father's blacksmith shop in the little village of San Felipe; that he and his father left the blacksmith shop about 6 o'clock to go home; that on reaching home he saddled a horse to hunt for a cow, and while hunting the cow he saw the two little negro children, prosecutrix and her little brother. The age of defendant is put down at 16 years on the 16th of August, 1908; his father and mother testifying that he would be 17 on the 16th of August, 1909. When the little 7 year old witness was tendered, appellant reserved the following bill of exceptions: "Be it remembered that on the trial of this cause Olivet Green, a boy 7 years of age, was called as a witness for the state, and, upon being examined by the court and counsel as to his being competent to testify, defendant, through his counsel, objected to the said witness being permitted to testify because the said witness did not understand the nature of an oath and had not sufficient intelligence to give testimony, which objection thus made by counsel for defendant was overruled by the court and the said witness permitted to testify," etc. None of the proceedings had in regard to testing the competency of this witness is stated in the bill of exceptions. The bill cannot be aided by going to the statement of facts or other parts of the record; but, if we were authorized to do this, we are of opinion that the evidence bearing on this question, as well as the evidence of the witness himself, shows there was no error on the part of the court in this matter.

In the motion for new trial the charge of the court is criticised because the court, in submitting the case, used this language: "If you believe * * * that the defendant did, as charged in the indictment, on or about the 23d day of March, 1909, as alleged, in the county of Austin and state of Texas, have carnal knowledge of said Lovie Green," etc.—the criticism being that the offense is not alleged to have been committed on the 23d of March. The indictment alleged it was committed on or about the 24th of March. This is not of sufficient importance to require a reversal of the judgment. There is no question of limitation in the case. Some of the witnesses state that the transaction occurred on the 23d. In any event it is a matter of no moment, and this exception to the charge is without merit.

It is complained that the court's charge in respect to the punishment is incorrect. The court charged the jury that, if they should find defendant guilty, they should assess his punishment by confinement in the penitentiary for life, or, in the discretion of the jury, at any term of years not less than five. The punishment is correctly given. See article 639, White's Ann. Pen. Code. While article 639 provides that the punishment may be by death, life imprisonment, or for any term of years in the penitentiary not less than 5 years, that portion of the penalty with reference to death was not authorized in this particular case, inasmuch as defendant was under 17 years of age. Our statute prohibits the infliction of the death penalty where the alleged offender is under 17 years of age. The charge, therefore, as given, correctly states the law of punishment.

It is contended that the court erred in not submitting the issue of the age of appellant, to the end that the jury might assess the punishment at confinement in the reformatory or the penitentiary. There is nothing in this contention. Appellant was 16 year of age in August, 1908, and this offense was committed on the 23d or 24th of March, 1909. He was more than 16 years of age at the time of the transaction, as well as at time of trial.

A reversal is asked because the evidence fails to show that the alleged injured female was not the wife of the defendant. Singular to say, but the statement of facts does not show positively, or, rather, by positive statement, that she was not the wife of appellant. However, the circumstances show that she was not his wife. She was a negro girl, 12 years of age on the 4th of February before the occurrence in the latter part of March. Appellant, from the testimony, seems to have been a white boy in his seventeenth year. He speaks of the children as two little negroes, and threatened to run over them with his horse if they did not give him the road, and in fact, the testimony shows they were negroes, and that prosecutrix was just over 12 years of age. The testimony shows that appellant lived with his father and mother, who, from the testimony, evidently are white people. The little negro girl, prosecutrix, lived with her father a mile and a half away from appellant's place of residence. This court knows judicially that a girl of that age could not marry under the Texas law; 14 years being the youngest age at which a marriage could occur. This court would also judicially know that under the laws of Texas a marriage between a white man and a negro woman, or a white boy and negro girl, could not be had. While, as before stated, the evidence is not positive that they were not married, yet the circumstances show beyond any question they were not husband and wife.

There being no error of sufficient importance to require a reversal of the judgment, it is affirmed.

On Motion for Rehearing.

The judgment herein was affirmed at the present term of the court. Motion for rehearing is based upon the following grounds: (1) that the court erred in not holding that Olivet Green was incompetent as a witness by reason of his youthful age; (2) that the state failed to prove that appellant and prosecutrix were not husband and wife; (3) that the venue was not shown; and (4) that the court should have submitted the issue to the jury that, if appellant was not more than 16 years of age at the time of the trial, the jury should have been given the option of sending him to the reformatory or penitentiary.

This is practically a submission on rehearing of the salient features of the case decided in the original opinion. We held, and still adhere to the statement, in the original opinion, that the bill of exceptions, which is therein set out, fails to comply with the requirements of the law, in that it does not set out the facts and circumstances which show or tend to show that the witness Green was incompetent to testify by reason of his age; but the opinion went further, and held that, if all the evidence had been incorporated in the bill, still the court did not err in permitting the witness to testify. In regard to this witness we find in statement of facts practically the following: "My name is Olivet Green. I am seven years old. My papa's name is Ed Green. I do not know the nature of an oath, or what it means to swear. I do know that it means that I will be punished. Nobody told me that. I knew it myself. I knew that to hold up my hand and swear meant that I would be punished. I know what will happen to me if I don't tell the truth. If I don't tell the truth, I will go to Huntsville. Papa and mamma haven't talked to me about this since that time. They didn't tell me anything about going to court. I didn't know anything about where we were going last night when we left home. Nobody told me that, but I knew it. Nobody told me that at all. I knew that we were coming up to Bellville, when we started up here last night. I just found it out. Nobody told me what we were coming up here for. I knew for a good while, if we swore a lie, we would go to Huntsville. Nobody told me that. I just knew it myself. I have known that since I was four years old. I don't know what we would go to Huntsville for." This and similar testimony was drawn out from the witness in testing his competency. If we were permitted to go outside the bill of exceptions, and look to the record in the statement of facts, we are of opinion that this witness was shown to be sufficiently competent to testify in regard to the facts of the case, and this is strengthened by reference to the witness' testimony delivered before the jury. We, therefore, are of opinion that on this question the conclusion reached in the original opinion is correct.

Nor is there any merit in the second contention; that is, that the state failed to show that appellant and the little negro girl were married. We are still of opinion that the evidence is sufficient to show that appellant was a white boy 17 years of age, and the 12 year old girl was a negro; but if they were both white, or both negroes, the status would not be changed, because under the laws of Texas the girl could not be a married woman at that age. She could not under any circumstances be married under 14 years of age, and this question has been expressly decided by this court in Hardy v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 55, 88 S. W. 615. Intercourse or attempted intercourse with a girl of that age would constitute rape or attempt to rape, as the facts might show the offense to be. Therefore she could not be the wife of appellant.

The venue, we think, was sufficiently proved; but, if it was not directly and positively proved, our statute provides, in order to take advantage of this question, there must be a contest over it in the trial court, and the matter preserved by bill of exceptions, in order to take advantage of it on appeal. This question has been frequently so decided under the terms of that statute. Therefore there could be no error in regard to that matter. However, there is one exception to the above statement, and that is: Where the issue was fought out upon the trial as to whether the offense was in the county where the venue was laid or not, we would notice it without requiring a bill of exceptions.

The remaining contention of appellant is that the jury should have been instructed that they could exercise the discretion of sending him to the penitentiary or to the reformatory. This question was fully decided in the original opinion. Appellant was over 16 years of age at the time of the alleged offense, and was, of course, over that at the time of the trial.

There being no sufficient merit in the grounds of the motion for rehearing, it is ordered that it be overruled.

JOHNSON v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 24, 1909.)

1. LARCENY (§ 72*)—VALUE OF GOODS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for theft, under Pen. Code 1895, art. 869, declaring that theft of property of the value of $50 or over shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary not less than 2 nor more than 10 years, a charge failing to require the jury to find the value of the property taken was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 830*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUEST TO CHARGE—EFFECT.

Defendant was charged with the theft of property over the value of $50, in violation of Pen. Code 1895, art. 869, declaring such theft punishable by imprisonment. Defendant requested the court to charge that, when theft of property by the same person and from the same owner is committed on different occasions, each occasion constitutes a distinct offense, and that unless property of the value of $50 was taken at one and the same time defendant must be acquitted. Held that, though such instruction was erroneous in so far that it directed an acquittal if the jury found the value of property taken at any one time to be less than $50, it was sufficient to call the court's attention to error in omitting to require the jury to find the value of the property taken, and to consider such value as an ingredient of the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 830.*]

3. LARCENY (§ 40*)—ISSUES AND PROOF—NATURE OF PROPERTY—GRADE OF OFFENSE.

Whenever punishment is affixed by law to the theft of a particular kind of property, it is unnecessary to either allege or prove the value thereof, the offense being made per se a felony; but with respect to all other classes of property value must be both alleged and proved, as the value determines the grade of the offense and the punishment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

4. LARCENY (§ 23*)—SEPARATE OFFENSE—STEALING DIFFERENT ARTICLES AT DIFFERENT TIMES.

Where different articles are alleged to have been stolen, and the values are fixed of each separate article, the evidence must show the taking of articles of the value of $50 or over at one time to sustain a conviction for felonious theft, under Pen. Code 1895, art. 869, making the theft of property of the value of $50 or over punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Appeal from District Court, Hunt County; R. L. Porter, Judge.

Worth Johnson was convicted of theft, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

H. B. Mock, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. The appellant, Worth Johnson, was convicted in the district court of Hunt county on a charge of theft of property over the value of $50, and his punishment assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for a period of four years. From this conviction he appeals to this court, and seeks a reversal on many grounds, which are quite fully set out in his motion and presented in a brief filed in his behalf.

In the view we have taken of the matter, we deem it unnecessary to notice many of the questions presented, since, in the nature of things, most of them will not likely arise upon another trial. The testimony shows, in substance, that one W. M. McBride was a merchant—a dealer in dry goods—in Greenville, Hunt county, Tex., and that on the second floor of the building occupied by him was located the office of the Southwestern Telephone Company, and that they had a large storage room in the rear of the offices; that between this storage room of the telephone company and McBride's store an opening had been made for light and ventilation to the store below, which opening was covered with a screen wire on a banistering about three feet high; that this wire screen had been there about 3½ years, and during all this time employes of the telephone company had been around and about it. It seems that about the 1st of March, 1909, information came to McBride that certain of his goods were missing. This led to an investigation, and it was discovered that the lacing of the strips of screen wire at one place was laced in a different manner from the other lacing, and that same was loose, or not fastened securely; that this point was directly over the iron safe in the office of the store below. It seems that appellant was an employe of the telephone company and had access to the room in which this screen was located. The state proved by Minnie Smith that she at one time lived in Greenville; that she was an habitué of the Griffin Flats in Dallas, where women of questionable character received their male guests at unseemly hours; and that one night, about March 1st of this year, appellant, who was her guest, had and exhibited to her six new suits of men's clothing, three ladies' skirts, a pair of shoes, some ties, some hose, suspenders, and other sundry articles, all of which were new, which he told her he had won from a dry goods clerk. Some of these articles, which she could use, appellant gave her. The articles which appellant had in his possession, and which this witness says were exhibited to her, were worth largely more than $50. No single one of the articles, however, was worth as much as $50, or anything like it. There is nothing in the evidence to indicate when the articles were taken, or whether they were taken at the same time or at different times. Appellant had opportunity to have taken them on many different occasions.

In this condition of the proof the court gave the following instructions:

"Theft is defined to be fraudulent taking of corporeal personal property belonging to another, from his possession, without his consent, with intent to deprive the owner of the value of the same, and appropriate it to the use or benefit of the person taking.

"If you believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, in the county of Hunt and state of Texas, on or about the day alleged in the indictment, did fraudulently take from the possession of W. M. McBride the property described in the indictment, without the consent of the said W. M. McBride, and with the intent to deprive the said W. M. McBride of the value of the said property, and to appropriate the same to the use and benefit of him, the defendant, and you further believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the said W. M. McBride was at the time the owner of said property, you will find the defendant guilty as charged, and assess his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for not less than two nor more than ten years."

The remaining part of the court's charge was devoted to the matter of explanation of recently stolen property, circumstantial evidence, presumption of innocence, that the jury were the exclusive judges of the facts proved, and including directions as to the form of verdict.

On the trial appellant requested the court to give in charge to the jury the following instruction:

"That theft of property by the same person and from the same owner is committed on different occasions, each occasion constitutes a distinct offense. Therefore, even though you believe that the defendant did take from the possession of W. M. McBride property belonging to him, and that the taking constituted theft, yet, unless you believe beyond a reasonable doubt that property to the value of $50 was taken at one and the same time, you must acquit the defendant; and the burden of proof is upon the state to prove this fact."

In this connection appellant also requested the court to give the following special instructions:

"That theft of property by the same person, and from the same owner, if committed on different occasions, each occasion constitutes a distinct offense.

"Therefore, even though you believe that the defendant did take from the possession of W. M. McBride, property belonging to him, and that the taking constituted theft, yet, unless you believe beyond a reasonable doubt that property to the value of $50 was taken at one and the same time, you must acquit the defendant of theft of property of the value of $50; and the burden of proof is upon the state to prove that the property so taken at one time was of the value of $50.

"Should you find that defendant is not guilty of taking property of the value of $50, but believe that on an occasion as alleged in the indictment, did take property from the possession of the said W. M. McBride of value less than $50, you will find defendant guilty of theft of property under the value of $50.

"Should you find defendant guilty of theft of property, as alleged in the indictment, under the value of $50, the punishment for such offense is by imprisonment in the county jail for any term not exceeding two years, and by fine in any amount not exceeding $500, or by such imprisonment as you may agree upon without fine."

Both of these instructions were by the court refused.

It will be observed that the charge of the court does not require the jury to find the value of the property taken, or to have treated the question of value as an ingredient of the offense. The first special instruction above referred to should not, of course, have been given, since it directs an acquittal in the event the jury find the property taken at any one time to be less than $50. It was sufficient, however, to call the attention of the court to the oversight and error in his charge. The last special instruction requested was correct, and should, in substance, at least, have been given. Article 869 of the Penal Code of 1895 is to this effect: "Theft of property of the value of fifty dollars or over shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than ten years." It is the settled law in this state that, whenever a punishment is affixed by law to theft of a particular kind of property, it is unnecessary to either allege or prove the value of same, because theft thereof is made per se a felony. But in respect to all other classes of property it is both necessary to allege and prove the value, because the value characterizes the grade and the punishment for the theft thereof.

It has been further held that where different articles are alleged to have been stolen, and the values are affixed to each separate article, in order to sustain the conviction for a felonious theft, the evidence must show a taking of articles of $50 or over in value at one and the same time. Lacey v. State, 22 Tex. App. 657, 3 S. W. 343; Clark v. State, 26 Tex. App. 486, 9 S. W. 767; Stallings v. State, 29 Tex. App. 220, 15 S. W. 716; Cody v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 183, 20 S. W. 398; White v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 94, 25 S. W. 290; Hilliard v. State, 37 Tex. 359; Flynn v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 26, 83 S. W. 206; Barnes v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. R. 355, 65 S. W. 922; Keipp v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 417, 103 S. W. 392. In this case there was abundant evidence that appellant had opportunities to have taken these goods on many occasions, and there is little direct evidence that he took all of the articles at the same time, and it was peculiarly necessary and important that this issue should have been submitted to the jury.

As stated, the other matters are not likely to occur on another trial, and need not be noticed.

For the errors pointed out, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded for proceedings in accordance with law.

CALLAGHAN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 24, 1909.)

1. BAIL (§ 89*)—SCIRE FACIAS ON BOND—STATING OFFENSE.

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 479, subd. 4, providing that a citation in proceedings on a forfeited bail bond shall be sufficient if it state the date of the bond and the "offense with which the principal is charged," the offense "swindling," being one which by statute is made a distinct offense eo nomine, it is enough to state the offense in the scire facias as "swindling," without reciting whether it is a felony or misdemeanor, though under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 309, subd. 3, as amended in 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 111, c. 74), the latter recital would also be necessary in the bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bail, Cent. Dig. §§ 384-400; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

2. BAIL (§ 93*)—SCIRE FACIAS ON BOND—JUDGMENT.

It is not necessary that the judgment in scire facias on a forfeited bail bond recite the date of the bond or of rendition of the judgment nisi, so that misrecitals thereof are surplussage and immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bail, Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

Error from District Court, Jasper County; W. B. Powell, Judge.

Scire facias on a forfeited bail bond by the State against J. R. Callaghan and others. From the judgment, said Callaghan brings error. Affirmed.

Dougherty, Conley & Gordon, for plaintiff in error. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. On the 8th day of July, 1907, J. R. Callaghan, with others, became surety on the bond of Joe Davis, who was charged by indictment, duly presented to the district court of Jasper county, with an offense which is thus described in such bond: "With the offense of a misdemeanor, to wit: Swindling property acquired value $15.00." Their principal failing to appear on December 2, 1907, judgment nisi was rendered against Davis and all the sureties in proper form. On the 4th day of May, 1908, scire facias issued to the sureties to show cause why such judgment nisi should not be made final. This scire facias in every respect conformed to the law, unless it be in the description of the offense. It recites that sureties therein named went upon the bond conditioned for the appearance of Davis in a charge wherein said Davis "is charged with the offense of swindling." Thereafter, on the 9th day of December, 1908, the cause came on for trial, and on said day judgment final was rendered against Davis as principal, and all of his sureties, as such, for the sum of $300, the amount of the bond aforesaid. This judgment contains a number of misrecitals; for instance, the date of the bond is alleged to have been July 8, 1908, and that the judgment nisi was rendered on the 2d day of July, 1908.

1. The principal contention of plaintiff in error is that, inasmuch as the scire facias does not in terms set out whether the offense of which appellant was charged was a felony or misdemeanor, it is insufficient; and they rely in support of this contention principally upon the case of Nichols v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 406, 83 S. W. 1113. We do not believe their contention is sound. They seem to overlook the fact that the terms of the statute touching the description of the offense, where such description is required in the bond itself, are different from the language of the law where it is required to be named in the scire facias. In the Nichols Case, supra, it was held that under article 309, subd. 3, of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895, as amended, a bail bond which recites that the principal is charged with embezzlement does not show whether the offense is a felony or a misdemeanor. It is stated in that case that under the old law this would have been sufficient.

Article 309, as provided by the amendment of April 17, 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 111, c. 74), is as follows: "A bail bond shall be sufficient if it contain the following requisites: * * *

(3) If the defendant is charged with an offense that is a felony, that it state that he is charged with a felony. If the defendant is charged with a misdemeanor, that it state that he is charged with a misdemeanor." The old article of the statute, as it theretofore stood, was to this effect: "(3) That the offense of which the defendant is accused be distinctly named in the bond, and that it appear therefrom that he is accused of some offense against the laws of the state." Now, article 479 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895 provides: "A citation shall be sufficient if it contain the following requisites: * * *

(4) It shall state the date of such recognizance or bail bond and the offense with which the principal is charged." Under this article it has been uniformly held that, if the offense charged against the accused be one which is by the statute made a distinct crime eo nomine, it is sufficient to state it by its name, both in the recognizance or bail bond and in the writ of scire facias. Brown v. State, 28 Tex. App. 65, 11 S. W. 1022; La Rose v. State, 29 Tex. App. 215, 15 S. W. 33. This was before the amendment of 1899 touching bail bonds. It will be observed, however, that no corresponding amendment was made in the article of the Code of Criminal Procedure touching the requisites of scire facias.

We can readily understand the importance of bail bonds reciting whether the offense is a misdemeanor or a felony, as that might give direction and control as to the court in which such bond should be returned, and in which the accused would be answerable. There would seem to be little or no reason why in a scire facias such provision should be required, since the scire facias itself gives notice of the court from which it issues and to which answer is to be made. In any event the change was not made, and in line with the unbroken decisions of this court, the offense being described as one known to the law, and one in terms denominated as an offense eo nomine in the decision relied on in the Nichols Case, supra, we think it must be held the scire facias was sufficient.

2. We attach no importance to the fact that in the judgment there are a number of misrecitals as to dates. It is not required that these matters should be recited in the judgment at all. It does by its terms adjudicate and distinctly determine the liability of the parties. The fact that the date of a bond is not correctly recited is a matter of no consequence and importance, and will be treated as mere surplusage. Woods v. Allen, 122 Iowa, 695, 98 N. W. 499.

Finding no error in the proceedings, it is ordered that the judgment be, and same is hereby, in all things affirmed.

WELCH v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909. Motion for Rehearing Dismissed Dec. 1, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 681*) — RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—PRELIMINARY PROOF.

As the state should not be called on to establish a negative as a predicate for the introduction of testimony, the state may prove by a witness the position of the body of decedent, without first showing that it had not been disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1611; Dec. Dig. § 681.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 171*) — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

Where it was shown that the body of decedent, when seen by a witness, had been practically undisturbed, it was not error to permit the witness to prove the position of the body.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 352; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR — ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The error, if any, in allowing evidence to prove a fact established by evidence uncontradicted and not objected to is not ground for reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3137-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 478*)—EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY OF WITNESS.

One who has had experience in handling firearms and in killing hogs and cattle, and who has made frequent observations as to the appearance of bullet wounds of entry and exit, and from such experience can tell which is the wound of entry and which the wound of exit, and he testifies that the wound where the bullet enters is smaller than where it comes out, and that on entering the bullet pushes the flesh inward, and where it comes out it pushes the flesh with its ragged parts outward, is competent to testify which one of the bullet wounds on the body of decedent was the place of entry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1064, 1065; Dec. Dig. § 478.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 670*)—TRIAL—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where the court was not informed as to what a witness would testify to in response to a question objected to, there was no error in sustaining the objection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1593-1596; Dec. Dig. § 670.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 370*)—CREDIBILITY—INTEREST—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Excluded testimony as to the friendship between a state's witness and decedent is immaterial, especially where the witness states that he was friendly with decedent, but afterwards explained that he thought the question related to accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1189; Dec. Dig. § 370.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*)—APPEAL—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the court excluded a conversation introductory to impeaching matter testified to, and the record did not contain a statement of the purport of the introductory conversation, the ruling would not be disturbed, as the court could not assume that the introductory conversation was of such a character as to refresh the memory of the witness or to make more certain his testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3026-3031; Dec. Dig. § 1144.*]

8. WITNESSES (§ 318*)—IMPEACHMENT—SUPPORT OF WITNESS.

Where a witness for accused testified to her recollection of a statement made by accused, without giving the exact words, which she could not remember, and the state on cross-examination only proved her relationship to accused, evidence to support her testimony was inadmissible, as there had been no effort to impeach her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1084-1086; Dec. Dig. § 318.*]

9. WITNESSES (§ 377*)—IMPEACHMENT—SUPPORT OF WITNESS.

A witness for accused may not be supported by proof that on a former trial she had been summoned as a state's witness and had testified for the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1207; Dec. Dig. § 377.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 729*)—IMPROPER CROSS-EXAMINATION—WITHDRAWAL.

Where counsel for the state withdrew the question asked accused as to whether the testimony of his mother and wife, contradicting his testimony, was correct, and requested the court to instruct the jury not to consider the matter, but did not admit that accused's wife had not testified as indicated by the question, and the court gave the requested charge, the conduct of the state's attorney was not ground for reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1692; Dec. Dig. § 729.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 721*)—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL—COMMENT ON FAILURE OF ACCUSED TO TESTIFY—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF ACCUSED.

Where accused, relying on self-defense, testified that decedent cut him across the breast with a knife, cutting through his two top shirts and an undershirt and grazing the skin, and a witness for him merely testified that she had noticed his shirt on the night of the murder, and noticed a place torn in the shoulder of it, questions asked accused on cross-examination as to what persons he had exhibited his clothing, and as to whether at the examining trial his clothing was in the same condition as immediately after the killing, and whether he had ever produced the clothing, or offered it in evidence, were proper, and not open to objection that they alluded to the failure of accused to testify or make any statement at the examining trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1672; Dec. Dig. § 721.*]

12. HOMICIDE (§ 299*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PREVENTION OF ROBBERY.

Where accused testified that, while he and decedent were discussing the sale of a pistol, accused took out his purse, and thereupon decedent grabbed it, or knocked it out of his hands, and that accused remonstrated with decedent, and asked him what he meant, that decedent rushed on accused and struck him with a knife, and that accused immediately ran to his horse, seized his gun, and killed decedent, a correct charge on self-defense, followed by the statement that if the jury believed that, while accused and decedent were discussing the sale of the pistol, accused took out his purse, and that thereupon decedent grabbed it, and that, on accused remonstrating with him, decedent rushed on accused and struck at him with a knife, and that accused immediately ran to his horse, and seized his gun, and killed accused, they should acquit him, sufficiently charged on the issue of robbery, within Pen. Code 1895, art. 675, subs. 1-3, 5, providing that a homicide which takes place in preventing a robbery is justifiable, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 299.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

While the trial court should not hesitate in a proper case to set aside the verdict of the jury, though it is for them to determine the facts, the court on appeal is justified in setting aside the verdict only where it is without any evidence to support it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

14. HOMICIDE (§ 254*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to justify a conviction of murder in the second degree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 254.*]

Appeal from District Court, Uvalde County; R. H. Burney, Judge.

Ed Welch was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. C. Linden, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

RAMSEY, J. On the 5th day of March, 1907, the grand jury of Edwards county returned an indictment against Ed Welch, charging him with the murder of one Ben Tanner. Quite a while thereafter the case was transferred on change of venue to Uvalde county, and a trial there had on April 10th of this year resulted in a conviction of murder in the second degree; the jury assessing appellant's punishment at 25 years' confinement in the state penitentiary.

While not so voluminous, the record in the case contains references to so many points and places that we are not sure that we have wholly and fully comprehended or understood all of them. However, the essential facts are that for some little time before the homicide, which occurred on the 28th day of January, 1907, deceased was making his home at the residence of one W. F. McCulloch, in Edwards county, and had been living there for some little time. He left the McCulloch house early in the morning of January 28, 1907, and did not return. Shortly after dark of that day his body was found near a river or creek, referred to as "Hackberry," some 2½ miles from where McCulloch lived. His body, when found, was lying across the road. There was a shot, evidently a wound of entry, in the back of his head, a larger wound in the forehead, and one near the top of his head. The testimony of the physician called convinces us that these wounds were made by one and the same shot. This witness, on direct examination, gives it as his opinion that the bullet entered the back of the head, ranged downward, and that its course was deflected by it striking a hard bone near the base of the skull, probably splitting the bullet, and causing the wound in the forehead, as well as the wound in the top of the head. By his side, and in the crook of his arm, was found a black-handled knife. There was no evidence showing that this was the knife of deceased; but, on the contrary, the evidence renders it practically certain that he had no such knife. When found, deceased had on a pair of brogan shoes, one of which was on, but unlaced, and the other shoe was only partly on his foot. Witnesses differ somewhat as to just how far the shoes were on; but this probably is a fair summary of all the testimony. The evidence also tended to show that the inside of the pockets of his trousers had been slightly pulled up, and also tended to show that his coat was pulled up somewhat under his back. There was a pocketbook found lying near where the body was found, and also a cartridge which had not been exploded, and near by the shell of an exploded cartridge. The testimony of McCulloch and his wife tends to show that the pocketbook found was the pocketbook of deceased. Appellant's testimony was to the effect that it was his pocketbook. In this pocketbook there were $2 or $3 in silver, a finger ring, which had belonged to appellant, and also two checks payable to him, one for the sum of $35, payable to appellant, and dated on the day of the homicide, and another check for $4, executed by one Hocker to George Welch, and indorsed by him. The evidence also shows, when found, the $35 check, payable to appellant, was at the time indorsed by him. Appellant and deceased were seen by several parties on the day named in company with each other, riding around in the neighborhood close to the place of the killing. About 3 o'clock on this day they were seen by one witness, at which time the deceased had on a pair of boots evidently belonging to appellant, and appellant had on the shoes which undoubtedly belonged to deceased. About a half hour before the body of deceased was found, as stated by F. A. Waddell, appellant came to his house, near where the shooting occurred, and borrowed a Winchester gun from him, and stated that he wanted a gun to go deer hunting. Jim Waddell let him have the gun, in which at the time there were two cartridges. He returned with the gun just about dark, and said he had killed a man. Since, under the contention of appellant, the particular character of this statement becomes important, we will set out at length the testimony of the witnesses whose testimony relates to this matter.

F. A. Waddell testified on this question as follows: "I saw Ed Welch again that afternoon, or evening, after dark. He just walked in, opened the door, and stepped in with the gun in his hand, and he just said, 'Uncle, I have killed a fellow,' and I told him, 'Well, I guess not,' and he said, 'Yes, he is dead all right,' and I said, 'Where did you kill him,' and then he said, 'Up on Beef,' and I didn't know who it could have been, and said, 'I don't know who it could have been,' and then my wife said, 'Who is it that you have killed—Bill McCulloch?' and he said, 'No, it is that other God damn son of a bitch that stays up there.' And then Ed left us. He went out with the gun and started off with the same, and I hollered to him, and told him that I wanted the gun, and then I got the gun from him." Jim Waddell, on this matter, gave the following testimony: "I was present when he came back there, and I heard the conversation where he said that he had to kill a man. I was not in the house when he first came in. I was in the kitchen at that time. I heard him say what he said about it. He said that he hated to kill a man, and my father asked him where he had killed him, and he said up there on 'Beef,' and mother said that it must be Bill McCulloch, and he said, 'No; it is that other fellow that stays up there.' He said that he hated to kill a man, but that he had to do so. He said that the fellow tried to get him, but that he finally got him. I walked out on the gallery at the time he was leaving our house. After the defendant had made the statement in our house, and he walked out on the gallery, I followed him out there, and out there he made more statements with reference to the killing. He said that that fellow tried to sell him an automatic pistol, and that he told the fellow that he did not have enough money to buy it with, and he said that he would sell it to him so damn cheap that he would think he had found it, and then he pulled out his purse, and he grabbed it—that is, Tanner grabbed it. That was all the statement that I remember that he made about it out there on the gallery, and he then left right away.”

Mrs. F. A. Waddell, on the same matter, testified as follows: “I was at our home on the night that Ed Welch came in there. It was the night that Ben Tanner was killed, and I heard him make statement in regard to the killing, and it was made while he was in the house—our house. He said that he had to kill a fellow up on ‘Beef,’ and asked his Uncle Phil to go after him. His uncle said, ‘Maybe you didn’t kill him,’ and he said, ‘Yes; he is dead.’ I told him that I guess it was Bill McCulloch, and he said it was not Bill McCulloch, but that it was that other fellow that stayed down there at McCulloch’s. He said that he hated to kill a fellow, but that he tried to run it over him, and before he would be run over by him he would kill him. He said that he had to kill a fellow; that is, he said that he hated to kill a fellow, but that before he would be run over he would kill him. I do not remember the exact words that were spoken there. He also said that he tried to get him first, but that he finally got him.”

Appellant in his testimony gave a statement much more in detail of the transaction, and his account of it, as taken from his direct examination, is in these words: “When we got down, he pulled off the boots and threw them to me, and then I give him the shoes, and I put on the boots, and was standing up, and he didn’t quite have the shoes on, when he said to me, ‘Kid, let me sell you a damn good automatic pistol,’ and I told him that I could not afford it, and he said that he would sell it to me so cheap that I would think that I had found it, or that I would think that he had given it to me. He said that he would sell it to me so cheap that I would think that he had given it to me. I didn’t ask him what he would take for it, when he told me that he would sell it so cheap. I told him that I would give him $5 for it, and he said, ‘You have not got any money,’ and I told him that I did have some money, and then I pulled out my purse, and he made a grab at it. I pulled a cartridge out with it, out of my pocket. When I pulled out the purse, and he made a grab for it, it was knocked out of my hand, and I never did see it any more, nor did I ever see the cartridge that had fell out. When he grabbed at the purse, I asked him what did he mean, and he said, ‘God damn you, I will show you what I mean,’ and then he made a stab at me with a knife, and then I jumped back and said, ‘Don’t you cut me with that knife,’ and he said, ‘God damn you, I will cut your heart out.’ And then I started for the horses. He hit me one time with the knife, and cut my clothes with same. I didn’t have on a coat, but two over-shirts and an undershirt, and he cut through them all, and just grazed the skin a little bit with the knife. I think that this all was done with just one lick with the knife. I had these shirts with me at the examining trial of this case, and I had them at court on the former trial of my case. They were out in the wagon. Since that time my house burned up, and these clothes were burned with the house. This house was burned up when I was at Rock Springs at court (at the fall term, 1908), at the last time this case was called for trial—last term of court. When I saw that Tanner was after me with a knife, I just jumped back, and when he saw that I was getting near the horse he just jumped back, and started to pick up a rock. I had started for the horse before he picked up the rock. He saw that I was going to get the gun, and just as I got it he got a rock and started up with it. The horses were back about 10 feet from where I was standing when he first cut me. When I had put on the boots and was standing up there, and when I started to get the gun, he jumped back about 10 feet, and there is where he got the rock, and when he just had gotten the rock, he said, ‘God damn you, I will knock your brains out.’ One side of this road there is the south side, and the other the north side. I was on the south side of the road, and Tanner was on the north side of the road. I got the boots on before he got the shoes on. He threw the boots to me, and I put them on, and was standing up, and he was sitting down pulling the shoes on, and we were about in this position when the conversation came up about the pistol. I had a purse with me, and when I pulled the same out he grabbed it. (Witness handed purse.) This is the purse that I had that day. He was sitting down pulling his shoes on, and when I pulled out the purse he just made a grab at it, and knocked it out of my hand. When he jumped and knocked this purse out of my hand, and I said, ‘Tanner, what do you mean?’ is when he said, ‘God damn you, I will show you what I mean,’ and then it was that he struck at me with a knife. He cut through my coat and two shirts, and just grazed the skin a little bit. I said, ‘Tanner, don’t you cut me with that knife,’ and he said, ‘God damn you, I will cut your heart out,’ and then I went back towards the horse. The gun was on the horse—that is, the saddle; and when I got to where the gun was, he saw that I was going to get it before he could cut me, and he went after the rock. He just went back to about where I was putting on the boots, and stooped down for the rock. He was then when I shot him. I just shot one time, and when the bullet hit him he fell."

This, perhaps, is a sufficient statement of the facts of the case to make the opinion understood. On the trial, which was stoutly contested, very many questions arose in respect to the admission and rejection of testimony, which we will discuss in order. We feel confident, however, that in respect to none of them was there any error committed by the trial court.

1. The first objection urged is to the testimony of Mrs. W. F. McCulloch. The state sought to prove, and was permitted to prove, by her the position in which the body of deceased was lying at the time she reached it. This was objected to, because the state had not shown by any testimony that the body had not been disturbed, and the position changed after the killing and before witness saw it. There was no error in the action of the court in this matter. In the nature of things, the state would not be called upon to establish a negative as a predicate for the introduction of testimony. Again, it was shown by other testimony that the body of deceased, when seen by Mrs. McCulloch, had been practically, if not wholly, undisturbed, and the evidence of other witnesses was introduced without objection, showing without contradiction practically every fact, in respect to the position of the body, testified to by this witness.

2. The state introduced the witness W. F. McCulloch, and, among other things, asked him the following question: "Mr. McCulloch, please state which one of the wounds on Ben Tanner's body was the place of entry." To this question, and the answer sought to be elicited thereby, objection was made, for the reason it was leading, and because, further, the witness had not testified that he had ever before examined any wounds upon a human being. The witness had testified that he had had a great deal of experience in handling firearms, and in killing hogs and cattle, and had made frequent observations as to the appearance of wounds of entry and exit, and from such experience could always tell which was the wound of entry and which was the wound of exit. He further stated where the bullet entered it was smaller than where it came out; that on entering the bullet pushed the flesh inward, and where it came out it pushed the flesh with its ragged parts outward. It seems to us clearly that this witness had sufficiently qualified as an expert, and that the testimony was admissible. In this connection it should be stated that the testimony of all the witnesses, including the physician, was substantially to the same effect, and leaves in our minds no doubt that the wound of entry was the bullet hole in the back of deceased's head.

affecting his credibility as a witness, he was asked by counsel for appellant the following question: "Didn't you know, when Ben Tanner was at your place the first time, that he was a fugitive from justice?" The bill recites that, had he been permitted to answer, the witness would have testified that he did learn from Ben Tanner, shortly after he came to his house, that he was, at the time, on the dodge, and a fugitive from justice, and would further have elicited from said witness the fact that, notwithstanding his knowledge that Tanner was a fugitive, he kept him in his house. This evidence was offered, in connection with the statement that McCulloch, being a material witness for the state, and having testified to inculpatory facts against appellant, for the purpose of showing animus, bias, and motive, and as affecting the credibility of the witness McCulloch. The bill of exceptions on this question is approved with this qualification: "There was no statement made to the court, nor was it in any way made known to the court, as recited in this bill, that the said witness would have testified that he knew the deceased was a fugitive from justice and on the dodge." Whatever might be our conclusion in respect to this matter, in the absence of this explanation, it is clear that, as explained by the court, it is without merit.

4. Equally without merit, as explained by the court, is the matter raised by the fourth bill of exceptions. This proposed testimony also relates to the friendship or state of feeling between McCulloch and deceased. In explaining the matter the court says that this witness afterwards stated that he was very friendly with deceased, Tanner, and that in responding to the questions of counsel for appellant he thought that they were asking about Welch. The testimony sought to be elicited was, we think, immaterial.

5. While the witness McCulloch was on the stand, and after he had testified that on the morning of the killing, when deceased left his house, he saw him in possession of a pocketbook, similar to the one exhibited in evidence as being found near the body of the deceased; that before leaving the house he saw deceased take a dime out of the pocketbook and drop it back in his purse, and he heard it fall upon and clink against other money in the purse; that he did not know the amount of money in the purse, but knew there was other money in it—he was then asked upon cross-examination if he had not stated, at the body of deceased, on the morning after the killing, in the presence of W. P. Rose and others, that he knew that deceased only had 15 cents, and that 5 cents of that he was going to use to buy stamps to place upon letters to be mailed by him for the wife of witness, and with the other 10 cents he was going to buy tobacco from Bud Anderson, to which, as recited in the bill, the witness first answered that he did not make such statement, and then stated that he did not remember making such statement. Thereupon W. P. Rose was introduced by appellant, and testified that said witness McCulloch did, at the time and place inquired about, make such statements. The bill further recites that upon cross-examination counsel for the state several times asked said witness Rose if he was not mistaken, and if the statement made by McCulloch was not that deceased had 15 cents and other money, but he did not know how much more he had. To which question the said witness Rose stated that that was not what McCulloch said, but that he had stated, as already claimed by the witness Rose, that he (McCulloch) knew that 15 cents was all the money that deceased had, and the witness Rose further stated: "I know that is what he said, because I remember the conversation and the manner in which the question of deceased's money came up for discussion, and, if you want me to, I can state that conversation, and show you why I know that I am not mistaken." To which state's counsel objected, and said they did not want the conversation. The bill then recites that on redirect examination appellant's counsel offered to prove by said witness Rose, as res gestæ of said impeaching statement, the said conversation introductory of said impeaching matter, to which proposed evidence the state objected, because said conversation was not relevant, and not res gestæ, and the court sustained same. It will be noticed that the conversation referred to, the introductory statement of McCulloch, and which the witness states enables him to be sure that he is not mistaken, is not given. In this respect the bill is clearly defective, and in the absence of a statement of the purport or substance of the conversation we would not be authorized to assume that it was material, or of such character as to refresh the memory of the witness, or to make more certain his testimony; nor could we tell from the bill whether it was res gestæ or not.

6. The next bill complains of the action of the court in refusing to permit appellant to prove by Mrs. Waddell, a witness introduced by him on this trial, that she had been summoned as a witness for the state, and had on a former trial been placed by the state as a witness on the stand in its behalf. Referring to the statement of facts in the case, it appears that the cross-examination of this witness went only to prove relationship, and that she had given in her direct testimony the conversation in the way she heard it, but that she did not remember the exact words; that she had stated all she remembered. There was no effort of impeachment of the testimony of this witness, nor anything in the cross-examination or the record that would in any event have required or justified, or even rendered valuable to appellant, such support of this witness. Besides, it is not believed it would have been proper to have supported the witness in the manner attempted.

7. Appellant complains that on his cross-examination counsel for the state were permitted to ask him the following question: "If your mother and your wife says, or testified, that you did not come back home from the time that you left that morning until about 4 o'clock, is that correct?" This, it is urged, was inadmissible, for the reason that it is incompetent for one witness to testify as to the truthfulness or falsity of the testimony of any other witness; that the state is not permitted to refer to any evidence given at a former trial by any witness, except the one testifying, and then only for the purpose of laying a predicate; that the statement assumed in the question was not true that either the mother or wife of appellant had so testified; and, further, that the question was improper, for the reason it contained a statement in the presence of the jury to the effect that the wife of the defendant had on a former trial made as a witness a damaging, inculpatory statement against him. The bill also recites, in connection with said objections, counsel for appellant tendered proof that the wife of appellant had not testified at all upon the former trial of the case. The bill thereupon recites that counsel for the state withdrew the question, and the court sustained appellant's objection, and orally instructed the jury not to consider said question for any purpose against appellant. This bill is approved, with the following explanation: "When counsel for the defendant objected to the question asked defendant, counsel for state and defendant entered into a discussion about whether or not the defendant's wife had testified at the former trial at all, and, if so, what her testimony was in this matter, and the court refused to hear discussion on the matter, stating that the defendant's objection would be sustained. Whereupon counsel for the state said they would withdraw the question, and requested the court to instruct the jury not to consider the matter for any purpose, which was done. Counsel for the state made no admission to the effect that the defendant's wife had not testified, as the question indicated, and counsel for the defendant did not request the court to so inform the jury, nor to inform the jury that the wife had not so testified, in the former trial of the case. The defendant's wife did testify on the former trial of the case; but what she testified to was not permitted to be stated, nor was it offered to be proven by counsel for defendant." Under the explanation of the court, there was no error committed of which appellant can complain.

8. The remaining bills of exception com-should be stated that appellant testified that Tanner cut him across the breast with a knife, cutting through both his top shirts and an undershirt, and grazing the skin, causing him to bleed. This fact was denied by the state, and the truthfulness of appellant's statement vigorously assailed. No witness was produced by appellant sustaining this statement. The only fragment of testimony that in any way supports this statement is the evidence of Mrs. Waddell, who testified as follows: "I noticed his shirt that night, and noticed a place torn in the shoulder of his shirt. It was just a hole in his shirt there on the shoulder." He was asked to name what person, relative, officer, or citizen to whom he had exhibited this cut place. He was asked whether at the examining trial his clothing was in the same condition it was immediately after the killing. He was asked if he had ever produced these clothes or offered them in evidence, and many similar questions. If this statement was true, undoubtedly it was an important fact in his favor. About the only way the state could question and impeach the correctness and truthfulness of this evidence was by cross-examination substantially along the lines adopted. If his statement was true, it would have been an easy matter to have supported his contention by the testimony of other witnesses. If it were true, it was most natural that he should call attention to the fact to some one. In a matter so vital, the clothes themselves would have carried convincing proof in support of his statement. It seems to us that the testimony was so clearly admissible as to admit of no sort of doubt. It was not open, as the learned court below explained, to the objection that it was an allusion to the failure on the part of appellant to testify or make any statement at the inquest hearing, or, indeed, open to any other objection.

9. The next question to be considered, and, as we believe, the most important question, is one not free from difficulty. It was and is the question most insisted on in oral argument, which was presented on appellant's behalf with great earnestness and ability. That question is the failure of the court, as claimed, to charge the jury the substance of article 675 (and subdivisions 1, 2, 3, and 5 thereof) of our Penal Code of 1895. This article, and the subdivisions named are as follows:

"Art. 675. Homicide is permitted by law when inflicted for the purpose of preventing the offense of murder, rape, robbery, maiming, disfiguring, castration, arson, burglary and theft at night, or when inflicted upon a person or persons who are found armed with deadly weapons and in disguise in the under the following circumstances:

"(1) It must reasonably appear by the acts or by words, coupled with the acts of the person killed, that it was the purpose and intent of such person to commit one of the offenses above named.

"(2) The killing must take place while the person killed was in the act of committing the offense, or after some act done by him showing evidently an intent to commit such offense.

"(3) It must take place before the offense committed by the party killed is actually completed; except that, in case of rape, the ravisher may be killed at any time before he has escaped from the presence of his victim, and except, also, in the cases hereinafter enumerated."

"(5) If homicide takes place in preventing a robbery, it shall be justifiable if done while the robber is in the presence of the person robbed, or is flying with the money or other article taken by him."

From the statement above made, the application and relevancy of this contention will be understood. We think it must be held, in fairness to appellant, that the question of robbery is, in a sense, suggested by the testimony. At the same time, it is not to be denied that all the evidence of robbery is inextricably connected in the testimony of appellant with the issue of either assault to murder or to do serious bodily injury, and the rights of appellant in firing the fatal shot are as inextricably interwoven and connected with his plea of self-defense. The court charged on the doctrine of self-defense, and the charge, as a submission of that issue, is not complained of. If the charge of the court submitted, as well the facts and issues touching robbery, and the existence of the facts out of which robbery could be inferred, it would seem, in reason, that appellant would be without just cause of complaint. Now, then, after instructing the jury in a general way on self-defense, and after applying the doctrine of self-defense to the facts in issue, both as to an actual attack and threatened attack, including the doctrine of reasonable appearances of danger, and the right of appellant to be judged from his standpoint, in connection both with the acts and words accompanying same, considered in connection with the relative size and strength of the parties, the character of deceased, and all the other facts and circumstances known to the defendant, the court then thus instructed the jury: "Or, again, should you believe from the evidence that, while defendant and deceased were discussing some matter about the sale or purchase of a pistol, the defendant took out his money purse, and that thereupon the deceased grabbed at the same, or knocked it out of the hands of the defendant, and that, upon the defendant remonstrating with or asking the deceased what he meant, the deceased rushed upon defendant and struck at him with a knife, and that defendant immediately ran to his horse, seized his gun, and shot and killed said Ben Tanner, then, in case you so find, or if you have a reasonable doubt that such were the facts, or as to the fact that the deceased so attacked the defendant with a knife, you will acquit the defendant." If the issue of robbery or attempted robbery was in the case at all, it arose, and is based on the existence of all the facts referred to in the court's charge, all of which occurred at the same time and as continuous portions of the same transaction.

It will thus be seen that under this instruction, if the jury believed or had a reasonable belief in their minds that, while appellant and deceased were discussing the matter about the purchase of a pistol, appellant took out his money purse, and thereupon deceased grabbed same, or knocked it out of his hands, and thereupon the defendant, remonstrating with or asking him (deceased) what he meant, the deceased rushed upon defendant and struck at him with a knife, and appellant immediately ran to his horse, seized his gun, and shot and killed Tanner, then in case the jury should so find, or if they had a reasonable doubt that such were the facts, or as to the fact that deceased so attacked defendant with a knife, they would acquit him. This charge applies the very facts relied upon by appellant. It is true, it does not in terms instruct the jury that appellant had the right to kill deceased if he believed that he was attempting to rob him; but it does instruct the jury that if the facts touching said robbery testified to are true, then appellant should go acquitted. It also, in another paragraph, instructs the jury that if deceased had picked up a rock, or defendant believed that he had, and was in the act of making an attack upon him, or if it so appeared to him at the time, and he shot deceased, he should be acquitted. This, we think, was quite as favorable a charge to appellant as he was entitled to receive under the law. The issue in fact of the robbery was based upon all the things done and said at the time. An instruction with reference to robbery disassociated from the facts would have been unnecessary and improper. The issue of robbery, if gathered at all from the testimony, is to be gathered from all the facts testified to by appellant. We think the charge, when examined and measured by the facts in evidence, contained such a submission of the case that the jury could not have misunderstood appellant's rights, and could not have been misled thereby, but, on the contrary, when tested in its entirety, stripped of all legal phraseology, in a plain matter-of-fact way, directed the jury that if appellant took his money purse out of his pocket, and deceased grabbed at it or knocked it out of his hands, and when appellant remonstrated with him, and asked him what he meant, deceased rushed upon him with a knife, and appellant immediately ran to his horse, seized his gun, and shot and killed Tanner, he should be acquitted. Nor were the jury in this charge required to find either danger or reasonable appearances thereof. This was appellant's defense. These were the facts testified to by him. Considered as a whole, as stated, we believe the charge of the court is not subject to substantial criticism. In this connection it is to be noted that this statute has not often been construed by the court. The only case in which the matter has been considered, so far as we have been able to find, is the case of Smith v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 14, 19 S. W. 252. In that case Judge Davidson, who wrote the opinion, makes this general reference: "Had Isbell fired the first shot, under the circumstances detailed, the defendant being in the perpetration of robbery, and had death ensued from the effect of such shot, such killing upon the part of Isbell would have been no offense against the law, because our statute expressly provides that, if the homicide takes place in the prevention of robbery, it shall be justifiable if the robber is in the presence of the parties robbed, or is flying with the money or other article taken by him. Pen. Code, 1879, art. 570, subd. 5."

10. The only remaining ground of the motion for a new trial is thus stated by appellant: "The verdict of the jury in the case is contrary to and unsupported by the evidence, in that it absolutely fails to disclose, or even to remotely suggest, any motive for the killing of Ben Tanner, other than that of self-defense, or in the prevention of robbery, as shown by the defendant's own testimony, and the testimony of the state's witness, Dr. P. F. Robertson, whom the state qualified as an expert, both in the use of firearms and as a physician, is positive and uncontradicted to the effect that he probed the wound in the back of the head, and traced its course from the point of entry behind the right ear downwards several inches to the base of the skull, that it did not enter the base of the skull, and that in his opinion the two wounds, one in the top of the head, and the other one in the forehead, were made by the same bullet, which entered behind the right ear, and ranged downward to the base of the skull, and was there deflected and made the other two wounds, which evidence is entirely contrary to the state's theory that at the time of the killing deceased was on horseback, and the defendant, also on horseback, shot him from the rear, and is thoroughly consistent with and corroborative of the defendant's statement of the relative position of the parties at the time of the shooting, as is also the testimony of witnesses as to the finding of the purse and cartridge, and the contents of the purse, found at the feet of deceased." The case is indeed a singular one, and in view of the disparity of the age of the parties, proof of the bad character of Tanner, the deceased, and the lack of clearness of the testimony in respect to motive, we have been led the more carefully to examine the record. We do not believe, however, in view of the entire record, that we would be justified, sitting as a court of appeal, in reversing the judgment on this ground. It will be noticed by the statements heretofore given that the testimony of F. A. Waddell, Jim Waddell, Mrs. F. A. Waddell, and appellant does not wholly agree as to what was the statement made to them by appellant. The testimony of F. A. Waddell contains no suggestion of self-defense or other justification on the part of appellant. It contains such a reference to deceased as a "God damn son of a bitch" as to furnish some evidence of hatred, malice, and ill will. The borrowing of the gun only about a half hour before the fatal shot is strangely at variance with appellant's statement that the parties were intending to go deer hunting. Again, the evidence showed that on the first trial appellant stated that, when he fired the shot which killed Tanner, the "deceased was facing him, and looking him in the face when he shot him"; that "the deceased was in the act of rising up and looking him in the face when he shot him." It is true that the force of this statement is somewhat broken by the cross-examination of the witness as to the meaning of appellant, and that he might have been facing him or had his side to him. It is the peculiar office and duty of the jury to ascertain and determine the facts in every contested case. The trial court should not hesitate, in a proper case, where the jurors have not done their duty, to set aside their verdict. We would only be justified in so doing in a case where the verdict was without any evidence to support it. A careful review of the case has not convinced us that this is such a case.

Finding no error in the record, it is, therefore, ordered that the judgment of conviction be, and the same is, hereby in all things affirmed.

NOTE. This case was decided October 27, 1909, the same being affirmed, and motion for rehearing was filed. While motion for rehearing was pending in this court, the appellant escaped; hence the motion for rehearing was dismissed December 1, 1909.

Davidson, P. J., dissenting.

Application by Enno Cassens for a writ of habeas corpus. Relator remanded to custody.

Willcox & Graves, for relator. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., and W. H. Nunn, Co. Atty., for the State.

BROOKS, J. This is an original application for a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted by Judge W. L. DAVIDSON of this court.

Relator had a complaint filed against him in the justice court of precinct No. 1 of Williamson county, Tex., on the 19th of August, 1905, which complaint charged relator with the offense of selling and giving intoxicating liquors to a minor in justice precinct No. 5 of said Williamson county. On the 21st day of September, 1905, applicant was by the court convicted and fined the sum of $25. An appeal was taken to the county court of said county, and the cause was tried by the court on the 13th day of March, 1906, and applicant was found "guilty as charged in the complaint," and his punishment assessed at $25. Thereupon his appeal was perfected to this court, and was dismissed from this court, on motion of the state, on the ground that a judgment of the justice court, appealed to the county court, is final in the county court, when the amount of the fine is under $100. See 118 S. W. 546. At the time of this alleged offense, the precinct wherein it was alleged said offense was committed was not under the operation of the local option laws of this state. At the time of the trial of relator in the justice court of precinct No. 1, as above stated, the local option laws of this state were not in effect in said county. Soon thereafter, and some four months before the trial of this cause in the county court of Williamson county, the county of Williamson had legally adopted the local option laws of this state, and same were in force and effect in all of Williamson county at the time of the trial of this cause in the county court of said county. At the trial in the county court of relator herein his punishment was assessed at a fine of $25, the judgment reciting that applicant was found "guilty as charged in the complaint." Subsequent to the dismissal of the case from this court, as above stated, applicant was arrested on a writ of commitment and placed in the county jail of Williamson county. The agreed statement of facts further discloses that the facts adduced on the trial of said case, both in the justice and county courts, show a straight sale by this applicant to a minor of two dozen bottles of beer, same being intoxicating liquor, for which applicant received the sum of $3 in payment therefor; that said sale was made in the saloon of applicant, and at the request of said minor, said minor tendering the money in payment therefor, and relator receiving the same.

It will be seen, from an inspection of the above statement of facts, which is practically a copy of the agreed statement, that the complaint upon which applicant was convicted charged him with the selling and giving of intoxicating liquors to a minor, and the judgment of the court convicting him states that he was found "guilty as charged in the complaint." We cannot tell, therefore, whether he was convicted of selling or giving the intoxicating liquor. It is true the facts show that it was a sale. If the court convicted him on a gift, then no possible cavil could be indulged in as to the validity of this judgment under any phase of the question, since there would be no conflict between the local option law and the prosecution of relator for giving intoxicating liquor to a minor, as indicated by some of the decisions of this court. Furthermore, we hold that a writ of habeas corpus is not a writ of appeal. Applicant has had his day in court, and under the Constitution of this state he appealed to the last court authorized to pass upon his case. The questions he suggests for our review would be bare irregularities at best, and would not justify the use of the writ of habeas corpus. There is nothing, furthermore, in the statement to indicate that the questions here relied upon were urged before the trial court. If they were, his judgment upon same could barely be erroneous, and not void, and the writ of habeas corpus, therefore, could not be invoked by relator.

The evidence shows, as above stated, that it was the duty of the relator to show that the local option law was in force at the time the county judge rendered his decision finding applicant guilty. In other words, it is a question of fact, and not of law, as to whether or not a local option election has been held in any county in Texas. The county judge may have held that, although an election had been held, some of its necessary steps had not been complied with; or he may have refused to believe that the evidence warranted the court in concluding there had been a sale of whisky, and believed that the relator had given the prosecuting witness whisky. There is no question but what the county court had jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter. Then any effort to review the decision of the county court, it having jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter, by habeas corpus, would be using the writ of habeas corpus as a writ of appeal. As early in the history of this court as the case of Ex parte Boland, 11 Tex. App. 159, after discussing the writ of habeas corpus at some length, the court uses this language: "From a reasonable application of the rules of law above laid down, we conclude, without further amplification, that the process by which the relator was held when the writ of habeas corpus was sued out was not a void process, and that habeas corpus would not relieve him against its operation. When the original case was before the county court on the defendant's appeal, he then had his day in court, and, for aught that appears from the proceedings before us, all the questions presented by his petition for habeas corpus could then have been presented and decided by the county court, and such a decision would have been within the jurisdiction of the county court. And it appearing that the county court had jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, as well as of the matter in litigation, whatever defense he had it became his duty to submit to that court and at that time; and if by the Constitution and the law he was not entitled to a further appeal he is without remedy, and the writ of habeas corpus cannot be invoked to relieve him from custody, he being confined on account of his failure to pay a pecuniary fine imposed against him on a regular trial before a court of competent jurisdiction."

This decision clearly settles the contention against applicant. The judgment was not void, but merely voidable at best, and we have held repeatedly since the rendition of the above-cited decision that a writ of habeas corpus cannot be used as a writ of appeal, but only in those cases where the judgment is absolutely void. The judgment of the county court in this case was not void, but at best merely voidable. This court cannot review, under a habeas corpus, a judgment of the court below, because the court below erred in construing or applying the facts, or that the court's findings were contrary to the facts. It was a question of fact, as stated above, as to whether the local option law was in force at the place where applicant is alleged to have sold the whisky or given the whisky to the minor, and, being a question of fact, the court passed on the fact and the law incident to that fact, and found applicant guilty. We do not deem it necessary to further elaborate on the question, but cite the following authorities cited

2 Tex. App. 74; Ex parte Dickerson, 30 Tex. App. 448, 17 S. W. 1076; Ex parte Call, 2 Tex. App. 497; Ex parte McGrew, 40 Tex. 476; Griffin v. State, 5 Tex. App. 457; Darrah v. Westerlage, 44 Tex. 389; 21 Cyc. p. 326; Donaldson v. State, 15 Tex. App. 25.

Relator is remanded to the custody of the officers.

DAVIDSON, P. J. (dissenting). I respectfully enter my dissent from the conclusion reached by the majority. The agreed statement of facts shows that local option was and had been in effect for several months at the time the applicant was convicted in the county court, that said conviction was for selling intoxicants to a minor, that it was done in applicant's saloon, and that the minor paid for the beer in the saloon at the time of the purchase. There is no question raised, and no fact suggested, that applicant gave to the minor any intoxicants; but the facts show, as agreed to, that it was a sale, and not a gift. These facts being admitted and agreed to as being true, they are, therefore, binding upon this court and the parties to the record. It is upon the facts made by the record the case can only be tried, and not what might have been the facts.

1. When local option goes into effect in a given territory, it repeals, suspends, or puts out of operation all other laws in regard to the selling of intoxicants in the territory where such local option law is put into effect. No other law in regard to sales, except the local option law itself, could legally exist in the given territory. This is, and has been, the rule in Texas since Robertson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 155. The authorities on this question are unbroken. There has never been a variation from this doctrine, nor is there found in the books a dissenting opinion from the proposition.

2. Where a law has been repealed, under which a prosecution is had, at the time of the trial, the case must go off the docket. A conviction cannot be had, for there is no law authorizing the prosecution, nor is there any statute which would justify the prosecution or the conviction. This is statutory. See White's Pen. Code, art. 16, § 28, for collated authorities. Article 16, supra, reads as follows: "The repeal of a law, where the repealing statute substitutes no other penalty, will exempt from punishment all persons who may have offended against the provisions of such repealed law, unless it be otherwise declared in the repealing statute." The courts have held, construing this statute, that where a case is appealed, and, pending such appeal, the law is changed, the appellate court must dispose of the case under the law in force when the decision is rendered; and, if the law has been repealed, no

State, 16 Tex. App. 53; Whisenhunt v. State, 18 Tex. App. 491; Woodlief v. State, 21 Tex. App. 412, 2 S. W. 812; Wells v. State, 24 Tex. App. 230, 5 S. W. 830; Dawson v. State, 25 Tex. App. 670, 8 S. W. 820; Robinson v. State, 26 Tex. App. 82, 9 S. W. 61; Lawhon v. State, 26 Tex. App. 101, 9 S. W. 355; Ex parte Oox, 28 Tex. App. 537, 13 S. W. 862; Kenyon v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 13, 23 S. W. 191. This has been held even where the repeal of a civil statute repeals the penalties imposed with regard to its enforcement. There can be no penalty or criminality in violating a repealed statute. State v. Robinson, 19 Tex. 479; Etter v. Ry. Co., 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 61.

It will be observed, in this connection, that where, in regard to sales to minors, the local option law has been put into effect in a given territory, there is no provision in the local option law keeping alive pending cases for sales to minors. This being the legal rule, when local option went into effect, the law with reference to sales to minors is abolished. See Atkinson v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 229, 79 S. W. 81. There is, therefore, no predicate under the facts or the law which would justify the county court in trying applicant for a sale to a minor months after the local option law had set aside and superseded the law with reference to sales to minors in the given territory. Referring to this, it is shown by the record that at the time applicant was tried in the justice court local option law was not in effect, but at the time he was tried in the county court the local option law had been in effect for several months. The conclusion, therefore, is inevitable that at the time applicant was tried in the county court the local option law had superseded the law with reference to sales to minors, and therefore he could not be tried or punished for selling to the minor.

3. A writ of habeas corpus will lie to release from custody, when punishment is sought where there is no statute on which to predicate the prosecution, or where the statute has been repealed, unless the prosecutions under the former law are kept alive by some provision of the repealing statute. There must be a law authorizing a prosecution before a citizen of this state can be punished. A repealed statute cannot form the basis of a prosecution, and here there was no substitute punishment for sales to minors in the local option territory, nor any provision keeping the prior cases in existence, or authorizing their prosecution or punishment. Under such circumstances the judgment is necessarily void, if a conviction is had, for the obvious reason that there was no law under which the party could be tried and punished. This is not a mere irregularity, nor is the judgment simply voidable. If this proposition is not correct, then any citizen can be punished without a law authorizing the punishment, nor would it be an irregularity simply, because he could not for any reason take an appeal from the conviction. The judgment would be void for want of a law authorizing the prosecution and punishment. It is not correct to say, under these circumstances, that the conviction and punishment would be but an irregularity. The question is jurisdictional. The court would not have jurisdiction, under such circumstances, of the subject-matter, and could not render any judgment in the case. Why? First, because there is no law under which the prosecution can be maintained or the punishment inflicted; second, the court could not obtain jurisdiction of the person; third, it could not obtain jurisdiction of the subject-matter, for there is no subject-matter to which the jurisdiction of the court could attach; fourth, it could not render any judgment for want of a law authorizing the prosecution and conviction, and no court ought to punish without having a law under which to try and punish. See White's Ann. Code Cr. Proc., art. 150, subs. 6 and 7 of the notes, for collated authorities.

This has been the invariable rule in this as well as the Supreme Court at least since the case of Ex parte Degener, 30 Tex. App. 566, 17 S. W. 1111. It has always been held that on habeas corpus a judgment can be attacked, if void, as well as for the reasons above stated. The want of statutory penal law would render the judgment of conviction necessarily void. Under a writ of habeas corpus the court can look behind the judgment in such cases. Many of these cases will be found collated in applicant's brief. See, also, Ex parte Parker, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 12, 29 S. W. 480, 790. An indictment by a grand jury composed of more or less than 12 jurors is violative of the Constitution and laws of this state. Hence the indictment and conviction in that character of case would be void, and an inquiry can be had into this state of case by evidence, and, if the fact is so found, the judgment will be set aside, and the party released on habeas corpus; for in such state of case the indictment and conviction would be void. It would not be a mere irregularity. This is true, although the party may have had the benefit of his appeal, and lost by reason of an affirmance. In other words, if the facts are such as to justify holding the judgment void, the writ of habeas corpus will authorize going behind the judgment and inquiring into the facts. Ex parte Parker, supra; Ex parte Ogle, 61 S. W. 122; Ex parte Reynolds, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 437, 34 S. W. 120, 60 Am. St. Rep. 54; Lott v. State, 18 Tex. App. 627; McNeese v. State, 19 Tex. App. 49; Smith v. State, 19 Tex. App. 95; and numerous other cases not necessary here to collate.

If the agreed statement of facts is true, and it is conceded to be true by parties to the record, this judgment in the county court was rendered under a law that had been vacated, repealed, or put out of existence by reason of putting the local option law into effect. The local option law, under such circumstances, had superseded the law in regard to selling to minors months before the trial and conviction in the county court, and it is immaterial whether the question was there raised or not, as in the case of a vicious judgment under a void indictment found by more or less than 12 grand jurors.

For the reasons indicated, I cannot agree with my Brethren, and firmly believe that applicant is entitled to be discharged from custody; and this too, although he had appealed to this court, and the appeal had been dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 54*)—LIMITED LIABILITY—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.

A telegraph company cannot contract to relieve itself from liability for its own negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. §§ 39-47; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

4. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 54*)—EXCHANGE OF BUSINESS—JOINT ENTERPRISE—LIMITED LIABILITY STIPULATIONS.

Where two telegraph companies, one doing business wholly in Texas and the other outside, contracted to interchange business on a basis of a division of tolls, all messages to points beyond the lines of one being turned over for transmission over the wires of the other, both were responsible to third persons dealing with either as to messages handled by both; and hence a stipulation on the reverse side of a message, attempting to restrict the liability of the Texas Company so that, in transmitting a message over any other line, the Texas Company would act as the sender's agent, and would not be liable for default or negligence on any part of such other line, was not available as a defense by the Texas Company to an alleged liability for the negligence of the connecting company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

On rehearing. Motion overruled.

For former opinion, see 121 S. W. 358.

KEY, J. This motion has received careful consideration, and we have reached a conclusion that this court fell into error when it held that the stipulation on the reverse side of the written message could not be considered because it does not appear from the statement of facts that it was put in evidence. The defendant pleaded the existence of the stipulation referred to, and to the effect that it limited its liability to its own line and relieved it from liability on account of delay or negligence by any other line over which the message might be sent. As stated in the original opinion, the plaintiff in a supplemental petition set up substantially the same facts as to what was printed upon the reverse side of the message. By force of article 1193 of the Revised Statutes the burden rested upon the defendant to make the proof of the stipulation referred to, unless it was expressly admitted by the plaintiff. In our former opinion we held that the mere setting out of the stipulation referred to in the plaintiff's supplemental petition, while constituting an implied admission, did not constitute an express admission. In reaching that con-

Upon further consideration we have reached the conclusion that we committed error in that respect. We are now of opinion that such rigid and narrow construction should not be placed upon the statute referred to, and that it should be held that, when a party has, in clear and unmistakable terms, alleged in his pleading the same facts which have been alleged by his adversary, he thereby expressly admits the existence of such facts. This ruling renders it necessary for us to consider and construe the contract then in force relating to traffic arrangements between the two defendants, and determine whether or not it shows such relations between them as will justify the fourth paragraph of the court's charge.

That contract reads as follows:

"This agreement made and entered into this 19th day of October, 1906, by and between the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of New York, party of the first part, and the Postal Telegraph Cable Company of Texas, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Texas, party of the second part, hereinafter referred to as the Postal Company and the Texas Company, respectively, witnesseth:

"Whereas, the Postal Company and its allied companies have in operation a system of telegraph lines extending throughout the United States—except that part thereof covered by the lines of the Texas Company as hereinafter specified; and

"Whereas, the Texas Company has a system of telegraph lines extending through the states of Texas, Louisiana (west of the Mississippi river to New Orleans) and Arkansas, and in Oklahoma Territory and Indian Territory, and in Missouri and Kansas south of the existing lines of the Postal Company at St. Louis, Missouri; Kansas City, Missouri; Emporia, Kansas; Wichita, Kansas, and Dodge City, Kansas (said lines being east of the one hundredth meridian of longitude) and extending to a connection with the Postal Company's offices at Memphis, Tennessee, New Orleans, Louisiana, and Wichita, Kansas; and

"Whereas, the parties hereto as independent connecting lines desire a transfer of commercial and other telegraph business between the points composing their respective systems;

"Now, therefore, in consideration of the covenants and agreements hereinafter specified to be performed and observed by each of them and for other valuable considerations moving from each of said companies to the other, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged by each of them, the parties hereto agree with each other as follows:

"First. Each of the parties hereto, since neither of them has telegraph facilities in the territory occupied by the other and since to reach such territory it must avail itself of some independent connecting line, agrees to transfer to the other at Memphis, Tennessee, or at New Orleans, Louisiana, or at Wichita, Kansas, for further transmission by the other as an independent connecting line, all telegraph and cable business that it (the party with which the business originates) may be able to obtain or control destined to points on the lines or connections of the other party, including all cablegrams and all telegraph business which shall come to it from any other connecting lines; but this contract is not intended to have such effect as to make either of the parties hereto the agent or representative of the other, nor shall it be so construed.

"Second. The Postal Company agrees to furnish in its offices at Memphis, Tennessee, and New Orleans, Louisiana, the operators necessary in said offices for the proper transmission and receipt upon the Texas Company's wires to and from the offices of the Texas Company of the transferred telegraph messages herein provided for and, also, of telegrams between said cities and offices on the lines of the Texas Company. The Postal Company agrees to also furnish in said cities the messengers and other employees and facilities necessary for the prompt and proper collection and delivery of all telegraph business between said cities and points on the lines of the Texas Company; and the Texas Company in consideration thereof hereby agrees to pay to the Postal Company for maintenance and operating (including the cost of main battery) of the Postal Company's offices in the cities of Memphis, Tennessee, and New Orleans, Louisiana, which the receipts accruing to the Texas Company at the said cities, respectively, shall bear to the receipts therein accruing to the Postal Company. By 'receipts' as last above used is meant receipts from telegrams originating at or destined to New Orleans or Memphis as the case may be.

"Third. It is mutually agreed that the wires of the Texas Company may be connected at said transfer points to such wires of the Postal Company as the latter company may designate, so as to form a direct circuit or circuits between offices on the lines and connections of the Postal Company and offices on the lines of the Texas Company, at such times and in such manner as may be designated by the Postal Company, it being understood and agreed that all telegrams handled on said direct circuits between offices on the lines of the one company and offices on the lines of the other company shall be considered as having been transferred at said transfer points.

"Fourth. (1) It is understood and agreed that all tolls and revenues on telegrams handled between offices of the Texas Company along its own lines shall be fixed by and shall belong to the Texas Company, and all tolls and revenues on telegrams handled between offices of the Postal Company along its own lines shall be fixed by and shall belong to the Postal Company. The offices at Memphis, Tennessee, and at New Orleans, Louisiana, shall be offices of the Postal Company but all tolls and revenues on telegrams between Memphis, Tennessee, and New Orleans, Louisiana, respectively, and points on the Texas Company's lines, shall be fixed by and belong to the Texas Company, and all tolls and revenues on telegrams handled between said cities and points on the lines and connections of the Postal Company shall be fixed by and shall belong to the Postal Company.

"(2) The total tolls on transferred through telegrams shall be computed by adding together the respective local tolls of the parties hereto from the point of origin to the transfer point and from the transfer point to destination in each case, except when the parties hereto shall mutually agree upon a lower through rate than the rate so obtained; provided, however, that nothing in this contract shall prohibit the contracting parties from making by mutual agreement such rates on through telegrams as will enable them to meet competition on said through telegrams, and provided further that if it shall be necessary for any message to pass over the lines of one or more companies other than those of the parties to this contract, then the local tolls of such one or more other parties shall be added to the aggregate of the local tolls of the parties hereto in computing the total through tolls on said message.

"(3) Tolls on said transferred telegrams shall be divided as follows: After deducting from the total tolls on transferred telegrams (including commercial messages, market quotations, newspaper matter and cablegrams) destined to or originating at offices on the lines and connections of the Postal Company located west of the Mississippi river or south of the Potomac and Ohio rivers, and also the cities of Washington, D. C., and Cincinnati, O., the proportion of said total tolls that the Postal Company must pay or account for to other connecting lines, the balance of said total tolls shall be equally divided between the parties hereto one-half to each—except as otherwise herein specifically provided.

"(4) After deducting from the total tolls on transferred telegrams (including commercial messages, market quotations, newspaper matter and cablegrams) originating at or destined to offices on the lines and connections of the Postal Company east of the Mississippi river and north of the Potomac and Ohio rivers, not including said cities of Cincinnati and Washington, the proportion of said total tolls that the Postal Company must pay or account for to other connecting lines, the Texas Company shall have forty

"(5) It is understood and agreed specifically that offices on the lines of the Pacific Postal Telegraph Cable Company, the North American Telegraph Company, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, excepting connecting offices between the Postal Company and the said Pacific Postal, North American and Canadian Pacific Railway, are not to be considered as offices on the lines of the Postal Company herein referred to. The division of tolls between the parties hereto and the Pacific Postal, North American and Canadian Pacific Railway shall be as follows: The Texas Company shall have thirty three and one-third per cent. (33 $\frac{1}{3}$ %) of the total tolls on telegrams between points on its lines and points on the lines of the North American Telegraph Company; thirty three and one-third per cent. (33 $\frac{1}{3}$ %) of the total tolls on telegrams between points on its lines and points on the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in British North America; and sixteen and one-quarter per cent. (16 $\frac{1}{4}$ %) of the total tolls on telegrams between points on its lines and points on the lines of the Pacific Postal Telegraph Cable Company.

"Fifth. The Texas Company and the Postal Company agree each to render to the other monthly statements of all business transacted between the offices of said companies, respectively, and each party agrees to pay over to the other promptly at the end of each month any balance that may then be due and payable under the terms of this agreement.

"Sixth. (1) Each of the parties hereto hereby assume all responsibility for damages resulting from error, delays, nondelivery or other defaults in the transmission of telegraph business under this agreement that may be occasioned by the fault of its own employes (and in case the responsibility for such default cannot be located, it is mutually agreed that any damages or liabilities resulting therefrom shall be divided and borne by the parties hereto in the same proportion as the tolls were divided from the telegrams defaulted upon).

"(2) Neither party hereto shall be liable to the other for loss or damage resulting from interruptions to lines which could not with reasonable care or promptness have been avoided or repaired, and each party hereto agrees to repair with the utmost diligence any interruption to its telegraph lines herein mentioned.

"Seventh. This agreement shall be binding upon the parties hereto and upon their respective successors and assigns (it being understood and agreed that the Postal Company and its allied companies shall be considered as one and the same company) and shall be and continue in full force and effect from the date hereof until the 11th day of May, may be terminated forthwith by the Postal Company."

While it is declared in the first subdivision thereof that the contract is not intended to make either party the agent or representative of the other, and that it shall not be construed to have that effect, still we are of opinion that, when all of its terms are considered, it discloses such a joint enterprise between the two companies as will render each responsible to third parties for the negligence of the other. This contract is more than an ordinary traffic arrangement stipulating for a division of tolls. By the second subdivision the two companies share the expense of maintaining offices in Memphis, Tenn., and at New Orleans, La. That, as well as other stipulations, indicates that the two companies were engaged in a joint enterprise when they handled messages passing over both lines, as did the message in this case.

We also attach importance to the first paragraph of the sixth subdivision by which it is stipulated that each company assumed all the responsibility for damages resulting from errors, delays, nondelivery, or other defaults occasioned by its fault, and that if the responsibility for such default cannot be located, any damages or liabilities resulting therefrom shall be divided and borne by the two companies in the same proportion as the tolls are divided from the telegram defaulted upon. If the preceding stipulations in the contract created such relations between the two companies as to render each and both liable to third parties for the negligence of each company, it was not within the power of the two companies to ward off or diminish such liability by stipulating that the one in default should pay the damage; and therefore it is not to be presumed that the stipulation referred to was incorporated in the contract for that purpose, and especially so when another and legitimate purpose can be assigned therefor. Instead of assigning to that stipulation a purpose to affect and curtail the rights of third persons, which the contracting parties had no power to do, it is much more reasonable to assume that it was placed in the contract upon the assumption that both of the companies would be liable to third parties for the default of each, and therefore it was necessary to have an understanding between the two companies as to how much of the damages resulting from such defaults should be charged against each company in settling their own affairs. The testimony shows some delay and default by each company, and it would be difficult, if not impossible, to determine how much of the injury sustained by the plaintiff resulted from the separate default of each company. Hence

It would seem that this case falls within the class of cases contemplated in the latter part of the first paragraph of the sixth section of the contract, wherein it is stipulated that the damages are to be borne by the two companies in proportion to the tolls received from the telegram defaulted upon. It is the settled law in this state that a telegraph company cannot contract so as to relieve itself from liability for its own negligence, and, the two companies in this case being engaged in such a joint enterprise as to render both responsible to persons dealing with either concerning messages to be handled by both, we hold that the stipulation on the reverse side of the message, attempting to restrict the liability of the Texas Company, was not available as a defense, and the trial court properly instructed the jury that the Texas Company would be liable for the failure of the other defendant to exercise proper care in transmitting and delivering the message.

Motion overruled.

ADAMS v. INTERNATIONAL & G. N. R. CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 12, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 8, 1909.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 410*) — CORROBORATION — PROOF OF GOOD CHARACTER.

A mere contradiction of a witness does not justify proof of good character for truth and veracity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1284; Dec. Dig. § 410.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 330*) — NEGLIGENCE OF SERVANT—HABITS AND REPUTATION.

Where an engineer was charged with negligently operating a train, and thereby causing a horse on a public road to run away, proof that the engineer had the reputation of being a careful and prudent engineer was inadmissible, as no amount of skill could exonerate him from the charge of negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1271; Dec. Dig. § 330.* Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 240; Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 232.]

3. RAILROADS (§ 397*) — NEGLIGENT OPERATION OF TRAINS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in an action against a railroad for personal injuries resulting from the frightening of a horse on the highway, causing it to run away, there was evidence that the cylinder cocks of the engine were open, and that steam poured out, frightening the horse, it was proper to permit the engineer to testify that he always worked steam until he got started in leaving a town, and then shut it off before he reached the place of the accident, to diminish the probability that he had left the cocks open at the time of the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1344; Dec. Dig. § 397.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 397*) — NEGLIGENT OPERATION OF TRAINS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where an engineer was charged with negligently operating a train by permitting the escape of steam in unusual quantities, and thereby causing injury to plaintiff from the frightening of his horse on a public road near the track, it was error to allow the engineer to testify that in his 40 years' experience as engineer he did not recall a single instance of having frightened a horse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1344; Dec. Dig. § 397.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 360*) — RUNNING OF TRAINS—FRIGHTENING ANIMALS—CARE REQUIRED.

A railroad need not watch for persons along and near its right of way, but trainmen, becoming aware of the presence of a person on a highway near the track, and that his horse is frightened at noises made by escaping steam, thereby placing such person in peril, must desist from making such noises, if it can be done consistently with their other duties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1241-1243; Dec. Dig. § 360.*]

6. RAILROADS (§ 360*) — RUNNING OF TRAINS—FRIGHTENING ANIMALS—CARE REQUIRED.

Where a public road ran along a railroad track, and trainmen negligently allowed the engine to make unusual and unnecessary noises in approaching that locality, and such noises were calculated to, and did, frighten the horse of a traveler on the road, causing injury to the traveler, the railroad was liable, though the employees did not see the traveler and did not realize his perilous position.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1241-1243; Dec. Dig. § 360.*]

7. RAILROADS (§ 360*) — RUNNING OF TRAINS—FRIGHTENING ANIMALS—LIABILITY.

A railroad is not liable ordinarily for the frightening of horses by the operation of its trains in the usual manner, but it is liable for the results of such frightening by unnecessary and unusual whistling or letting off of steam, under circumstances amounting to negligence or willfulness.

Appeal from District Court, Anderson County; B. H. Gardner, Judge.

Action by Joe Adams against the International & Great Northern Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Campbell, Sewell & Strickland, for appellant. King & Morris, for appellee.

FLY, J. This is a suit for damages, instituted by appellant, a minor, through his next friend, Maggie Adams, against appellee, which he alleged accrued from injuries inflicted through the negligence of appellee's employees. It was alleged that appellant was riding along a public road near Palestine, which ran along the side of and near appellee's track, and that when a train was passing along the track near him, the employees "did negligently and carelessly cause and permit a great quantity of steam to escape from the lower portion or side of said engine, and on the side upon which plaintiff was riding, causing a great and unusual and unnecessary noise, and causing said steam to be thrown and blown in the direction of the horse upon which plaintiff was riding, and that by reason of such negligence on the part of said railroad company, its servants, agents, and employees, said horse became frightened and unmanageable, and he began to rear, shy, and run, and, notwithstanding defendant's said servants, agents, and employes saw plaintiff and his said horse, and the frightened condition of said horse and the perilous condition of plaintiff, or by the use of ordinary care could have seen them and discovered plaintiff's perilous situation, said engine was permitted to continue the emission of great volumes of steam in the direction of plaintiff and his said horse, and the frightening and unusual and unnecessary noises caused thereby were permitted to continue until said engine reached a point about, if not quite, opposite plaintiff and his said horse, or so near to them as to cause said horse to become badly frightened, and by reason of all of which plaintiff lost control of said horse, and he ran away and plunged madly into a barbed wire fence near said public road, became entangled in said wire, cutting and tearing himself in said wire, so that as a result thereof he died in a few moments thereafter; that when said horse ran into said wire fence, plaintiff was thrown and dragged against said fence with great force and violence, and as a result thereof plaintiff was badly and seriously cut, torn, lacerated, and bruised about his face, head, arms, hands, back, and legs and on the bones and sinews thereof." The cause was submitted to a jury, and a verdict returned in favor of appellee, and upon the judgment based thereon this appeal has been perfected.

It appears from the evidence that there was a cut under the railroad of appellee, near Palestine, through which ran a public road, and which, going in the direction of Palestine, ran from the tunnel or cut directly along the right of way of appellee, and not more than 40 or 50 feet from the middle of the track. Going from Palestine there was a sharp incline of the railroad track from an elevation down towards the tunnel or cut, and it was in evidence that it was unnecessary and unusual "to work steam" in going down that incline. Appellant testified that he was on his way to Palestine, and had passed under the railroad, by way of the cut, and was riding, on a gentle horse, along the public highway close to the fence of the right of way, a barbed wire fence being on the other side of the road, when a train came down the incline working steam, and that his horse became frightened and unmanageable, and jumped into the barbed wire fence and killed himself and injured appellant. No witness directly contradicted the statement of appellant that steam was noisily pouring out of the cylinder cocks of the locomotive on the downgrade towards the cut, not even the engineer and fireman swearing that it was not so escaping; their testimony going no further than as to the habit and custom of the engineer in not emitting steam on the downgrade.

With the facts as stated, appellee was permitted, over the objection of appellant, to prove that Converse, the engineer, had the reputation of being a careful and prudent engineer. No attack had been made upon his competency and skill as an engineer, unless evidence of his negligence on that occasion should be so considered. That it was not is clear, for he might have been an expert engineer and still have been guilty of negligence of the grossest kind. It is the rule in this state that mere contradiction between witnesses will not justify proof of good character for truth and veracity (Railway v. Raney, 86 Tex. 363, 25 S. W. 11), and the same rule should prevail in cases like the present, and it is no answer to a charge of negligence to prove that the witness knew all about the business. The engineer was not charged with being ignorant, but with being careless, and no amount of skill could exonerate him from that charge. "When the precise act or omission of a defendant is proven, the question whether it is actionable negligence is to be decided by that act or omission, and not by the character for care and caution that the defendant may sustain." Tenney v. Tuttle, 1 Allen (Mass.) 185. The quoted language has been approved by the courts of Texas. Railway v. Johnson, 92 Tex. 280, 48 S. W. 563; Railway v. Finley, 110 S. W. 531.

In answer to the testimony of appellant that the cylinder cocks were open and steam pouring out, it was proper to allow the engineer to testify that in leaving Palestine, and going north toward the place where the injury occurred, he always worked steam until he got started, and then shut it off before he reached the place of the injury. His habit or custom was permissible in evidence as tending to diminish the probability that he had left the cocks open on the occasion in question. 1 Wigmore, Ev. §§ 92, 93.

It was error to permit the engineer to testify that in his 40 years' experience as an engineer he did not recall a single instance of having scared a horse and caused it to run away and hurt people. The inquiry was as to whether he had scared appellant's horse, and not as to those that he had not frightened. The probabilities are that the testimony had its effect upon the jury.

In view of another trial it may be stated that appellee was under no obligation to watch for persons along and near its right of way; but, if the employes became aware of the presence of appellant, and that his horse had become frightened at noises made by the escape of steam, and that appellant was placed in peril thereby, it was their duty to desist from making such noises, if it could be done consistently with their other duties. Hargis v. Railway, 75 Tex. 19, 12 S. W. 953; O'Dair v. Railway, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 539, 39 S. W. 242; Railway v. Carruth, 50 S. W. 1036.

There is another principle of law that may become applicable to the facts of this case, and that is that a railway company, knowing that a public highway runs near its track, along which people are constantly traveling, may become liable for damages arising from frightening animals, ridden or attached to vehicles, by causing unusual and unnecessary noises in the operation of its train; or, to apply the principle to the facts of this case, if there was a public road, as testified by appellant, running along the side of the right of way in a few feet of the railroad track, along which people passed in going to and from the town of Palestine, and appellee's employes negligently emitted unusual and unnecessary noises in approaching that locality, which noises were calculated to and did frighten appellant's horse so that he was damaged thereby, appellee would be liable for such damages, although the employes may not have seen appellant and realized his perilous position. The negligence would arise in the one case from a negligent operation of the train, and in the other by reason of discovered peril. If it was unnecessary to have the cylinder cocks open on a down-grade, and steam was being emitted therefrom, and appellee could have reasonably anticipated that horses moving along the public highway would be frightened thereby, such conduct would be negligent, and appellee would be liable for the consequences flowing therefrom. A railroad company is not liable ordinarily for the frightening of horses caused by the operation of its trains in the usual and customary manner, but it is liable for the results of such frightening produced by unnecessary and unusual whistling or letting off of steam under such circumstances as to constitute negligence or willfulness. Elliott, Railroads, § 1264; Shear. & Red. § 428; Lamb v. Railroad, 140 Mass. 79, 2 N. E. 932, 54 Am. Rep. 449; Railway v. Clarke, 35 Neb. 867, 53 N. W. 970, 23 L. R. A. 504; Railway v. For the errors herein specified, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

1. WITNESSES (§ 240*)—EXAMINATION—LEADING QUESTIONS.

The question, in an action for ejecting a passenger: "Did said trainman abuse or lay hands on or otherwise assault plaintiff in any manner, or did he not do so"—is leading, and its answer properly excluded.

2. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—FAILURE TO GIVE REQUEST.

Where an instruction as to the care due a passenger was correct as far as it went, complaint cannot be made that it did not impose a sufficiently high degree of care, in the absence of a special request for the instruction desired.

3. CARRIERS (§ 282*)—CARE DUE PASSENGERS—FORFEITING RIGHTS AS PASSENGER.

Where, in an action by a mother for injuries inflicted on her by the carrier's employes while ejecting her ten year old son from a train, it appeared that plaintiff wrongfully refused to pay fare for the son and forcibly resisted his eviction, she forfeited her rights as a passenger, and was only entitled to ordinary care for her safety.

Appeal from District Court, Potter County; J. N. Browning, Judge.

Action by Adella Williamson against the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. C. Barrett, J. A. Templeton, J. Marvin Jones, and H. H. Cooper, for appellant. Lasiter & Harrison and Turner & Boyce, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. Appellant, accompanied by her minor son about ten years old and a minor daughter of six, was a passenger on one of appellee's passenger trains, and appeals from an adverse judgment in a suit instituted by her in the district court of Potter county to recover damages caused by the alleged wrongful ejection of her said son from said train. The suit was defended on the ground that the son was subject to the payment of passenger fare, which the appellant persistently refused to pay, and that no more force was exercised than was reasonably necessary to remove the boy from the train.

Under the second and third assignments it is insisted that the court erred in sustaining objections to the following interrogatories, propounded to the witnesses H. H. Vail and B. Freeland, viz.: "Did said train auditor abuse, or lay hands on, or otherwise assault, plaintiff in any manner, or did he not do so?" To this interrogatory the witness Vail answered: "He did in a rough manner, or I would call it. He jerked the boy away from the woman and shoved her back, and the conductor did not allow her to get off the train." And the witness Freeland answered: "The auditor did not, but cluded the answers for that reason. The question of whether a given interrogatory is or is not leading is not always easy of solution; but the rules to be applied in the determination have been so frequently and fully set forth and illustrated in the decisions that we hardly feel justified in entering into an elaborate dissection of the interrogatory now before us. We think it sufficient to say that it plainly suggests one of the crucial issues in the case, viz., whether unnecessary force was exercised by appellee's trainmen in the removal complained of, and called for the conclusion of the witness on the issue. It embodied the assumption that the "abuse," or laying on of hands, constituted an assault, and the alternative form in which it was put does not free the interrogatory of its objectionable features. See: Hanrick v. Alexander, 51 Tex. 500; Bryan Press Co. v. H. & T. C. Ry. Co., 110 S. W. 99; F. W. & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Jones, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 129, 85 S. W. 37, and authorities cited.

Error is also assigned to the following paragraph of the court's charge: "If you find and believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was a passenger on the train of the defendant company, as alleged, but that she refused to pay the fare of her son, Frank, then you are instructed that the defendant company would have the right to eject such boy from said train, and was entitled to the use of such force, if any, as may have been reasonably necessary to make such ejection, if any; but in making such ejection, if any, the defendant company would be bound to exercise ordinary care not to injure the plaintiff, and the failure of the agents and servants of the defendant company to exercise such ordinary care would be negligence." It is insisted that the charge is erroneous "in requiring the defendant in this cause to have exercised no more than ordinary care in the premises, when the degree of care required by law was the highest degree of care." In answering the criticism made of the charge quoted, it may be said that the charge was at least correct as far as it went, and, if appellant desired that a higher degree of care be imposed, that she should have made special request therefor; but, aside from this, we think the charge, in the connection in which it was used, and as to the phase of the evidence to which it related, was correct. In another paragraph of the charge, the jury was instructed to the effect that, if the fare of the son had been paid (as she testified), both plaintiff and her son were passengers, and as such entitled to the exercise of the highest degree of care on appellee's part, and that a failure fused to pay the boy's fare, and forcibly resisted his eviction from the car, as appellee's testimony tended to show, and as we must find in deference to the verdict of the jury, she forfeited her right as a passenger, and was thereafter only entitled to the care required in the charge objected to. F. W. & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Gribble, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 78, 102 S. W. 158.

The evidence sufficiently supports appellee's defense, and the remaining assignment of error entitled to notice needs but a passing reference. This assignment goes to the exclusion of the answer of the witness Vall to the fifth direct interrogatory; but the ruling was at least harmless, in view of the fact that the witness, in answer to other interrogatories, was permitted to testify to substantially the same effect as that of the excluded answer.

We conclude that the evidence supports the verdict and judgment in appellee's favor, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

1. EVIDENCE (§§ 158, 184*)—BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

The memoranda kept in a telephone exchange, showing the date and hour when customers put in a call and when they get through talking, are the best evidence of what they contained, and mere proof that the telephone business has been sold, since the memoranda were made, and the papers were delivered to the new owner, is not sufficient to admit secondary evidence.

Appeal from Limestone County Court; James Kimbell, Judge.

Action by H. D. Adams against C. B. Edwards and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

A. B. Rennolds and Williams & Bradley, for appellants. Doyle, Jackson & Harper, for appellee.

RAINEY, C. J. No brief for appellee has been filed, and the statement of the case made by appellant we take to be correct, which is as follows: "This suit was brought by H. D. Adams against C. B. Edwards, in justice's court, to recover damages of him for the alleged overdriving and negligent killing of one of his livery horses, and resulted in a judgment in that court in plaintiff's favor in the sum of $125, from which defendant appealed to the county court, and upon a trial in that court on November 30, 1908, before the court and a jury, plaintiff again recovered judgment for $125 and interest and all costs of both courts, against defendant Edwards, and also against R. A. Edwards, P. D. Lawhorn, Jack Womack, and A. B. Rennolds, as sureties upon the appeal bond from justice's court, from which latter judgment defendant and the sureties upon his said appeal bond have appealed to this court. The pleadings upon which the trial was had consisted of plaintiff's citation and defendant's general denial and a special answer, in effect, that plaintiff had failed and neglected to properly water the team prior to delivering it to defendant, whereby the horse was caused to drink too much water when defendant watered it, and plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, contributing proximately to his loss. The citation stated the cause of action substantially: That on February 6, 1907, plaintiff was in the livery business in Coolidge, and on said date he hired defendant a pair of horses, which were well and in good traveling condition; that defendant overdrove them, in that he drove them from Coolidge to near Victoria and thence to Mexia in about 4 hours and 40 minutes, a distance of about 43 miles; that he did not feed said horses at noon, and, when they were very hot, permitted them to drink too much water, and by reason thereof one horse, of the value of $125, died, and the other was injured to the extent of $25, for which sums he sued."

The first assignment of error is: "The court erred in permitting the plaintiff to introduce in evidence, over the objections and exceptions of the defendant, the answer of the witness A. L. Collins to the fifth interrogatory, as follows: 'Int. 5. If in answer to interrogatory 3 you say Mr. Edwards was 'phoning through the Coolidge Telephone Exchange, then if you know, tell exactly, if you can, what time he put in the call, and what time of the day he got through talking, and say in answering the question if you answer from memory, and, if not, then from what source you refresh your recollection?' Answer: 'It was 9:45 o'clock that the connection was made for the conversation and was taken down at 9:50 o'clock'—because the witness said, 'I make this answer from information gained by referring to the daily tickets made of the call,' because the answer shows it is hearsay, because he testifies to a matter he does not know himself and from memoranda made by some one else, of occurrences of which he does not know, because there is nothing to show it is from records required to be kept, or that are correctly kept, of the proceedings of the telephone office, because the testimony was not only hearsay, but the witness, in attempting to testify from data obtained from records, does not give the contents of such records or memoranda, because he did not testify to what the records or memoranda showed, but merely stated that he gained the information from the same, and at the time of testifying he did not have the records before him, and merely gave his version or recollection of what the records were, which was not the best evidence of what the records were."

The evidence shows that the depositions of the witness were taken in June, 1908, and the transaction under investigation transpired in February, 1907. The statement was not made from the personal knowledge of the witness, but from information gained from memorandum made in the telephone office. The memorandum was not produced, nor was its nonproduction duly accounted for. The only evidence on this point being by the witness that "I cannot attach a copy of the record of Mr. Edwards' conversation on account of the fact that I have disposed of the telephone business, and have turned over all papers in connection with same to the parties who own the exchange, and do not know whether it could be found now or not." He further testified that the exchange at Coolidge usually kept correct dates as to hour and minutes when customers put in a call, and when they got through talking; but it is not shown that he made the memorandum. Under those circumstances we think the court erred in adduced on the trial. The evidence was very material in establishing the time defendant left Coolidge on the morning in question in determining whether or not the defendant was guilty of negligence in the manner he drove the horses; there being other and different testimony as to the time he left Coolidge, and the time he made other points on that morning. On the admission of such testimony, see opinion delivered by Justice Talbot of this court at this term in case of Cathy v. Railway Company, 124 S. W. —1

The court failed to charge on contributory negligence and refused special instructions requested by appellant. The appellant pleaded contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, in that plaintiff had neglected to properly water the horses just prior to the time defendant took charge of them. There was evidence tending to show that the team had not been watered since the evening before they were furnished defendant, and that when defendant reached water one of them drank so much it caused the trouble. The evidence was sufficient to raise the issue of contributory negligence, and a charge covering that issue should have been given that the jury might pass upon it. Railway Co. v. Neff, 87 Tex. 308; 28 S. W. 283; Railway Co. v. Sein, 87 Tex. 310, 28 S. W. 286.

The court refused to give a special charge requested by appellant, which reads as follows: "After considering the time of the day defendant left Coolidge, the distance that he traveled, the condition of the roads, the number and duration of the steps he had made, the condition in which the team appeared to be, the time of day and the place where the horse got sick and defendant became aware of its being sick, and that he was a young man there alone with a young lady, and that he knew of no horse doctor in or near the place where he was, but did know of one at Mexia, and all of the facts and circumstances in evidence, and after giving all of the testimony in the case such weight as you believe it entitled to, if you believe that a man of ordinary care and prudence, situated as defendant was, would have continued to drive the team on to Mexia as defendant did, then, in such event, you will find a verdict for the defendant." The evidence called for the giving of this charge, and the court erred in refusing to give it. Oil Co. v. Noble (Sup.) 105 S. W. 318; Railway Co. v. Foth (Sup.) 105 S. W. 322.

In appealing from the justice's court, the defendant gave an appeal bond in the sum of $300, and is in conformity with the statute in all respects. In the county court the plaintiff also recovered judgment for $125, interest, and all costs against the defendant, and ment against them, so as not to exceed the penalty in the bond. This the court refused to do. Sureties on an appeal bond are only bound by the terms of said bond, and they cannot be held in an amount exceeding the amount specified in said bond, as that is the extent of their obligation. So it was error in the court in not so limiting the judgment against the sureties to the penalty stipulated in the bond. The judgment in this respect could be reformed by this court; but, for the other errors pointed out herein, the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded. Hendrick v. Cannon, 5 Tex. 248; Martin v. Sykes, 25 Tex. Supp. 197; Grand Lodge v. Cleghorn, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 134, 48 S. W. 750.

Error from District Court, Harris County; W. P. Hamblen, Judge.

Action by the Kettler Brass Manufacturing Company against John O'Neil. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. W. Graves, for plaintiff in error.
John Hamman, for defendant in error.

FLY, J. Plaintiff in error, which will hereinafter be designated "plaintiff," instituted this suit against O'Neil, defendant in error, who will be designated "defendant," to recover damages in the sum of $1,000 for the breach of a contract in failing and refusing to pay for certain bronze doors and other articles to be used in the construction of a mausoleum. The cause was tried by jury and resulted in a verdict and judgment for defendant.

Plaintiff did not do the work it had contracted to do for defendant in substantial compliance with the terms of the contract. It failed to do the work to the satisfaction of the architect, as it had contracted to do. Other facts are discussed in connection with the different assignments of error.

The first, second, and seventh assignments of error assail the action of the court in permitting architects, who qualified as experts, to testify as to the kind of work done by plaintiff, and to state that the work was not in compliance with the drawings and specifications set out in the building contract. The proposition is that, where parties to a contract have bound themselves to abide by the opinion and decision of a particular architect, fair exercise of his judgment and opinion is binding upon both parties to the contract. While the words "fair exercise of his judgment" might, by a liberal construction, take in the exceptions made to the rule, it may be well to state the rule to be that where it is agreed between parties that the decision of a civil engineer or an architect shall be final and conclusive as to matters relating to the construction of a building or other structure and the compensation to which the builder or contractor is entitled, in the absence of fraud or such gross mistake as would necessarily imply bad faith, or a failure to exercise an honest judgment, his action in the premises would be binding and conclusive upon the parties to the contract. Railway v. Henry, 65 Tex. 685; Boettler v. Tendick, 73 Tex. 493, 11 S. W. 497, 5 L. R. A. 270; Railway v. Perkins, 88 Tex. 67, 29 S. W. 1048; Kilgore v. Baptist Society, 89 Tex. 469, 35 S. W. 145; Kihlberg v. United States, 97 U. S. 398, 24 L. Ed. 1106; Martinsburg & P. Ry. Co. v. March, 114 U. S. 549, 5 Sup. Ct. 1035, 29 L. Ed. 255.

As a basis to the proposition of law stated, there must be a contract binding the parties to abide by the decision of the architect or other party intrusted with authority to superintend the work. The agreement between plaintiff and defendant in this case as to the action of the architect was: "All work to be executed to the satisfaction of the architect both in finish and design." The plain implication from that clause is that the honest, fair judgment and decision of the architect in the premises would be final and binding on the parties. This construction is fully supported by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States hereinbefore cited. In order to traverse and go behind the decision of the architect, there must be allegations and proof of fraud, collusion, or mistake upon the part of the architect, because the party desiring to attack his decision is endeavoring to set aside the contract, and, deriving such equitable relief, he must by his pleadings and proof bring himself within the scope and authority of a court of equity. In the absence of such a plea, defendant would have no authority to question the decision of the architect to whom the parties had submitted all matters of construction. "The owner has no right to complain, since the architect was selected by him and charged by him with this very power; the builder has no right to complain, since he took the work on this very condition." Whart. Con. 594; McAlpine v. Academy, 101 Wis. 468, 78 N. W. 173.

While the principles of law, as herein enunciated, are well settled, they cannot be invoked in this case, because Green, the architect named in the contract, never accepted the work done by plaintiff, or expressed his satisfaction with it, or stated that it was in compliance with the terms of the contract. He testified: "I saw the completed work done by the Kettler people, and, as I saw it, it was not completed. * * * My relations with Mr. O'Neil, as his architect, ceased about the 24th day of June, as near as I can recollect. Don't think the castings had, at that time, been completed. I know they hadn't, because they haven't been completed yet. * * * I never passed judgment on these doors as they were finally completed and did not accept them for the plaintiff in this case." Plaintiff, having failed to show that the work was done to the satisfaction of the architect, has no just ground for objecting to the testimony of other architects as to the condition of the work, and the court did not err in admitting it. Plaintiff proved by Green, the architect named in the contract, that the work was not completed according to the contract.

The court submitted the cause to the jury on the basis of the decision of the architect being final, and there was nothing in the instructions to mislead the jury, and it was not error to refuse the special instructions requested by plaintiff. The jury must have been convinced, under the charge, that the architect had not approved the work done by plaintiff, and that it did not meet the demands of the contract, and made those findings the basis of the verdict. The evidence was ample to sustain the verdict. We do not think the charge could have led the jury to believe that plaintiff could not recover, unless the mausoleum was erected in all its parts to the satisfaction of the architect. The court confined the inquiry to the contract which confined plaintiff's obligation to the doors and matters connected therewith. There was no contradiction between the different parts of the charge.

Green was discharged by the defendant; but there was evidence that it was done with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff, and the appointment of other architects was ratified by plaintiff. There was no effort to show that plaintiff was deprived of any right by the discharge of the architect. All of the architects swore that the work was not in compliance with the terms of the contract.

Through the special charges requested by plaintiff, the submission of the cause was placed upon the same basis upon which it was submitted to the jury by the court; the turning point being that the work was done "agreeable to and in keeping with the drawings, specifications, notes, figures, details, and drawings as prepared by L. S. Green, architect," and executed "to the satisfaction of the said architect, L. S. Green." Plaintiff cannot now complain of the charge of the court placing the decision of the case upon those issues.

In the contract plaintiff agreed to make the doors according to a design in "Winslow Bros. Company's Catalogue, on page 214, plate 2082 & 2083," and the uncontroverted evidence showed that they were not so constructed. Kettler admitted that the doors did not follow the design in the catalogue. He also swore that he had no objection to producing the doors in court, and stated that he had gone to the mausoleum and carried the doors off. Under the circumstances, we do not think that it was improper for defendant's counsel to comment on the fact that the doors were not exhibited in court. If the argument was improper, it could not have injured plaintiff, for the reason that the jury, under the evidence, could not have rendered any other verdict than one in favor of defendant.

We do not think the cross-assignments of error are meritorious, and they are overruled.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from District Court, Starr County; W. B. Hopkins, Judge.

Trespass to try title by Francisco B. Guerra and others against Cayetano Barrera and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. R. Sutherland and W. L. Dawson, for appellants. Jas. B. Wells and G. W. Seabury, for appellees.

JAMES, C. J. The action was instituted in trespass to try title for two tracts of land, one about 1,500 acres, and the other about 1,800 acres, and was brought by appellees, as owners of this land as a part of a grant, known as the Santa Cruz tract, by the Spanish government to Francisco Ignacio Farias, and under patent to him by the state issued September 12, 1877, and claiming title to same also by virtue of the several statutes of limitations, and asking for rents and mesne profits, as well as for restitution of the land. A number of the defendants disclaimed. The present appellants pleaded, by demurrers, not guilty; pleaded, in bar of limitations claimed by plaintiffs, the absence of defendants from the state during the period of their alleged adverse possession. They also set up title in themselves by means of the several statutes of limitations. The cause was tried by the judge, who filed his conclusions, and gave plaintiffs the land.

The fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth assignments of error make the point that the conclusions of fact from 3 to 6, inclusive, are not supported by any evidence. These material facts appear in the judge's conclusions: First, that none of the land in controversy is embraced in the San Jose tract or grant as contended for by appellants, either by its grant from the Spanish government, or by the subsequent patent from the state; second, that the land is embraced in the Santa Cruz tract or grant as contended by appellees, both by the original Spanish grant and by the patent; third, that both of said tracts were originally surveyed and granted on true north and south lines, and not on magnetic lines. We ascertain that the evidence amply sustains the above findings. While the lines of junior surveys should not control in ascertaining the boundaries of senior surveys, the findings above are the only conclusions which are consistent with the descriptive calls that appear in the instruments connected with the original grants of these lands. Nothing appears on the face of the grants to indicate that any course was observed in making the surveys but the true meridian, and to apply the magnetic courses would exclude from the Santa Cruz grant objects which appear from its calls to be, or which the court found to be, within its boundaries. The finding that the lagoons called Aqua Sarca and Grangenitos, called for in the Santa Cruz grant to be within its limits, are on the land in controversy is one that we are unable to disturb; it being so indicated by the calls connected with the Santa Cruz grant and by testimony. The conclusion that the lines originally run were on true north and south lines is one which we must sustain; such lines being primarily what were called for, with nothing to suggest any other procedure, and to adopt magnetic lines would lead to results inconsistent with what appears in connection with the granting of the Santa Cruz grant. That the court considered other facts which went to confirm said specific and controlling facts does not tend to undo the latter. This leads us to the point where the land in question is the property of plaintiffs; it being within the Santa Cruz grant, and they having title by conveyance from and under the original grantee. The limitations title of appellee it is therefore not necessary to consider at all. The only question that remains is whether or not the judge's conclusions of fact and law, and his rulings, are to be sustained in reference to a title by limitations in defendants, these appellants.

That appellants have acquired no title by the 10-year statute is clear; no possession by them has existed for that period. Their possession was from the spring of 1808 to the institution of this suit, September 12, 1907.

No title by the 5-year statute has been obtained, as appellants paid no taxes on the land in controversy. As to the 3-year statute, the finding of facts is as follows: "That the chain of title introduced by defendants consists of deeds from various heirs of said Ramon Villareal to themselves and to others, and of deeds from those others to themselves, but that no conveyance out of Alexandro Farias, original grantee of the San Jose tract, or to said Ramon Villareal, was introduced or proved, and that defendants have not held such possession under title, or color of title, from or under the sovereignty of the soil." That each and all of the said deeds under which defendants claim are duly registered, and purport to convey undivided shares and interests in the San Jose tract as originally granted to Alexandro Farias and confirmed to him by the Legislature of the state of Texas; some describing said tract further by reference to its aforesaid patent, and that none of said deeds describes or purports to convey any of the land in controversy in this suit." These conclusions are supported by evidence, in respect to the deeds which defendants were allowed to introduce. Certain deeds which they offered, however, were excluded, and a number of assignments of error are briefed complaining of this ruling. The questions raised by these assignments refer to the sufficiency of the proof of the excluded deeds, or rather certified copies of deeds. But it is evident that the description in these excluded conveyances did not purport to convey land embraced in the Santa Cruz grant, and applied only to the San Jose grant, and in each of them one of the boundaries of the land, an undivided interest of which was purported to be conveyed, were of the San Jose grant. If these instruments had been admitted, appellants, it is conceded, would have shown a consecutive chain of title from the sovereign to the San Jose grant, and that far their proof would have answered the 3-year statute. But as they, like those which were admitted, purported only to convey undivided shares and interests in the San Jose tract as granted, these deeds would manifestly have occasioned no change in the finding of the court, and therefore we conclude that said assignments should be overruled, without discussing the question as to the admissibility of the certified copies. The result necessarily is that defendants showed no title by the 3-year statute.

The only errors alleged in reference to the rulings had at the trial were as to the admissibility of the certified copies just discussed. The findings of the judge on the material and controlling facts being supported by the evidence, there is nothing left for us to do but to affirm the judgment on the legal aspects of the case as above outlined.

Appeal from District Court, Fayette County; L. W. Moore, Judge.

Action by John T. Duncan against George Herder and others. From a judgment dissolving an injunction issued as prayed for by plaintiff, he appeals. Reversed, and injunction reinstated.

John T. Duncan, pro se. Brown & Lane, for appellees.

REESE, J. John T. Duncan instituted this suit in the district court of Fayette county against George Herder and others seeking to have set aside and canceled a certain judgment theretofore rendered in said court against one Josef Peter and Barbara Peter in favor of George Herder, the plaintiff in said suit, and also in favor of certain defendants, including Mrs. A. C. Lenert, survivor of the community estate of herself and her deceased husband upon their cross-action against Peter, for the amount of their respective debts against Peter, and foreclosure of their respective liens on certain real estate, and adjusting equities between the parties arising from the different liens. Among other objections urged by plaintiff to the validity of said judgment was the disqualification of the Honorable L. W. Moore, judge of said district court, to try the case. The ground of disqualification was the relationship of said judge, within the prohibited degree, to the wife of his son, J. W. Moore, who, it is contended upon the following facts, was a party to said suit. One of the defendants in said suit was Mrs. A. C. Lenert, who was made a party in her capacity as survivor and representative of the community estate of herself and her deceased husband, A. C. Lenert, the note upon which she recovered judgment and decree for foreclosure upon the land having been executed to the said A. C. Lenert during his lifetime, and being the property of the community estate. Mrs. Moore, the wife of the son of the district judge, was one of the children of the said Lenert, and his wife, Mrs. A. C. Lenert, the said A. C. Lenert having died intestate, was interested as one of the heirs of said A. C. Lenert in the debt, which was the subject-matter of said suit. She was not named as a party in said suit, which was prosecuted alone by her mother, Mrs. A. C. Lenert, as survivor of the community. In aid of his suit, Duncan, the plaintiff in the present suit, sought and obtained from Hon. E. R. Sinks, judge of the Twenty-First judicial district, adjoining the Twenty-Second judicial district, of which Fayette county is a part, an injunction restraining the execution of said judgment and decree in the case of Herder v. Peters et al. by a sale of the land in question. The grounds for presenting such application to Judge Sinks, instead of the judge of the court in which the suit was brought and to which such injunction was made returnable, was that the Honorable L. W. Moore, judge of said court, was disqualified by reason of the facts aforesaid from making any order in said cause. Under this state of facts, and upon the ground, as stated by him in his order, that Judge Moore was disqualified, Judge Sinks granted the injunction and ordered the writ to issue restraining the sale of the property.

We omitted to state that not only was it alleged that Mrs. Moore was interested in the note sued upon in the Herder Case as one of the heirs of A. C. Lenert, but that there was certain interest due thereon which was community property of herself and her husband, J. W. Moore, in which he was also interested. This, however, we do not think is material, as there is no question made that Mrs. Moore is related within the third degree to the Honorable L. W. Moore. The order of Judge Sinks granting the injunction was made July 27, 1909, and was filed in the district court of Fayette county July 31, 1909, and the writ was served on the sheriff on August 2, 1909. On August 3, 1909, George Herder, by his attorneys, presented to the Honorable L. W. Moore, as judge of the district court of Fayette county, his motion or application to dissolve said writ of injunction on the ground that Judge Sinks had no authority to grant the writ, Judge Moore not being in fact disqualified, not denying, however, the truth of the facts herein set out as grounds for such disqualification. It was further set out in such motion that no grounds for injunction were stated in such petition. The questions presented by this part of the motion are not material to be here considered. On the same day, August 3, 1909, Judge Moore made, and had entered, his order vacating the order of Judge Sinks, dissolving said injunction, and ordering the sheriff to proceed with the sale under said execution. The order of Judge Moore is based solely, as set forth therein, upon the ground that he was not disqualified, and that, therefore, Judge Sinks had no jurisdiction, power, or authority to grant the injunction which was on that account void. It appears from a bill of exception reserved by plaintiff, Duncan, to the action of the court, that he had been notified of the hearing of the motion, and that he had appeared and objected to the hearing of the motion at the time set, or until after 10 days' notice to him as provided by statute, which was overruled, and the court thereupon proceeded at once, and upon the same day of the filing of the motion, to act upon it and to dissolve the injunction. The district judge qualifies the bill by the explanation that he acted solely upon the ground that Judge Sinks' order was void, and interposed no legal obstacle to the sale. This appeal is prosecuted, under the statute, from the order dissolving the injunction.

In the view we take of the questions presented, it will only be necessary to decide the single question: Under the facts shown, was Judge Moore disqualified to hear and determine the application for the injunction and the motion to dissolve? As we understand the position taken by appellee, it is not contended that the judge did not err in hearing the motion on the day it was filed over the objection of appellant, who demanded the 10 days' notice provided by statute (article 3007, Rev. St., 1895), but it is contended that the order of Judge Sinks and the writ of injunction issued thereunder were absolutely void, and therefore the dissolution of such void injunction worked no harm to appellant, that it was unnecessary and of no real legal effect, serving no other purpose than would the mere opinion of the district judge to the sheriff that the injunction was void, and should not be obeyed. Whether such injunction would have been absolutely void, or merely irregular and erroneous, if, in fact, Judge Sinks had been in error as to the disqualification of Judge Moore, is a very troublesome question, which it is not necessary for us to decide. Acts 1st Called Sess. 31st Leg. 1900, p. 354, c. 34.

Passing, then, to the only question we shall discuss or decide, as to whether Judge Moore was disqualified, we are met by what appears to be a conflict between the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Winston v. Masterson, 67 Tex. 200, 27 S. W. 768, and earlier decisions of the Supreme Court upon this question. The conflict does not arise upon the question decided, but upon the clear and positive grounds upon which the Supreme Court in the later case bases its decision. In this case Winston sought in the district court to enjoin the execution of a judgment of the county court against him in favor of one Davis. Davis had engaged H. Masterson, an attorney, to bring suit against Winston, and had agreed to give him, for his services, a contingent fee equal to one-half of the amount recovered upon the claim. The county judge was the brother of H. Masterson, the attorney. The grounds of attack upon the judgment was that the relationship of the county judge to H. Masterson, the attorney for the plaintiff, disqualified him, and rendered the judgment void. This contention was not sustained by the district court, and on appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals of the First District the judgment was affirmed (27 S. W. 691); that court, in an opinion of Chief Justice Garrett, holding that H. Masterson had no such interest in the subject-matter of the suit as would make him a party to the suit within the meaning of article 5, § 11, Const., and article 1090, Rev. St. 1879, as in Schultze v. McLeary, 73 Tex. 92, 11 S. W. 924. Pending a motion for rehearing, the question of the disqualification of the county judge was certified to the Supreme Court. The answer of the Supreme Court was that he was not disqualified. If the opinion had gone no further, it will readily be seen that there is a clear distinction between the question as it arose in that case, and as presented in Schultze v. McLeary, 73 Tex. 92, 11 S. W. 924; Hodde v. Susan, 58 Tex. 392; Jordon v. Moore, 65 Tex. 366; Railway v. Terrell, 69 Tex. 652, 7 S. W. 670, and Simpson v. Brotherton, 62 Tex. 170, and as presented in the present case. It seems entirely clear to us that Mrs. Lenert stood in the same relation to her daughter Mrs. Moore, as regards the community as the husband did towards the wife in the cases referred to. A portion of the very property involved in this case belonged to the daughter, who had not only the beneficial, but the legal title as one of the heirs of A. C. Lenert, deceased, and her interest was represented in the suit by Mrs. Lenert, in her capacity as survivor of the community, in the same sense that the wife was said to have been represented by the husband, in a suit by or against him with regard to the community estate. But in the opinion in Winston v. Masterson it is said in plain and unambiguous language that, as used in the Constitution (article 5, § 11) and the statute (Rev. St. 1879, art. 1090), the word "party" is used in its technical sense as one named as plaintiff or defendant in the record. The court quotes with approval from Bank v. Cook, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 411, as follows: "We are to ascertain the true meaning of the Legislature in the use of their statute, and we are to consider them, when legislating upon subjects relating to courts and legal process, as speaking technically, unless from the statute itself it appears that they made use of the terms in a more popular sense. The word 'party' there is unquestionably a technical word, and has a precise meaning in legal parlance. By it is understood he or they by or against whom a suit is brought, whether in law or in equity; the party plaintiff or defendant, whether composed of one or more individuals, and whether natural or legal persons. They are parties in the writ, and parties on the record, and all others who may be affected by the writ indirectly or consequentially, are persons interested, but not parties." It is further said: "If relationship to one interested in the result of an action would disqualify the county judge, then he would have been disqualified, although the

In Schultze v. McLeary, 73 Tex. 92, 11 S. W. 924, the question was as to whether the relationship of the district judge to the wife of Orynski disqualified him to try a case in which Orynski was a party, involving the community estate of himself and wife. In disposing of the case holding that the judge was disqualified, the court says: "It may be that the judge and Orynski were not related by affinity at all, but if the claim represented by the latter was one in which Orynski was but the representative of his wife, who was so related, or if he was the representative of a right claimed by himself and wife in a community right, or if any judgment to be rendered in his favor or against him would affect the right of the wife through her community right even to the extent of costs, then the wife of Orynski, within the spirit and purpose of the constitutional provision to which we have referred, was a party to the suit and the district judge was disqualified"—citing Hodde v. Susan, Jordon v. Moore, and Railway Co. v. Terrell, supra. In passing upon this same question in Hodde v. Susan, the Supreme Court uses this language: "A narrow or contracted construction of the term 'party' which confines it to the very person named on the docket as such, and excludes such as stand precisely in the same relation, would often defeat the end had in view, of having justice impartially administered free from the bias and influence produced by the interest held in the cause by the judge or his relations." The opinion in the case of Schultze v. McLeary was rendered by Chief Justice Stayton, whose language we have quoted. Although the opinion in Winston v. Masterson purports to have been rendered by the present Chief Justice Gaines, it appears from a note at the foot of the opinion that it was, in fact, written by Chief Justice Stayton. It will be noticed that no reference is made therein to any of the cases announcing, it seems to us, a doctrine diametrically contrary to the doctrine there stated. Can it be supposed that the learned Chief Justice intended by what was said to overrule the doctrine established by the previous decisions of the Supreme Court, including the case of Schultze v. McLeary so shortly before decided, in which he himself had spoken so positively? We decline to think so, and especially as such a conclusion would inevitably lead to the most extraordinary results. If, in order to disqualify a judge to try a case on account of relationship to one of the parties, it is essential that such person be named in the pleadings as a party plaintiff or defendant, then it would follow that a judge might properly try a case brought by an executor or administrator administrator without naming the heirs or any of them as parties. We do not think it necessary to go further than the decisions of our own state upon this question. If we were to do so, it would be found that the great weight of authority supports the doctrine of the earlier cases cited.

In the light of the decisions of this state, we are justified in limiting the decision in Winston v. Masterson to the facts of that case, in which view there is no conflict with the earlier cases, and to follow the doctrine of those cases as applicable to the facts here presented. We therefore hold that Mrs. Moore was a party to the suit within the meaning of that term as used in the Constitution and statute, and, as it is not questioned that she was related to the district judge within the third degree, that he was disqualified to grant or dissolve the injunction. Such being the case, the order of Judge Sinks granting the injunction must stand until properly overruled. Not only was Judge Moore disqualified to make the order dissolving the injunction, but his action in denying appellant the 10 days' notice provided by statute, and demanded by him, was erroneous.

When we consider the clear, positive, and unambiguous language used by the court in the opinion of Winston v. Masterson, we are forced to admit that it is not at all unreasonable that the learned district judge, whose action we have reviewed, concluded that Mrs. Moore was not a party to the suit, and that he was not disqualified. We are constrained to hold otherwise.

The order dissolving the injunction granted by Judge Sinks is reversed, set aside, and annulled, and it is ordered that the injunction be reinstated in full force as though no such order had been made.

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 175*)—DISPOSAL OF STATE LANDS—TEXAS.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4269, providing that vested rights shall not be disturbed by the location of school land in favor of a county, a location of school land for the state under authority of Const. art. 7, § 2, providing that all alternative sections of land reserved to the state or that shall be hereafter made to railroads or other corporations, and one-half of the public domain, etc., shall constitute a public school fund, will prevail over a subsequent location of county school land, although a patent is first issued on the county location.

Appeal from District Court, Lubbock County; L. S. Kinder, Judge.

Action by W. J. Stallcup against Isaac L. Ellwood. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. L. Beatty and John R. McGee, for appellant. Geo. R. Bean, for appellee.

FISHER, C. J. This is an action of trespass to try title, brought by appellee against the appellant on the 25th day of November, 1907, for the title and possession of 150½ acres of land, alleged to be in the northwest part of a 640-acre tract, described as school section No. 50, in block 20, in Hockley county, Tex.; the portion of said survey in controversy being described by metes and bounds in plaintiff's first amended petition, and is in conflict with the Donley county school league survey No. 10. On the 4th of May, 1908, the defendant filed his answer, consisting of a general exception, plea of not guilty, general denial, and the statute of limitations of five years, and also a cross-action of trespass to try title against the plaintiff for the land in question. The case was tried in the court below without a jury, and resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the land sued for, and that the defendant take nothing by reason of his cross-action against the plaintiff, and that the defendant pay all costs of suit. From this judgment appellant has perfected his appeal.

We find the following facts: There is a conflict between school section No. 50, which belongs to the plaintiff, and the Donley county school league No. 10, which is owned by the defendant. Survey No. 50 was state school land, and was located by virtue of certificate No. 652, H. E. & W. T. Railway Company, in block 20, situated in Hockley county, Tex. Upon the application to purchase said survey, it was duly and legally sold to one Jesse Dalton by the Commissioner of the Land Office on the 14th of September, 1899, and by regular chain of transfers by deeds duly acknowledged and recorded in the deed records of Hockley county, Tex., from Dalton, that title is now in the appellee, W. J. Stallcup. The original field notes of the location of survey No. 50 are prior to the field notes and location of the Donley county school land. Based on the survey of the Donley county school land, there was on the 15th day of December, 1883, a patent issued to Donley county, field notes of which covered 150 acres of school survey No. 50, owned by the appellee, and it is that 150 acres which is now in controversy. Donley county conveyed its school lands to Gregory, Cooley & Hastings, who, with the heirs of some of these parties who are deceased, conveyed to R. C. Lake and T. B. Tomb. All of these deeds were properly acknowledged and filed for record in the office of the county clerk of Lubbock county January 30, 1902, in the deed records of said Hockley county, Tex. On September 5, 1905, by a deed properly executed and acknowledged, R. C. Lake and T. B. Tomb conveyed league No. 10, Donley county school land, to appellant, Isaac L. Ellwood, which deed was filed for record in the deed records of Hockley county on September 15, 1905. The above two deeds were offered in evidence, not only as title, but also in support of the appellant's plea of five years' limitation. The taxes were paid by appellant and those under whom he holds on the Donley county school land for the years 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, and 1907. In 1902 Lake & Tomb and one Bird Rose, who was either a member of the firm of Lake & Tomb, or the agent and business manager of the ranch known as the "8 league pasture," of which the Donley county school survey No. 10 was a part, by fence inclosed the land in question as a part of the 8 league pasture, which was occupied and used as a cattle ranch, and which was in the actual possession and control of Bird Rose. They remained in possession and use of the same from that time until they sold to the appellant, Ellwood, in 1905, and from that time Ellwood occupied and used the land in question as a part of his pasture. Appellee, Stallcup, by deed of date August 26, 1904, purchased school survey No. 50 from one Hiram Smith, and we conclude from the evidence that Smith holds under the original purchaser from the state, Jesse Dalton, either by conveyance from him or some one to whom he sold. In September, 1903, one B. L. Frost brought a suit in the district court of Lubbock county against Lake & Tomb to recover part of section 74, block 20, which is shown by a map in the record, and which 1904, at the time that Hiram Smith was the owner of school survey No. 50, he entered into an understanding and agreement with Bird Rose in regard to the dividing line between the Donley county school land and survey No. 50, substantially to the effect that they would agree to abide the decision in the suit then pending between Frost and the Lake-Tomb Cattle Company, as above mentioned, and substantially to the effect that, during the pendency and life of that agreement, no limitation would be asserted by Bird Rose or those for whom he was acting. At that time there was a dispute and controversy between Lake, Tomb & Co. and Bird Rose, on the one hand, and Smith, on the other, as to the dividing line between their respective lands. In October, 1906, the Frost suit was compromised. Appellant, Ellwood, was then the owner of the land in question. Frost dismissed the suit, and Ellwood paid him $5 an acre for that part of section 74 shown to be in conflict with league No. 10 of the Donley county school land, and Frost executed Ellwood a deed, dated the 19th day of October, 1906, and we take it from the evidence upon this subject that that constituted the settlement of the suit of Frost v. Lake, Tomb & Co.

We conclude as a fact that the evidence shows that Bird Rose had the authority to enter into the agreement with Hiram Smith, as above stated, and that that agreement was binding upon Lake, Tomb & Co., of which the evidence shows Bird Rose to be a member.

Appellant's second and fifth assignments of error will be considered together. It is there, in effect, contended that appellant was entitled to recover, because, by virtue of the patent to Donley county, the superior title vested in it, although the land in controversy, a part of school survey No. 50, was previously located by the state as a part of the common school fund. This location, as shown by the facts, was prior to the location for Donley county. The effect of the contention is: That, both surveys being set apart and appropriated for a common purpose—that is, an appropriation to the common school fund—the state by its patent could and did confer upon Donley county the superior right to the land in conflict; that such selection for the use of Donley county was an election upon the part of the state to treat such fund as appropriated to a use common to both the state and the county, and an appropriation by patent to the latter would not be a diversion of the trust fund held by the state for common school purposes generally. We cannot agree with appellant in this contention, nor can we admit that article 4269, Rev. St. 1895, relied upon by appellant, as construed in Steward v. Coleman County, 95 Tex. 445, 67 S. W. 1016, has any application in the location made in favor of the county. The county in this instance located the land so as to cover the lands previously located by the state for common school purposes; and to permit the location by the county to prevail would disturb a vested right in the State, unless there is some force in the suggestion of appellant, as previously outlined. Section 2, art. 7, of the Constitution, in effect, provides that all alternate sections of land reserved to the state, or that may hereafter be made to railroads, or other corporations, and one-half of the public domain, etc., shall constitute a perpetual public school fund. This provision has been carried into effect by appropriate laws of the several Legislatures. Other provisions of the Constitution protect counties in the grants made by the state for educational purposes. It may be conceded that both reservations were for educational purposes; but their enjoyment was distinct. The reservation in favor of the common school fund was for the benefit of the state at large, in which all of the counties were entitled to participate—that in favor of the county was restricted and limited to its own inhabitants. One was a general trust fund, limited only by the boundaries of the state; the other was circumscribed by the limits of the county. And if it could be conceded that the latter could lay its grant upon the previous location of the state, the effect would be to divert the fund from the general use intended for the benefit of the state at large. Such a concession would be repugnant to all of the laws upon this subject, because the public domain, set aside or located for common school purposes, cannot be diverted, and constitutes a trust fund for educational purposes for the entire state. When the location was made, the right was vested in the state in trust for a definite and defined purpose, and to permit a county to subsequently appropriate the land by patent or otherwise would defeat the trust and affect an interest already vested, which is prohibited by article 4269.

Appellant's third and fourth assignments will be considered together. The third assignment complains of the action of the court in admitting the evidence of Hiram Smith as to the agreement between him and Bird Rose. The objection, in the main, is predicated upon the proposition that Bird Rose, by the agreement in question, could not bind Lake & Tomb. The fourth assignment complains of the admission of the testimony of appellee, Stallcup, tending to show a similar agreement between him and Judge Beatty as existed between Smith and Bird Rose. The objection is that the evidence does not show that Judge Beatty was the agent of the appellant, Ellwood, except by his declarations, and therefore was lacking in authority to bind him by such agreement.

If the testimony objected to was admissible, it was sufficient to justify the trial court in holding that the possession was not adverse. Consequently, limitation did not affect or bar the plaintiff's right to recover. Our findings of fact virtually dispose of the objection urged to the evidence of Hiram Smith showing the agreement with Bird Rose. The court, under the evidence, could have concluded that he was a member of the firm of Lake, Tomb & Co. He was in actual possession and control of the premises, and, if he was not a member of the firm, he had the general control and management of the cattle ranch, of which the land in question was a part. This being true, his agreement to not hold adversely during the pendency of the suit of Frost against Lake, Tomb & Co. would suspend operation of the statute of limitations.

With reference to the objection to the evidence of Stallcup, as to what occurred between him and Judge Beatty, it is contended that the familiar principle that agency cannot be established by the declaration of the agent is applicable to this question. It can be conceded that so much of the evidence of this witness that testified to the declarations of Judge Beatty showing his agency was not admissible; but this would not affect the judgment below or cause its reversal, because the objectionable evidence only relates to the question whether Beatty was agent for appellant, Ellwood, who only acquired his right about two years before suit was filed; and, if we concede that he could not bind Ellwood by conduct or statements showing that the latter was not holding adversely, the advantage gained by appellant would be in eliminating this evidence, which, if done, would have the effect of merely holding that for about two years—that is from September, 1905, when appellant purchased, to the time of filing suit—limitation ran. The appellant, to make out or complete the period of five years' actual possession in order for the statute to operate, must rely upon the possession of his predecessors in title with whom he is connected; and, when we go back to them, we find an agreement between the appellee, or, in other words, those under whom he holds, with the vendors of appellant, substantially to the effect that limitation should not operate during the time of the pendency of the suit of Frost v. Lake-Tomb Cattle Company, which was settled in 1906. If this agreement did not extend to the time this suit was settled, it would certainly be operative to the time the parties who owned title and made the agreement sold to Ellwood, which, as before said, was in September, 1906. This agreement was effective at least during the time the appellant's vendors had possession, which possession, by force of the agreement, would not be adverse to the appellee or his vendors, the parties with whom the agreement was made. Such being the case, such time must be eliminated, and, when this is done, there is not an adverse possession for a time sufficient to complete a bar under the five years' statute.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 129*)—ACTIONS BY TENANT—DAMAGES.

Where a landlord agrees to rent a certain number of acres and only furnishes one-half of such amount, the tenant may claim as damages the value of his share of the crop which would have been produced on the portion of the land which the landlord failed to furnish him, where the crop would have been raised by the labor of the tenant's family without extra cost and expense to him.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 129*)—ACTIONS BY TENANT—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for failure of a landlord to give his tenant possession of all the land leased him, evidence is admissible to show the crop which the tenant raised on the land furnished him, and its value, and that the tenant would have cultivated the entire land leased, and that the land which the landlord failed to furnish him was better than the land he actually cultivated.

Appeal from Taylor County Court; T. A. Bledsoe, Judge.

Action by R. L. Warren against G. W. Pressler. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wagstaff & Davidson, for appellant.

FISHER, C. J. This is a suit by appellee, Warren, against the appellant, to recover damages on account of the alleged breach of a rent contract. The case was tried before the court without a jury and judgment rendered in appellee's favor against the appellant for $325, from which judgment he has appealed.

The plaintiff in his petition substantially alleged: That he rented from the appellant, for the year 1907, 100 acres of land, which he agreed to cultivate. The appellant was to receive one-fourth of all the cotton and one-third of the corn and other grain raised on the premises. Plaintiff was to take charge of the 100 acres, and the defendant was to furnish plaintiff two cows for the purpose of furnishing milk and butter to his family during the year. That plaintiff moved upon the premises, started to cultivate, and did cultivate about 50 acres of the land. When the plaintiff demanded of the defendant the other 50 acres, defendant told him too late in the season to plant a crop, defendant refused to furnish the same or any part thereof. That plaintiff, relying upon the rental contract, waited so long that he was unable to get other lands to cultivate, and was prevented from so doing by the act of defendant. That he expected to cultivate all of the land by the labor of his family, and that by virtue of defendant's breach of the rental contract he was unable to procure employment for them. That he would have planted the additional 50 acres which he was to receive in cotton, which would have produced 12 bales, of the reasonable value of $840, and that his portion would have been $630. That the defendant refused to furnish plaintiff the two cows to milk, to his damage $50, and that the plaintiff suffered damage to the extent of $100 on account of extra team and tools to farm the additional 50 acres of land which were not furnished him by defendant, all of which items of damages he sues for. The defendant filed a general demurrer and special exception to the $50 item of damage and the $100 item of damage and to the $630 item. The objections to the items are that they state no cause of action, and that they are vague, indefinite, uncertain, and speculative. These demurrers were overruled.

Appellant's first assignment of error complains of the action of the trial court in overruling what he terms his "fourth special exception," which is directed against the item of $630. Really this exception is so general in its terms that it may be classed as a general demurrer; but, however, treating it as a special exception, it is clear that the court properly overruled it. The petition states that the $630 would have been the value of appellee's share of the crop if he had been permitted to cultivate the extra 50 acres, and it is substantially alleged that this cultivation would have been by his family without extra cost and expense to him. Damages in cases of this character were extensively treated by the Supreme Court, in Crews v. Cortez, 113 S. W. 525, in answer to certified questions from this court. Some of the principles there discussed are applicable to the question presented by appellant's demurrer.

Appellant's second assignment of error is to the effect: That the court erred in permitting the plaintiff, over the defendant's objection, to testify that the defendant had rented him 100 acres of land, and would let him have only 50 acres, and that the 50 acres which the defendant refused to let him have, and which was worked by defendant's son, was cultivated to the extent of 35 acres in cotton, and the balance in feed stuff; that the 35 acres made 7 bales of cotton and was the land was better than the land he actually cultivated. All this evidence was admissible. It was one of the means by which plaintiff undertook to show the damages which resulted to him by reason of the breach of the contract. It was clearly permissible for him to show that he was deprived of the 50 acres, and what it actually produced when cultivated by others, and to what use he would have put it if possession had been delivered. The quality of the land was also properly proven as having some bearing upon the question as to what would have been the probable yield of the cotton crop if plaintiff had been permitted to plant it in cotton.

We find no error in the records, and the judgment is affirmed.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 12, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 8, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 69*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—ORDER DENYING MANDAMUS.

Appellants were sued in trespass to try title, and a writ of sequestration was given to the sheriff, who, at plaintiff's instance, allowed appellants a certain time in which to replevy the premises, they being in possession of a store, and plaintiffs having possession of a saloon thereon, and appellants executed a replevy bond, and, on the sheriff's refusal to place them in possession, moved for a writ of mandamus to compel him to do so. Held, that the order refusing mandamus was interlocutory, and hence not appealable, in the absence of statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Chas. E. Ashe, Judge.

Trespass to try title by August Frel and wife against N. H. Simmers and wife, aided by a writ of sequestration. From an order refusing a writ of mandamus to compel A. R. Anderson, sheriff, to place defendants in possession of the premises, defendants appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Chas. L. Michael and A. H. Jayne, for appellants. Brockman, Kahn & Williams, for appellees.

NEILL, J. On July 3, 1908, August Frel and his wife sued N. H. Simmers and his wife in trespass to try title to a designated portion of block 632 of the Ranger addition to the city of Houston, at the same time suing out a writ of sequestration. When the suit was brought, there were on the premises a saloon and a store. The plaintiffs were then in actual possession of the former, and the defendants in possession of the latter, and such has been the state of possession ever since. The writ of sequestration was immediately placed in the hands of the sheriff, who, at the instance of plaintiffs, without taking possession of the premises, allowed defendants until the 7th of the month to replevy the same. On that day the defendants executed a replevy bond, conditioned as required by law, for all the land sued for. They then demanded of the sheriff that he place them in possession of all the property, including the saloon room occupied by plaintiffs. This the sheriff refused to do, but allowed the possession of the property to remain as it was before, and at the time the replevy bond was executed. The defendants then moved the court for a mandamus to compel the sheriff to place them in possession of all the property involved in the suit. The court, upon hearing the motion, entered an order refusing the writ, and from such order this appeal is prosecuted.

The order is interlocutory; and, in the absence of any statute authorizing an appeal from it, cannot be appealed from. Wherefore the appeal is dismissed.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. May 29, 1909. On Resubmission, Oct. 23, 1909. Rehearing Denied Nov. 20, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 724*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—GENERAL ASSIGNMENTS.

An assignment that the court erred in rendering judgment for appellees against appellants, under which various propositions were submitted complaining of the admission of evidence, etc., is too general.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2997; Dec. Dig. § 724.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY—STATEMENT.

An assignment of error, in overruling appellants' motion on the findings of fact by the jury and court for a judgment pursuant to such findings, cannot be considered, where it was not followed by a statement from the record showing the ruling complained of, or what the findings were on which judgment was asked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3000; Dec. Dig. § 742.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 547*)—RECORD—PRESENTATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

An assignment of error in the denial of a motion for judgment on the findings cannot be considered, where the record on appeal contains neither bill of exceptions nor order of court showing that the motion was made and overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2427; Dec. Dig. § 547.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1053*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where evidence erroneously admitted related to issues which were not submitted to the jury, the error was harmless.

[Ed. note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4180; Dec. Dig. § 1053.*]

5. TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 11*)—TITLE TO, SUSTAIN ACTION—COMMON SOURCE—SOVEREIGNTY OF SOIL.

Where plaintiff's ancestor, through whom both parties claimed as a common source in trespass to try title, had prior possession of the land, plaintiffs need not connect themselves with the sovereign of the soil.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass to Try Title, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 755*)—BRIEFS—NECESSITY.

Though justice was not done below, the Court of Civil Appeals cannot review errors not fundamental in character, in absence of a proper brief presenting them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 755.*]

On Resubmission.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 759*)—BRIEF—STATING ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

The first assignment of error filed below was for error in rendering judgment against appellants, followed by eight subdivisions stating numerous alleged erroneous rulings, and the brief on appeal submitted the same matter, stating the assignment in eight parts, termed "the first assignment of error, second, third, fourth," etc., subdivisions of the first assignment of error; each subdivision being followed by propositions, statements, and authorities as for separate assignments of error, in effect making eight assignments of error in the one. Held, that the assignment in the brief, even if the subdivisions be treated as separate assignments, could not be considered, not being copies of the assignment below, as required by the court rules.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3094; Dec. Dig. § 759.*]

Conner, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from District Court, Erath County; W. J. Oxford, Judge.

Action by James McNeill and others, against the Stephenville Oil Mill and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, part of defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jno. W. Wray, Young & Johnson, and W. W. Moores, for appellants. W. T. Carlton, Eli Oxford, and M. L. Jackson, for appellees.

SPEER, J. Appellees, as the heirs at law of John M. Stephens, deceased, instituted this suit in trespass to try title to recover certain lands in Erath county from the Ft. Worth & Rio Grande Railway Company, Stephenville Oil Mill, J. H. Ott, and G. R. and Mattie Fagan. The cause was submitted to a jury on special issues, and the answers to these issues, supplemented by findings of the court, were made the basis of a judgment for the plaintiffs. The Fagans and the railway company appealed; but the latter has not assigned error, so that, in speaking of appellants, we will be understood as referring only to the Fagans.

Appellants' first assignment of error is: "The court erred in rendering a judgment in favor of appellees and against the Fagans for the land described in their second amend-filed below consists of some 3½ pages of typewritten matter; whereas, the assignment presented in the brief consists only of as many lines. The generality of the assignment is illustrated when it is seen that as many as 21 propositions are submitted under it, complaining of various errors of the court, including numerous rulings on the admission of evidence. In fact, appellants virtually have presented their whole case under this one general assignment, which points out no error at all. To consider such assignment in this case would be, we think, to put a premium on laxness, and needlessly to consume the time of this court in doing the work which the statute and rules contemplate should be done by counsel.

The second assignment is: "Defendants moved the court, on the findings of fact by the jury and the findings of fact by the court, for a judgment in pursuance of such findings. The motion was overruled. In this the court erred." We cannot consider this assignment because it is not followed by a statement from the record showing the ruling complained of, or showing what the findings upon which a judgment was asked were. Furthermore, the assignment cannot be sustained, if considered, because there is neither bill of exception nor order of the court to indicate that such motion for judgment was ever made and overruled. Not only does the brief fail thus to point out error, but the record itself is equally silent.

There are some assignments complaining of the court's ruling in admitting evidence; but a sufficient answer to these is that the issues which the evidence admitted tended to support were not submitted to the jury, and the contention that appellees failed to connect themselves with the sovereign of the soil comes to naught in view of the court's finding of prior possession in appellees' ancestor, both parties claiming, as they do, under him as a common source of title. It may be as insistently urged by appellant that justice has not been done by the judgment of the lower court in this case; but, if so, though we are not intimating such to be the case, we have no power to revise errors, in the absence of a brief properly presenting them, there being no fundamental errors requiring a reversal.

The judgment of the district court is in all things affirmed.

On Resubmission.

The judgment in this case was affirmed at the last term of this court; but the affirmance was afterward set aside, and a resubmission of the case allowed, in order that appellants might be afforded an opportunity to amend their briefs in certain parpellants filed their assignments of error, of which the following is a copy of the first:

"(1) The court erred in rendering a judgment in favor of plaintiffs and against these defendants for the land described in their second amended original answer:

"First. Because the plaintiffs failed to connect themselves by regular chain of title with the sovereignty of the soil. (a) The patent shows on its face that it was issued to the heirs of John Blair. (b) Because the alleged power of attorney does not prove heirship, and there was no proof of heirship independent thereof. (c) Because there was no proof of the execution of the alleged power of attorney. (d) Because the alleged attorney was wholly without authority to pass or attempt to pass title of the said land to Stephens, the alleged purchaser. (e) Because the certified copy of the alleged power of attorney was simply a copy of a copy, the original of which had never been filed, as required by law, in the records of deeds for Erath county, or the county to which it was attached originally for judicial and land purposes. (f) Because there is no provision of law authorizing certified copies of either originals or exact copies of instruments from the land office of the character of the one in question to be used in evidence in trespass to try title. (g) Because the alleged copy of the power of attorney was incompetent, inadmissible, and should have been by the court excluded from the consideration of either the jury or himself in the respective findings.

"Second. The application of W. W. McNeill to have the estate partitioned is void on its face. (a) Because it did not recite the names or the residences of the heirs or the distributees, nor that their residences were unknown. (b) Because it is alleged that there were 660 acres of the Blair survey of 17½ labors that belonged to said estate that was ready for partition, without giving any further or better description. (c) Because the petition or application is absolutely void for the want of description of the land and such description as would enable the court to intelligently render a judgment thereof.

"Third. The judgment or order of the court on the application or petition for proceedings is likewise void. (a) Because there is no description in the judgment or order, ordering the partition and appointing partitioners. (b) The partitioners were wholly unable to partition the land from the order of the court, and were necessarily required to make independent investigations as to its locality, and this they were * * * without authority to do.

"Fourth. The order of the court confirming or approving the partition of the commissioners is void. (a) Because the map or plat did not become a part of the record of the probate proceedings, and, without that, the whole matter of partition and division of the property is unintelligible. (b) Because the judgment of the court does not undertake to divest the title, and invest it respectively as required by statute. (c) Because there was nothing in the record to put a purchaser or occupant upon notice.

"Fifth. The judgment is void, and the entire partition proceedings are void. (a) Because there does not appear to have been any pending administration. (b) Because, if there was, it does not appear from the judgment or the record or anything offered in evidence that the heirs set out in the petition of the administrator for the partition were ever cited as required by law. (c) Because there does not appear from the records or proceedings or the evidence offered that the court instructed or directed the issuance of the writs of partition to the commissioners.

"Sixth. If it should be held that the partition proceedings were regular and valid, nevertheless the judgment of the court is erroneous, because the commissioners in making the partition set off to W. W. McNeill in fee simple the premises and property involved and claimed by Mrs. Fagan, and it appears that she and those under whom she claims had acquired by mesne conveyance his interest therein, and that the plaintiffs have no right or title thereto.

"Seventh. The jury found, on a proper submission by the court: That Polly Parnell (through whom Mrs. Fagan claims title) built a three-room house on the premises, inclosed it by fence, sunk a storm cellar and well, and went into the possession thereof October 1, 1893; that she remained in the possession from that time to 1901; that Mrs. Fagan purchased the property from Mrs. Parnell (admittedly) July 2, 1901, paid her $500 in cash therefor, and believed that she was acquiring the title in fee simple to the same, without any notice whatever that plaintiffs were making any adverse claim thereto; that subsequently she made a contract with the ice company, by which she was to convey the lot and adjoining one to the company upon the payment to her of the consideration of $1,000; that she prepared a deed, was ready to deliver it; that the company failed to pay her, though it had constructed valuable improvements on the property in the meantime, and turned back the improvements and the possession to her, all of which is disclosed in the findings of the jury 9 to 12, inclusive.

"Eighth. The court erred in not rendering a judgment for the defendants on the findings of fact, as found by the jury and by the court."

Appellants' first assignment was disregarded on the first submission for the reasons given in the opinion then filed. By the amended brief the matter constituting the first assignment in the record, as above quoted, is submitted in eight parts, designated, respectively: First assignment of error, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth subdivisions of the first assignment of error. Each of these is followed by propositions, statements, and authorities, as though they constituted separate assignments of error. In dividing the assignment of error, appellants seem to have made each ground of error therein, as above numbered, the basis for one of their subdivisions, thus presenting eight assignments of error in the one. Most of these subdivisions, it will be seen, are not in the form of an assignment of error, in that they do not complain of any ruling of the court, but rather are in the nature of propositions of law. We have concluded that none of these matters can be considered by us. The difficulty in appellants' way appears to be that the first assignment of error filed below is a comprehensive attack on the judgment because of numerous erroneous rulings made during progress of the trial, rather than an attack upon any particular ruling itself. We know of no authority to subdivide an assignment of error to avoid multiplicity, even if by so doing good assignments were presented in the brief, for obviously the assignments thus presented would not be copies of the assignments filed below, as required by the rules. The primary purpose of an assignment is to point out the particular ruling of the court complained of, and obviously an assignment of error that the court erred in rendering a certain judgment because he had previously erred in a half dozen rulings on evidence and in as many charges given and refused, is not specification of error at all. So that whether we treat appellants' eight subdivisions of assignment No. 1 as constituting a single assignment, as filed below, or whether we treat them as separate assignments, as presented in the brief, we are yet unable to consider them. They are therefore stricken out and disregarded.

The other assignments of error were disposed of in our opinion already referred to, and for the reasons there given are overruled.

CONNER, Chief Justice, inclines to the view that, irrespective of the insufficiency of the assignments of error, and as matter apparent of record, appellant Maggie Fagan was entitled to the value of her improvements in good faith, as shown in the verdict.

The judgment of the district court is affirmed.

1. PLEADING (§ 280*)—ANSWER—"SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER."

The office of a supplemental answer is, not to supply matter which should have formed a part of the original answer, but is restricted to replies to what may be embraced in the supplemental petition, and it cannot be made to serve the purpose of aiding a defective statement in the original answer, or to add any new matter only available against the cause of action stated in the original petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 842-846; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, p. 6798.]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 308*)—ACTION FOR PURCHASE PRICE—DEFENSES.

A purchaser may defeat the collection of the purchase money by showing the existence of a superior outstanding title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 877-899; Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 315*)—ACTION FOR PURCHASE PRICE—DEFENSES—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a purchaser holds under an executed contract of conveyance, to defeat the collection of the price, he must show with reasonable certainty that there has been a total or partial failure of title, that there is danger of eviction, and such facts as will prima facie repel the presumption that, at the time of the purchase, he knew and intended to assume the risk of the defect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 928, 928½; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 315*)—ACTION FOR PURCHASE PRICE—DEFENSES—BURDEN OF PROOF.

A conveyance of land to the purchaser, who gave a note for the price of the land, title to which was warranted by the vendor, amounts to an executed contract, within the rule that a purchaser holding under an executed contract must show a failure of title and a danger of eviction, and that he did not know and assume the risk of the defect in the title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 928, 928½; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 314*)—ACTION FOR PURCHASE PRICE—DEFENSES—PLEADING.

A purchaser in an executed contract of conveyance, who merely alleges that the county records do not show title in the vendor, without alleging any outstanding title or denying that the vendor had a good title, and without indicating any danger of eviction, does not allege facts sufficient to defeat the collection of the price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 922; Dec. Dig. § 314.*]

6. PLEADING (§ 228*)—EXCEPTION—EFFECT OF JUDGMENT SUSTAINING EXCEPTION.

A judgment sustaining an exception to a pleading should be construed as going no further than the exception itself.

Appeal from District Court, Cass County; P. A. Turner, Judge.

HODGES, J. On the 9th day of January, 1909, the appellee filed this suit against the appellant to recover the sum of $1,500 due on a promissory note executed by the appellant as a part of the purchase money of certain described tracts of land theretofore conveyed to him by the appellee. The petition sought a foreclosure of the vendor's lien on the lands conveyed, as well as a personal judgment. The appellant answered by a general demurrer, general denial, and, among other special defenses, the following: "And further specially answering the plaintiff's petition and cause of action, says that the note sued on herein was executed by defendant to plaintiff in part consideration for the purchase money for the lands described in plaintiff's petition, and that plaintiff warranted the title to said lands, and agreed to furnish this defendant with abstracts of title to said lands showing a complete and perfect record title to all of said lands in the plaintiff; but, to the contrary, said abstracts, as well as the records of Cass county, Tex., show that plaintiff did not have or own a complete and perfect title to said lands which he agreed to convey to this defendant, and that the title to said lands has failed, and that therefore the consideration for the execution and delivery of said note herein sued on to the plaintiff by this defendant has wholly failed, and plaintiff is not entitled to recover thereon against this defendant." The appellee filed a supplemental petition in reply to the appellant's answer, in which he "excepts specially to that portion of defendant's answer wherein the defendant avers that the title to said lands has failed. In that defendant fails to aver in what way the title had failed and in whom, if any one, the outstanding title is vested." Other matters of fact were also pleaded, not necessary here to notice. This exception was sustained by the court, and thereafter the appellant filed what is termed his "First Supplemental Answer," which sets up substantially the following defenses:—(1) That the land was originally conveyed to Jane Ritchie in 1842, and there was nothing of record to show that she had conveyed any part of the land to any one, and the record did not show who were her heirs. (2) That the records of Cass county show that William Ritchie and wife conveyed 588 acres of the Jane Ritchie survey, beginning at a designated point; but there was nothing to show that the 95 acres involved in this suit was a part of that land. Also, that the deed from Ritchie and wife was irregular and void because the certificate of the officer failed to show that the parties were known to him, or their identity proved to the officer. (3) Because the abstract of title and the records of Cass county failed to show any conveyance from J. B. McReynolds to A. B. Hinckle and wife, or any other person. (4) Because the abstract of title and the records of Cass county show that Hinckle and wife attempted to authorize one McReynolds by power of attorney to convey the land, and that this is void because a married woman cannot convey land by power of attorney. (5) Because it is shown by the abstract of title and the records of Cass county that, in the conveyance of the land by J. L. White to Lee Smith in 1884, it appears that there were two vendor's lien notes, each for the sum of $417.75, which do not appear to have been paid. (6) That the records show, in the conveyance from L. C. Smith to J. L. Endsley in 1900, that there is a vendor's lien note for $800. (7) Because the abstract of title and the records show that in the conveyance from J. L. Endsley and wife to B. J. and M. D. Dodson, December, 1901, the conveyance recites a vendor's lien for two purchase-money notes which do not appear from the records to be paid. (8) That the records do not show that J. M. McReynolds ever conveyed the land to any one. In reply to this, the appellee filed his second supplemental petition, in which he renewed his special exceptions to the amended original answer, and further specially excepted to this additional pleading for the following reasons: (1) Because it was an attempt to plead an outstanding title to the lands in controversy by a supplemental answer, and not as an answer to the original petition; (2) because it attempts to plead that the title to 95 acres of the Jane Ritchie survey is outstanding as set out in the various paragraphs mentioned, but nowhere alleges in whom the title is outstanding, or in what particular the title has failed; (3) because it shows no defense to the cause of action. The court sustained the exceptions. The case was tried upon the remaining pleadings, resulting in a judgment for the appellee.

The complaint is that the court erred in sustaining appellee's special and general demurrers to the appellant's amended and supplemental answers. The first paragraph of the appellant's special answer sets up the fact that at the time he agreed to purchase the land he was ignorant of the appellee's title, but was assured by the latter that he owned a complete and perfect record title and would at once furnish appellant a full and complete abstract showing complete record title, certified to by certain named attorneys. He charges that appellee had failed to do this, but had furnished him an abstract not certified to, and one which showed that he did not have a good title to the lands conveyed. In the second paragraph of the special answer appears the language quoted, a portion of which was excepted to. It is evidently the latter part of the second paragraph to which the exception is directed—that portion which avers that the title had failed. It is not clear, from the peculiar construction of the sentence as it appears in the record, whether appellant intended to allege a failure of title, or that the records and abstract show a failure of title. It seems that counsel for appellee, and the court, construed the language used as an averment of the failure of title, and so treated it in their exception and in the judgment entered thereon. In either event, we think the court properly sustained the exception. If we regard the instrument denominated the "First Supplemental Answer" as a supplemental answer, and as containing allegations of new matter not embraced in the original answer, then it was properly stricken out by the court on objection made. The office of a supplemental answer is not to supply matter which should have formed a part of the original answer, but is restricted to replies to what may have been embraced in the supplemental petition of the plaintiff. It cannot be made to serve the purpose of aiding the defective statement of the defenses set up in the original answer, or to add new matter which could only be available against the cause of action as stated in the original petition. Townes on Pleading, 306-309.

This instrument begins as follows: "Now comes the defendant, Tom K. Blewitt, with leave of the court first had and obtained, and files this his first supplemental answer in reply to the plaintiff's special exception to defendant's first amended original answer filed herein on the 3d day of February, 1909, and says," etc. And then proceeds with the specific allegations hereinbefore mentioned. Nowhere else is there any language employed that would convey the impression that this pleading was intended as a reply to the allegations contained in the plaintiff's supplemental petition; nor are the facts stated such as might be construed as having been intended for that purpose. They could in no sense be regarded as replying to the averments of fact set up in the plaintiff's first supplemental pleading. There could be no occasion for the appellant to reply to the legal objections stated in the appellee's exception, and, since this instrument does not purport to do more, we must regard it either as a trial amendment intended to meet the objections urged in the first exception, or as a second amended original answer intended to supersede the first amended original answer. To give it the latter character would place the appellant in the attitude of having abandoned the defenses contained in the preceding answer, including his general denial, and the grounds upon which he sought affirmative relief. If it be treated as a trial amendment, which is the more liberal view, then it must be regarded as intended to meet the objections urged in the special exception and by the court sustained. It is immaterial whether it be considered an effort to plead a failure of title, or to state that the records show such a failure, as, in either event, it would be stating matter insufficient as a defense in this suit. The right of the vendee, in sales of real estate, to defeat the collection of the purchase money by showing the existence of a superior outstanding title, is sustained upon principles of equity. The courts proceed upon the ground that it would be inequitable to compel the vendee to pay the purchase money for land to which he was obtaining no title. Land & Live Stock Co. v. North, 92 Tex. 75, 45 S. W. 995. The rule seems to be that, where the vendee holds under an executed contract of conveyance, he should show with reasonable certainty that there has been a failure of title in whole or in part, that there was danger of eviction, and also such facts as would prima facie repel the presumption that at the time of purchase he knew and intended to assume the risk of the defect. Cooper v. Singleton, 19 Tex. 261, 70 Am. Dec. 333; Luckie v. McGlasson, 22 Tex. 283; Tarpley v. Poage, 2 Tex. 139; Haralson v. Langford, 66 Tex. 113, 18 S. W. 339; Ogburn v. Whitlow, 80 Tex. 239, 15 S. W. 807; Groesbeck v. Harris, 82 Tex. 416, 19 S. W. 850; Woodward v. Rodgers, 20 Tex. 176. The conveyance under which the appellant acquired the land in controversy is an "executed contract" within the meaning of this rule, for the purpose of determining what defenses he may set up in an action to recover the purchase money. Ogburn v. Whitlow, 80 Tex. 239, 15 S. W. 807; Carey v. Starr, 93 Tex. 515, 56 S. W. 325; Brown v. Montgomery, 89 Tex. 250, 34 S. W. 443. Nowhere does the appellant allege that there is an outstanding title, nor does he deny that the appellee had a good and perfect title. Neither does he attempt to aver any facts which would indicate that he is in danger of eviction. Stating what the records of Cass county show with reference to the appellee's title is not the legal equivalent of a positive averment that he has no title, or that his title is defective or imperfect. The record may furnish evidence of those facts, from which a jury might conclude that the title had failed, or was bad; but such evidence, when offered, would not be conclusive. The appellee might have a perfect title, and still the records fail to show it. The pleading of what the records show is therefore merely a statement of what might be received as evidence, and not the averment of the essential facts necessary to be proved by evidence.

We do not wish to be understood as holding that, where the vendor contracted, as one of the conditions upon which payment was to be made, that he would furnish to the vendee a complete and perfect record title to the property, a failure to do so would not be a good defense. That question is not here involved. That part of the appellant's answer which sets up the failure to furnish an abstract showing a good and perfect title was not disturbed by the exceptions sustained. The judgment of the court sustaining the exception should be construed as going no further than the exception itself. If appellant was deprived of the privilege of showing a failure to perform this alleged promise, by the exclusion of germane testimony offered for that purpose, the error, if any, was in the refusal to permit the introduction of the testimony, and not in sustaining the exceptions mentioned. No complaint has been made of any such rulings.

We do not think the court erred in overruling the application for a continuance.

The judgment of the district court is therefore affirmed.

BRAZOS OIL & LIGHT CO. v. CRAWFORD.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 6, 1909.)

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 129*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Plaintiff, a night shoveler in defendant's seedhouse, slipped just after entering and stepped into a conveyor box and was injured. Negligence was alleged, in that the conveyor had been lengthened without notice to him, and that additional lights had not been furnished, as promised. Plaintiff knew, when he entered the building, that the conveyor box extended beyond the point where he stepped, prior to its extension, and the box and conveyor were plainly distinguishable by the available light. Held, that defendant's failure to provide the light promised and to warn plaintiff of the extension of the conveyor was not the proximate cause of the injury.

Appeal from District Court, Knox County; Chas. E. Coombes, Judge.

Action by Charles W. Crawford, by his next friend, against the Brazos Oil & Light Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and rendered.

Cunningham & Oliver, for appellant. H. G. McConnell and G. B. McGuire, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. The following statement by appellant of the nature and result of this suit is sufficiently accurate to an understanding of this opinion, and it is therefore adopted, viz.: "The appellee, Charles W. Crawford, a minor 19 years of age, by his next friend, Archie Crawford, brought this suit in the district court of Knox county against appellant, Brazos Oil & Light Company, for damages for personal injuries sustained by him while working for the appellant in appellant's oil mill operated in Knox county. The house under the supervision and direction of defendant's foreman; that he worked at night and shoveled seed into a conveyor, which was composed of a trough and a spiral screw working in the trough, which conveyed cotton seed from one seedhouse to another. He alleges that he was inexperienced in that kind of work, that there was no light in the seedroom where he was injured, that a short while before the injuries he had complained to the foreman about the insufficiency of light, and that the foreman had agreed to put in good and sufficient lights. He further alleges that when he begun work the spiral screw extended into the seedroom only about 18 inches, and that it entered the room near a hole in the south end of the building which was used for a door. He alleges: That on Saturday the 9th of November, 1907, he did not work during that day or night; that on the 9th of said November, appellant put a door in the building where the hole was before and extended the shaft and metal flanges further into the building, a distance of about 22 feet, without appellee's knowledge; that on the night of the 10th of November, 1907, he was directed to go to work in the seedroom and shovel seed as he had done before; that he took a lantern and went in the room at the door to begin work; that he hung his lantern on a nail which was partly driven in the wall on the inside over the door, and then undertook to close the door which he had entered, which door opened outside of the building, and, in reaching out to pull the door to its place when shut, he stepped with his foot upon some loose cotton seed or other substances on the floor, which caused his foot to slide, and caused said minor to fall back against the wooden trough, located as aforesaid, and, seeing that he was in danger of falling upon said dangerous shaft and flanges, tried to extricate himself therefrom, but, being overbalanced and without sufficient light, was unable to do so, and, in stepping with his right foot to where he thought was a place of safety, came with his foot in contact with said shaft and metal flanges at a point a little more than two feet from the place where said shaft and flanges entered said room at the south end as aforesaid, by reason of which his leg was caught and torn and mangled and afterwards amputated. The negligence alleged was a failure to furnish sufficient light to enable appellee to perform his duties in safety, and a failure of appellant to cause said minor to be notified of the lengthening and extending, of said trough and metal flanges. Appellee sued for $20,482. The case was tried and resulted in a verdict for appellee for $4,940. A motion for a new trial was properly made and overruled by the court. Appellant gave no refusing to give to the jury, as requested, a peremptory instruction to find in appellant's favor. The evidence supports the allegations of appellee's petition as above stated, save that, as we think, it was not shown that appellant's negligence in failing to warn appellee of the extension of the cotton seed conveyor, or in failing to provide sufficient light, as promised, was the proximate cause of the unfortunate result. Appellee alleges that, in the effort to regain his balance, after having slipped on the loose cotton seed, he stepped with his right foot "to where he thought was a place of safety," and thus came in contact with the revolving blades of the conveyor. Had this allegation been supported by the proof, appellant's liability could not be doubted; but appellee, in testifying on this subject, stated on his examination in chief that: "When I first stepped in at the door, I turned around and hung the lantern on a nail over the door, and caught hold of the door, and started to pull it to and the seed rolled under my feet, and I fell backwards and threw my foot back and set it into the conveyor. I struck the conveyor with my foot about a couple of feet from the wall, I suppose. There was a hanger in the conveyor about a foot and a half from the wall, I guess. Prior to that, and on the last time that I was in the seedhouse before that, the conveyor did not extend back to that hanger. The place that my foot got caught in the conveyor was north of that hanger. I would not have got hurt if the new extension had not been put on the conveyor. I said when I got hurt that I hung the lantern up on the nail, and went to pull the door to, and the seed kinder rolled under my feet, and I staggered back, and I went to set my right foot back to catch to keep from falling, and the conveyor caught my heel." On cross-examination he testified that: "My work in the north seedhouse was that of shoveling seed into the conveyor. I had worked at that character of work in the south seedhouse for about two weeks in connection with my stepbrother. I learned that it was dangerous to put my foot into the conveyor, but I never thought much about it. * * * I had given notice, as I said, for additional lights. One of the nights that I made this request was on Friday night before, I believe. I made this request of Mr. Collins. I told him that I wanted them to put some lights in there. I would not have gone in there and worked on that occasion without they had promised me to put in lights. On that night I just worked by lantern on the part of the night that I worked in there. At that time there was just about 18 inches of this iron shaft extending into the building. The box extended on back a good little piece; but there was no auger in it, at least there was none running. If there was any in there, it was not running. That little seedhouse is a room about 30 by 40 feet. The house was very well filled up with seed, and just left a space at the south end where we stood to throw seed into the conveyor. We had plenty of room in there as far as that was concerned. On the first night that I worked in there, I hung the lantern over the hole. There was not any door in there then. * * * When I hung the lantern up over the door, I suppose I hung it up about 6½ feet high. The way I hung it I could see the conveyor. * * * On the night that I got injured, I went down to the mill and commenced work about 7 o'clock, and the first hour that I worked was in the south seedhouse, and about 10 o'clock at night my stepbrother told me to go and work in the north seedhouse. When I went to the north seedhouse, I don't remember whether the door was open or not. * * * I knew that there were no lights in the house when I went to work in there, and I went and got the lantern and went to work. * * * On the night that I got hurt, I had not worked in the seedhouse any at all. I had just walked in and hung the lantern up over the door. I had not turned to pull the door to. I just reached for the door. I hung the lantern up over the door and turned around facing south. I reached out to get the door, and my feet slipped on the cotton seed. I never fell down at all. When the conveyor caught my foot, I just kinder set down on the box, I did not fall before I put my foot in the conveyor. I staggered backwards and just set my foot back to keep from falling, and when I got my foot caught I just set down. I was trying to catch and keep from falling, and I stepped and put my foot into the conveyor."

H. V. McElwreath, the night foreman, testified: "Just outside of the door, and a little north of it, hangs an electric light near the north wall of the seedhouse and about 20 feet from the south door, where the boy was hurt. If the door to this seedroom was open, the light from this electric light would reflect inside the north seedroom. The electric light was directly in line with the west side of the door. That electric light is either 10 or 15 candle power. The lantern where I saw it sitting there was right close to the door and was also right close to the conveyor. The lantern was hung about 5 feet high. The light from the lantern shone right on the conveyor so it could be seen, and made the conveyor very plain."

There is no other evidence that throws any light on the subject, and that quoted we think merely shows that appellee involuntarily stepped into the conveyor without the thought in mind that in doing so he was stepping into a place of safety. Appellee knew, at the time he entered the building, that the box in which the conveyor operated extended beyond the point where he stepped, for, in addition to what we have already quoted from the testimony, the brother of appellee, who brought the suit as next friend, testified that: "Prior to the time of the injury, the screw part of the conveyor extended into the north seedroom about 18 inches, and the box part of it extended 6 or 7 feet. I have been in that seedroom a number of times, and have seen these conditions." Appellee, as he testified, had worked in the north seedroom on prior occasions, and therefore must have known, as is plainly indicated by his own testimony, the location of the box in which the conveyor operated. It is not to be presumed therefore that the box, rather than the floor beside it, would have been chosen as a safe place to step had appellee had time to deliberate. In addition to the testimony of the night foreman, which indicates that the box and conveyor were plainly distinguishable by the light of the lantern and of the electric light near the door, which testimony is uncontradicted, appellee himself testified, as we have before quoted, that where he hung the lantern he could see the conveyor. Then, what is there in the evidence that shows that appellee would not have made the instinctive effort he did to retrieve his position, or would have placed his foot otherwise than as he did, had he been warned of the extension of the conveyor, or had the additional lights been furnished as promised? In other words, what causal connection exists between the negligence alleged and the injury?

We have been unable to see any, and to so establish was one of the essential elements of appellee's case. T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Shoemaker, 98 Tex. 456, 84 S. W. 1049; Seale v. G. & S. F. Ry. Co., 65 Tex. 274, 57 Am. Rep. 602; F. W. & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Neely (Civ. App.) 60 S. W. 282; Neely v. Ft. Worth & R. G. Ry. Co., 96 Tex. 274, 72 S. W. 159; 1 Thompson on Negligence, § 43 et seq. No complaint is made because of the presence, character, or situation of the cotton seed over which appellee slipped, or that a want of sufficient light in any degree contributed to the fact that his foot did slip over the rolling seed. The rolling seed and the immediate result were evidently among the risks of appellee's employment, for which appellant is not liable. Nor is it alleged that in extending the conveyor appellant was guilty of negligence. The averment goes no farther than that appellant was negligent in failing to warn appellee of the fact of extension. Therefore it may be true, as he testified, that appellee would not have been injured had the conveyor not been extended; but this is not enough, under appellee's pleading, to fix liability. It should have been made to further appear that the injury would not have happened had light been furnished as promised, or had appellee been warned or notified of the added conveyor. In other words, as before stated, it must affirmatively appear that the particular negligence alleged caused the injury; whereas, as presented in the record before us, it seems undisputed that the concurring causes—those without which appellee would not have been injured—were happenings not made grounds of recovery.

It follows that appellee has failed to show a right of recovery herein, and, inasmuch as appellee was afforded full opportunity to testify and fully develop his case, we conclude that the judgment should be reversed, and here rendered for appellant, and it will be so ordered; other assignments being disregarded as immaterial, in view of our conclusion.

SMITH v. GUNN.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 1, 1909.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 300*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—BREACH BY CONTRACTOR—LIABILITY.

A contractor failing to complete a building within the agreed time cannot escape liability therefor by showing that he notified the owner that he would finish the building within a short time, on receiving notice that the owner desired to use or rent the building, and that the owner negligently failed to give any notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1372-1381; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

2. DAMAGES (§ 9*)—NOMINAL DAMAGES—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

A contractor, sued for failing to complete a building within the agreed time, is liable for nominal damages and costs, though he shows that during the inexcusable delay the building would not have had a use or rental value to the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-15; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 349*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—EVIDENCE.

Where an owner sued the contractor for the rental value of a building while the contractor delayed its completion, in violation of the contract fixing the time for the completion of the work, it was error to require the owner to testify that he went out of business, and that, after he did so, he made no effort to rent another building to continue such business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 349.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 349*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the rental value of a building during the time the contractor delayed its construction beyond the time fixed, any testimony bearing on the question of rental value is admissible.

Appeal from Williamson County Court; T. J. Lawhon, Judge.

Action by W. G. Smith against A. A. Gunn. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. A. Barlow, for appellant. Stanton Allen and Wilcox & Graves, for appellee.

KEY, J. W. G. Smith brought this suit against A. A. Gunn seeking to recover damages for alleged delay in completing a certain building, which it was alleged Gunn had contracted and agreed to complete and deliver within 90 days from the date of the contract. The plaintiff alleged that the building was not completed until 9½ months after the time agreed upon for its completion. The defendant's answer included a general demurrer, several special exceptions, a general denial, and a special plea setting up certain matters, which we deem it unnecessary to set out in detail. The plaintiff filed a first supplemental petition, and the defendant filed a first supplemental answer, the particulars of which need not be here stated. There was a jury trial, which resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed. After the plaintiff filed his motion for a new trial, and before it was overruled, the defendant filed what was termed a "remitter" of so much of the judgment as taxed the costs against the plaintiff, and asked that the costs be taxed against the defendant. The court granted that motion, and then overruled the plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

We have neither the time nor disposition to discuss in detail the numerous assignments of error presented in appellant's brief, and shall confine the discussion, in the main, to the errors which require a reversal of the judgment. The defendant urged, and the trial court approved, a ground of defense which has no support in law and no place in the case. The defense referred to is indicated by the following paragraph of the court's charge, which is assigned as error: "If you find from the evidence that the defendant delayed the construction and delivery of said building, and you find that such delay, if any, is not excused by your findings under instructions above given you, and you further find that the defendant informed plaintiff at the beginning or during such delay, if any, that he (defendant) would deliver to plaintiff said building within a short period of time upon notice by plaintiff to defendant that plaintiff desired to use or rent said building, and you further find that defendant could and would have delivered said building within such a period of time upon such notice, and you further find that plaintiff, in the exercise of ordinary care, to prevent the accrual of damage to him—that is, such care as an ordinarily careful and prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances—should have given such notice to defendant, if he desired and could use or rent same, and you further find that plaintiff did not give such notice, then you are instructed that you will not find for plaintiff any damages, which you may find that plaintiff could have prevented, if you find he could have and should have prevented same, by giving such notice to defendant." When analyzed, it will be seen that this charge embraces the proposition that, although the defendant may have breached his contract, nevertheless the plaintiff could not recover damages on account of such breach if the defendant notified the plaintiff that he would finish and deliver the building within a short period of time, upon notice that the plaintiff desired to use or rent the building, and that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence in not giving such notice. If the defendant breached the contract by failure to complete the building within the time agreed upon, he could not lay any duty upon the plaintiff, the nonperformance of which would constitute negligence, by notifying the plaintiff that he would complete and deliver the building thereafter, upon condition that plaintiff would do something dictated by the defendant. Under the circumstances referred to, if they existed, no duty rested upon the plaintiff to give the defendant the notice specified, and therefore the plaintiff could not be charged with negligence upon failing to give such notice. There is no rule of law or equity that will permit a wrongdoer to dictate the terms upon which he will repair the wrong or diminish its injurious effect, and then assert as a defense the failure of the injured party to comply with the terms dictated by such wrongdoer. The doctrine of contributory negligence has no application to this case, nor does this belong to the class of cases where a plaintiff is required to exercise care to prevent or diminish injury. Hence we hold that the trial court committed error in giving countenance to the defense referred to, in admitting testimony in support of that defense, and in giving the charge above set out.

There was also error committed in that portion of the court's charge which instructed the jury that if there was inexcusable delay in the construction and delivery of the building, but that during the time of such delay the building would not have had a use or rental value to the plaintiff, then to return a verdict for the defendant. Under the circumstances referred to, the plaintiff would have been entitled to a verdict and judgment for nominal damages and costs, and for that reason it was error to give such instruction. Whether or not that error was cured by the alleged remittitur, and the decision of the court in adjudging the costs against the defendant, it is not necessary to decide, as that question is not likely to arise upon another trial. However, it would seem that when, upon a given state of facts a litigant is entitled to a judgment in his favor on the merits of the case, the error in rendering judgment on the merits for his adversary is not entirely cured by taxing the costs against such adversary, even though the complaining litigant was only entitled to recover a nominal sum.

We also hold that error was committed in requiring the plaintiff, over his objection, to state to the jury when he went out of the grocery business, and that after he went out of that business he made no effort to rent another building to continue such business in. The plaintiff sued for what would have been the rental value of the building during the time of the delay in its construction, and not for what it would have been worth to him for use in his business, and therefore the testimony referred to was immaterial.

We overrule the various assignments which complain of the action of the court in admitting certain testimony bearing upon the question of rental value of the building. Some of it consisted of circumstances only, which, considered separately, may have been of but little probative force; but all of the testimony referred to had a material bearing on the question of rental value, and therefore was admissible. 6 Cyc. 114, and cases there cited; 13 Cyc. 158, and cases there cited.

All the assignments of error presenting other questions have been considered and are overruled.

For the errors pointed out, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

MYERS v. MOODY.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 17, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 8, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 342*) — PLATS — 'OFFICIAL PLATS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 62, provides that all records, surveys, maps, papers, and documents pertaining to lands of the late republic shall constitute a part of the archives of the General Land Office. Article 2306 provides for the admission of copies of records of all public officers, certified, etc., together with copies of all records in the land office, and article 2308 requires a record of all surveys by the county surveyor with plats thereof, certified copies of which may be used as evidence. Held, that sketches and plats made in the General Land Office from maps of H. county were admissible in a boundary line dispute concerning land located therein, though the maps were not made contemporaneously with the date of location of the different surveys.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1304; Dec. Dig. § 342.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where there was no dispute as to the location of the south boundary of a survey when pointed out to a surveyor, the admission of the surveyor's evidence that the line was pointed out to him by two persons designated, without evidence that either of such persons knew where the line was on the ground, was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4163; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1052*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

An objection to the admission of evidence is unavailing, where another witness is permitted to give the same testimony without objection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4171; Dec. Dig. § 1052.*]

4. BOUNDARIES (§ 35*)—EVIDENCE—LOCATION AND LINE.

In a boundary line dispute, a witness was properly allowed to state the fact of having run the line at a certain place and time, whether he knew where the original line was run or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 158; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

5. BOUNDARIES (§ 35*)—ASCERTAINMENT OF LINES—EVIDENCE.

In a boundary line dispute, a witness was properly permitted to testify that G., a surveyor, was with him on an occasion when witness found a marked boundary line concerning which he testified.

6. BOUNDARIES (§ 37*) — ESTABLISHMENT — EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a judgment establishing a boundary line between certain surveys.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County, Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Action by L. B. Moody against W. D. Myers. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. P. & Otis K. Hamblen, for appellant. L. B. Moody, for appellee.

FLY, J. This is a suit instituted by appellee, and involves the boundary between his land on the south and appellant's land on the north. A large number of parties were brought into the suit; but a severance was granted, and the case was tried as one entirely separate and distinct from the others, and judgment was rendered fixing the boundary as desired by appellee. The contention of appellee, which was sustained by the court and supported by the evidence, was that the south line of his land, known as the "Culp tract," is situated 883 varas south of where appellant claims that it is situated. The beginning point of the Reeves survey, of which appellant claims the west half, called for the northeast corner of the Wilson survey, and there was a call for the southwest corner of the Reeves survey as being on the north line of the Wilson league. The contest was therefore to show the position of the north line of the Wilson league, to which the Reeves was tied by its field notes. The evidence satisfactorily showed that line to be where it was claimed to be by appellee.

The first assignment of error assails the action of the court in admitting in evidence certain sketches and plats made in the General Land Office from maps of Harris county; the objection urged being that the maps were not made contemporaneously with the date of locations of the different surveys. We are not aware of any law requiring maps of counties to be made contemporaneously with the making of surveys therein in order to be authentic archives of the General Land Office. To sustain such a proposition would involve the construction and manufacture of a multiplicity of maps. The plats were admissible in evidence. Rev. St. 1895, arts. 62, 2306, 2308.

The second assignment of error complains of the admission in evidence of statements of Stimson, a surveyor, that the south line of the Rankin survey had been pointed out to him by Dunks and Singleton; the grounds of objection being that there was no evidence that either knew where the south line of the Rankin survey was on the ground, and that any statement they made would be self-serving, as they owned the north half, and there was a dispute as to the north and south halves of the Rankin survey between Judge Tod and parties living about him. The bill of exception shows that there was no dispute between Tod and others at the time the south line of the Rankin survey was pointed out to the surveyor by Dunks and Singleton. The objections seem to attack the weight of the evidence, rather than its admissibility. Another surveyor was permitted, without objection on the part of appellant, to state that Singleton and another man, thought to be Dunks, pointed out the south line of the Rankin survey to him, and therefore appellant lost any right he may have had to complain of the admission of the testimony of Stimson.

The third assignment of error objects to testimony of the witness Lynch that he and Jim Minter, the county surveyor of Liberty county, had, in 1873 or 1874, run the north and south lines of the Whitlock survey, which lies west of the Reeves and north of the Wilson survey, and south of the Rankin survey, and that the line now established as the south line of the Rankin survey was the north line of the Whitlock survey. The grounds of objection to the evidence were that it was not shown that either Lynch or Minter knew where those lines were originally located, and the evidence was immaterial and hearsay. It was permissible for the witness to state the fact of having run the line at a certain place, at a certain time, whether he knew where the original line was run or not, and the statement of that fact could not be hearsay. It was material because some of the owners of the Rankin survey had pointed out the line as being the original south line of the Rankin.

In the same assignment of error, there is an objection to the testimony of Lynch that, some time between 1866 and 1870, he, in company with J. J. Gillespie, John M. Sims, and others, surveyed the Reeves tract, that they began at the southwest corner of the Whitlock, and ran out a continuation of the south line of the Whitlock with the Reeves south line, and that it came out about one-half a mile south of the north line established by Polk for the Wilson survey, or, in other words, where appellee now claims that the Wilson north line and the Reeves south line are situated. The ground of objection was that it was not shown that Lynch or his companions knew where the lines of the Wilson survey were located. In the only proposition under the assignment, it is stated "such declarations are never admissible in evidence, unless it is shown that the persons making them were the original surveyors who located the land, or it is otherwise shown that they knew where the lines were originally located." The declarations of no one were sworn to by Lynch, and we are unable to see the applicability or pertinence of the proposition. The Court of Civil Appeals of the First district passed upon the same testimony of the same witness under a like objection, and said: "As to the testimony of Lynch, to which objection was made, it was admissible, since he testified to no more than that the surveyor, Gillespie, was with him when he found the marked line about which he testifies. He relates no declaration of Gillespie, but merely shows how, when, and under what circumstances the witness gained his knowledge." Hornberger v. Giddings, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 283, 71 S. W. 989.

The evidence fully supports the judgment of the court. The Rankin survey, which lies north of the Whitlock and part of the Culp surveys, is an older survey than the Whitlock, and the latter is older than the Wilson, which lies south of the Whitlock and the Reeves, of which appellant owns the west half. The Wilson survey was made in 1833 on vacant land lying south of the Whitlock, and the land where the Reeves is now, and north of the Jackson survey. The Wilson survey calls for the northwest corner of the Jackson survey on the San Jacinto river and runs east from that point on the north line of the Jackson, 5,742 varas, for its southeast corner; thence north, 3,496 varas, for corner; thence east to the river, 8,205 varas, to the southwest corner of the Whitlock survey; thence with the meanderings of the river to the place of the beginning. The south line of the Whitlock being the north line of the Wilson it became necessary to establish that line, which was dependent upon the location of the south line of the Rankin, which was an older survey than the Whitlock. Stimson, a surveyor, placed the south line of the Rankin where it was placed in the case of Hornberger v. Giddings, hereinbefore referred to. He stated that the line was recognized in the community as the south line of the Rankin, and that up to 1894 it was the only line run there, but that two other lines have been run since then. Several witnesses corroborated that witness as to the location of the south line of the Rankin survey. The witness Lynch stated that there were ancient marks on that line showing its location in 1874. He had lived near the Rankin and Whitlock surveys since 1860. The field notes of the Whitlock call for a distance of 5,000 varas south from the Rankin south line. When the Whitlock was surveyed, the land south of the Rankin was vacant and unappropriated. Measuring from the southeast corner of the Whitlock, 5,000 varas from the south line of the Rankin as established in this case and in Hornberger v. Giddings, a line, upon which ancient landmarks were found in 1874, was run west to the river. That this was the south line of the Whitlock, and necessarily the north line of the Wilson, was shown not only by the marks on the trees in 1874, but by the general reputation in the community. The line as located gives a little less amount of land than the Whitlock was entitled to. To establish it as desired by appellant would reduce its size about 1,000 acres. Stimson testified that the north line of the Wilson as called for in the field notes is 8,205 varas long, and that the line located by him was the same length; but, if the contention of appellant prevailed, it would be 9,300 varas more than it should be. This would result from the bend in the river preventing the line from reaching the river under that distance. Under the claim of appellant, the Wilson tract would have over 300 varas more from north to south than it is entitled to, making an excess of 500 or 600 acres. Following the meanderings of the river, the lines as found by the lower court would more nearly conform to the field notes than they would at any other points. The south line of the Whitlock as claimed by appellee and found by the court was shown to be exactly where it was located in Hornberger v. Giddings. Lynch testified: That he and his companions, at some time between 1867 and 1870, started at the southwest corner of the Whitlock, which is on the San Jacinto river, and ran the north line of the Wilson to its full distance south of the Whitlock and the Reeves to the southeast corner of the latter; that they passed through Gum Gully, south of the Reeves, and found a hacked line at that time, and the hacks were old then; that the line so established was about a half a mile south of what is known as the "Polk line," and which is claimed by appellant to be the true boundary between the Reeves and Wilson.

The field notes of appellee call for the north line of the Reeves, and, if it is placed where appellee claims that it should be placed, he will have his full quota of land, and appellant will have his full quantity; but, if placed where appellant claims that it should be located, appellee would have less than his quantity, and the Wilson survey would have more.

The judgment is affirmed.

Only actual notice of the reduction of an employe's wages by a general reduction of employe's wages, given directly by the employer or indirectly through other employes, would terminate the contract of employment, and there could be no constructive notice of the reduction to the employe, nor was he bound to exercise diligence to learn of a reduction.

2. TRIAL (§ 193*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

An instruction which indicated to the jury the court's opinion as to the effect of certain evidence on plaintiff's case was improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 436-438; Dec. Dig. § 193.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 80*)—COMPENSATION—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

In an employe's action for the difference between his original salary and the amount which the employer claimed was his salary after it had been reduced by giving notice to all employes of a general reduction in wages, plaintiff claiming that he received no such notice, a requested charge that the old contract of employment controlled until a new one was made, while technically correct, was calculated to mislead on the facts as requiring the formal termination of the old contract and a formal execution of a new contract, when any new contract might have arisen from plaintiff's continuing to work after actual notice of the reduction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 123; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 70*)—COMPENSATION—WAGES—CONTRACT—MODIFICATION—NOTICE.

While an employe's continuance in the employer's service with notice of a general reduction of wages would show an acceptance thereof, the notice must have informed the employe that his wages had been reduced, and knowledge that the wages of other employes had been reduced would not be sufficient, unless his were included therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 86; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—PREJUDICIAL EFFECT.

In an employe's action for the difference between his original salary and the amount which the employer claimed was his salary after it had been reduced by a general reduction of employe's wages, where plaintiff claimed that he received no notice of such reduction, error in admitting testimony that defendant would have lost money if wages had not been reduced, because not within the issues which were the fact of a reduction and plaintiff's acceptance thereof, was harmful to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4154; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 80*)—COMPENSATION—ACTION—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—CONFORMITY TO ISSUES.

In an employe's action for the difference between his original salary and the amount which the employer claimed was his salary after it had been reduced by a general reduction of whether other mills had reduced the wages of their employes, and as to why employes accepted a reduction in wages, and defendant's purpose in cutting wages—was inadmissible under the issues which were the fact of a reduction in wages and plaintiff's acceptance thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 114; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 80*)—ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an employe's action for the difference between his original salary and the amount which the employer claimed was his salary after it had been reduced by giving notice to employes of a general reduction in wages, of which plaintiff claimed to have received no notice, testimony by defendant's manager of a notice of reduction of wages given at a meeting of employes was admissible as a basis for showing that plaintiff received notice thereof, though not at the meeting.

Appeal from Tyler County Court; A. G. Reid, Judge.

Action by W. G. Pennington against the Thompson Bros. Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff for a less amount than claimed, he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. A. Johnson and Joe. W. Thomas, for appellant. Mooney & Mann, for appellee.

FLY, J. Appellant sued appellee in the justice's court for $195 alleged to be due for labor performed for the company, at the rate of $65 a month, in running a pump and hauling wood and other fuel. The petition declared on both express and implied contracts. Appellee admitted owing appellant the sum of $6.10, and tendered that amount into court. The justice of the peace rendered judgment for appellant for that sum, and, on appeal to the county court, the cause was tried by jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of appellant for the same sum recovered in the justice's court.

Appellant testified that he had been receiving $65 a month, and had no notice that there had been a lowering of his wages until May 1, 1908, at which time he was informed that there had been a cut in his wages. He sought to recover the difference between $65 and $46.80 for six months. He swore that, had he known that his wages had been lowered, he would not have worked for appellee. The vice president of appellee swore that appellant was working for appellee for the sum of $65 a month for quite a while; that in October he adopted a new scale of wages, first, a reduction of 20 per cent., and, second, of 10 per cent. One reduction was to take place on November 1, 1907, and the other on December 1, 1907. He did not notify appellant in person of the reduction, but sent out notices to all the men he could requesting them to meet him and have a talk. About 75 out of 200 of the men met him, and he told them of the reduction in wages intended by him. The point as to notice was a sharply contested one, and yet, in a special charge requested by the appellee and given by the court, the issue was taken from the jury, and they were informed that the contract between appellant and appellee for $65 was terminated on November 1, 1907. In the absence of notice direct or indirect to appellant of the change made in his wages, there was no termination of the contract between appellant and appellee. The charge was accompanied by an instruction that notice of the declaration of the manager should have been given to appellant, and that, if the jury found that appellant had actual or constructual notice of the declaration of termination of the contract, they should find for appellee. There could be no constructive notice of the change in the wages of the employees under the facts of this case. Notice may have been direct or indirect; that is, given by the appellee itself, or by others to whom the notice was given, but constructive notice could have no place in this case. The court not only bound appellant by constructive notice, which must have been confusing to any jury, but also made it incumbent on appellant to exercise diligence to ascertain that a change in the contract had been made. No such duty rested on him. The old contract of $65 a month prevailed until it was terminated by both parties, and, in order to create an implied contract that less wages would be given and accepted, it became necessary to show that notice was given by appellee to appellant, directly or indirectly, that his wages had been lowered, and, after receiving such notice, that he had remained in the service of appellee. Only actual notice would meet the demands of the case whether it reached appellant directly or indirectly. If he was told by appellee's manager or any one else conversant with the facts that his wages, together with those of all employees, had been lowered, and after such notice he remained in the service of appellee, the implication would arise that he had accepted the reduction of his wages.

The language of the court, complained of in the second assignment of error, was improper as indicating to the jury the opinion of the court as to the effect of certain evidence on the case of appellant.

The fourth assignment of error complains of the refusal of the court to give a special charge in which it was stated substantially that the old contract would prevail until a new one was made. The charge, while technically correct, was calculated to mislead the jury, because it would seem to require the formal abrogation of the old contract and the formal making of a new one, while, if there was a setting aside of the old contract, it arose from notice to appellant that it had been abrogated, and, if there was a new contract, it arose from a continuance by appellant in the service of appellee after actual notice of the reduction of his wages proposed by appellee. A charge should have been framed which conformed to the facts of the case.

The charge whose rejection is complained of in the fifth assignment was, so far as it went, a correct proposition of law, and should have been given by the court. In order to bind appellant by the reduction of his wages, he must have had actual notice of the reduction of his wages, and must have accepted the reduction. Of course, acceptance of the reduction would be indicated by his remaining in the service of appellee after full knowledge of the reduction. The notice must have been such as to inform appellant that his wages had been reduced, and notice that the wages of others had been reduced, unless his were also included therein, would not be sufficient notice.

It was not proper to ask witnesses whether every one but appellant had accepted the cut in wages, or if there was any reason why appellant should have been excepted from the reduction. These matters were not issues in the case. The only issue was as to whether there was a general reduction of wages and as to whether appellant accepted the reduction. The fact that all others had accepted the cut, and that there was no reason for excepting appellant from the general reduction, could not affect the question of his knowledge of the reduction of his wages and his acceptance of the same. The court erred in permitting the introduction of such testimony as that complained of in the sixth assignment of error.

Appellee's manager should not have been permitted to testify that his company would have lost money if the wages had not been reduced. The propriety of the reduction of the wages was not an issue in the case, and speculations as to what might have happened to appellee if the reduction had not been made were not made to assist the jury in arriving at a decision as to whether the reduction had been made and appellant had accepted it after notice of the same. The evidence must have been harmful to appellant if it was considered at all.

Testimony as to other mills having reduced the wages of their employees was totally foreign to the issues in this case, and should have been excluded. The same may be said as to the opinions of witnesses as to why employees accepted a reduction in wages, and the statement of appellee's manager as to what purpose he had in view in cutting down wages. These matters were totally foreign to the issues in the case.

It was proper to allow testimony of the notice of the reduction of wages given by the manager at the meeting of the employees called by him, as a basis for showing that

ST. LOUIS SOUTHWESTERN RY. CO. OF TEXAS v. KING.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 9, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 936*)—PRESUMPTIONS—AWARD OF COSTS.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1436, provides that on appeal or certiorari taken by the party against whom judgment was rendered in the lower court, if the judgment of the upper court be against him, but for a less amount, he shall recover the costs of the upper court, but shall be adjudged to pay the costs of the lower court, and, if the judgment be against him for the same or greater amount than in the lower court, the adverse party shall recover the costs of both courts. Article 1438 provides that the court may, for good cause, be stated on the record, adjudge the costs otherwise than as provided in article 1436. Held that, where no reasons are stated on the record for adjudging costs other than as provided by article 1436, it will be presumed on appeal that good cause did not exist.

Appeal from District Court, Morris County: P. A. Turner, Judge.

Action by Henry King against the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company of Texas. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reformed and affirmed.

J. M. Burford, Glass, Estes, King & Burford, and E. B. Perkins, for appellant. W. E. Moore, for appellee.

WILLSON, C. J. In a justice court of Morris county appellee recovered a judgment against appellant for $150 and costs. The county court of the county being without jurisdiction in such cases, appellant appealed to the district court, where a judgment against it in appellee's favor for $115 and costs was rendered. From the latter judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The contention is that the judgment is erroneous, in that it adjudges the costs of both the justice and the district court against appellant, notwithstanding the judgment of the latter court was for a less amount than the amount of the judgment rendered in the justice court. The statute declares that "in cases of appeal or certiorari taken by the party against whom the judgment was rendered in the court below, if the judgment of the court above be against him, but for a less amount, such party shall recover the costs of the court above, but shall be adjudged to pay the costs of the court below; if the judgment be against him for the same or a greater amount than in the court below, the adverse party shall recover the costs of both courts."

Id. article 1438. Why the court refused to adjudge the costs as directed by the statute does not appear from anything in the record. He may have had "good cause" for so refusing and for adjudging them as he did. But should it be presumed in support of the judgment that "good cause" for his action existed? We think not. Lumpkin v. Williams, 119 S. W. 917. The right conferred by the statute to have the costs adjudged as it directs is a substantial and frequently an important one. It could not have been the purpose of the Legislature to leave its enforcement to an unchallengeable discretion on the part of the trial judge, else it would not have required that his reason for otherwise adjudging them should be "stated on the record." On the contrary, we think the purpose in requiring the reasons of the court to be so stated was to guard against the exercise by him of an arbitrary discretion by making it possible for a litigant affected by the ruling always to know why the direction of the statute was ignored in his case, and, if he sees proper to do so, to present for review in an appellate court a question as to the sufficiency of the reasons influencing the court to so ignore the direction of the statute. We are inclined to believe that the purpose of the statute can be more effectually accomplished by indulging a presumption that "good cause" did not exist, when none is "stated on the record," than by indulging a presumption in such a case that "good cause" did exist. In no other way now occurring to us can the right of a party who may be aggrieved by the action of the court in adjudging costs otherwise than as directed by the statute to relief be better protected and enforced.

The judgment of the lower court will be so reformed as to adjudge the costs accruing in the district court in favor of appellant against appellee, instead of in favor of the latter against the former, and as so reformed it will be affirmed. The costs of this appeal will be adjudged against the appellee.

WISEGARVER v. YINGER et al.

Appeal from District Court, McLennan County; M. Surratt, Judge.

Action by Mrs. E. L. Wisegarver against Frank T. West, M. E. Yinger, and others. From a judgment for insufficient relief, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Fisher & Sears, Eugene Williams, and W. B. Carrington, for appellant. Sleeper, Boynton & Kendall and Sanford & Ross, for appellee.

FISHER, C. J. This suit was brought by plaintiff, Mrs. E. L. Wisegarver, originally against defendants Frank T. West and M. E. Yinger, and also against one S. T. Cochran, who was thereafter dismissed from the case. Plaintiff's suit, as shown in her second amended petition upon which she went to trial, is against defendants West and Yinger upon a note for $5,000 dated January 29, 1906, due on or before six months after date, providing for interest and attorney's fees, and secured by deed of trust on certain lands of defendant West in Coryell and Hamilton counties, Tex., said note being payable to order of S. T. Cochran, and executed by defendants West and Yinger, and containing this further provision: "This note may be renewed in whole or in part for another six months on the same terms by the makers hereof at their option"—plaintiff alleging that said Cochran, for valuable consideration, assigned said note and lien before maturity of the note to plaintiff, who then became the legal owner and holder thereof, and that said defendants renewed said note for another six months, in accordance with said provision in said note, and that said note had never been paid in whole or in part, wherefore plaintiff prayed for judgment against West and Yinger for principal, interest, and attorney's fees due on said note and for foreclosure of her deed of trust lien, and costs, general and special relief. Defendant West answered, as shown in his first-amended answer, upon which he went to trial, setting up fraud on the part of plaintiff in securing said note, and fraudulent conspiracy between plaintiff and the stockholders and directors of a certain corporation known as the Rock Island Construction Company for stock, in which he alleged said note was given, and further that said note was extended without his consent, he being a surety thereon, and prayed that said note and lien be canceled. Defendant Yinger answered in his second amended answer, upon which he went to trial, wherein he adopted the allegations of defendant West, contained in his amended answer above referred to, on the issue of fraud and fraudulent conspiracy, so far as applicable, and further set up that plaintiff had agreed to make a credit on said note of $1,500, which she had not done, and prayed that in no event she should have judgment for more than $3,877 with 6 per cent. interest from June 23, 1906. Plaintiff answered the pleadings of West and Yinger by her second supplemental petition, wherein, after specially excepting, she set up good faith on her part; that, if there was a binding agreement to extend, West had constructive notice of such agreement to extend; ratification by him of Yinger's acts; estoppel; that West was a joint maker with Yinger of the note sued on, and not an accommodation maker; that West and Yinger were partners; that defendants were estopped to deny the binding effect of the note; and that defendants had constructive knowledge of all the facts set up by them. Upon a trial before a jury a judgment was rendered, September 19, 1908, that plaintiff recover of defendant Yinger $6,370.87, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from date of judgment, and costs, and in favor of defendant West, and decreeing that, as to the note and lien and all other causes of action set up by plaintiff against West, he go hence without day, and recover of plaintiff and the sureties on her cost bond his costs, and that said note and lien be canceled, and that the cloud created by said deed of trust be removed.

Appellant's first assignment of error complains of the refusal of the court to give a peremptory instruction for a verdict in favor of the plaintiff against both Yinger and West for the full sum sued for, and for a foreclosure of the deed of trust executed by West to secure the notes sued upon. There are a number of assignments of error, practically to the same effect, in which it is stated that the court erred in overruling the appellant's motion for a new trial on account of the insufficiency of the evidence upon which the verdict and judgment in appellee West's favor are based. All of these assignments have been considered and are overruled; and as the case will be reversed, we think it proper to decline to further express our views upon the evidence.

There are a number of assignments of error complaining of the action of the court in refusing special instructions requested by appellant, and there are some assignments which complain of the charge of the court and of special instructions given at the request of appellee West. We think the charge, when considered in connection with the special charges given at the request of the appellant and the appellee, is sufficient to cover all of the issues presented by the record, with the exception of appellant's special instruction No. 10, which is set out on page 79 of appellant's brief. The charge of the court did, in a negative way, present this question; but, in view of the special request, we think this charge should be submitted upon another trial. Of course, if appellee West knew of the alleged fraud that had been perpetrated upon him when he bought the stock from the promoters of the Construction Company, he is in no condition to complain. Charge No. 10 pointedly calls the jury's attention to this question.

One of the special charges which was properly refused is to the effect that, before West could recover, he should have tendered back the stock for which the note was given. Certain facts appear from the record to show that this was not required to be done. West claimed that he was surety for Yinger, and that the extension of the note under an agreement between appellant and Yinger, for a valuable consideration, released him. Of course to assert this defense it was not necessary that the stock should be tendered. Further, there is some evidence tending to show that the stock in question was worthless.

One of the requested charges, and which was correctly refused, is to the effect that as it appears that West and Yinger were to share in the profits of the sale of the stock, they would be held as partners, and that a renewal of the note or extension of time by agreement between Yinger and appellant would not release West. The charge as framed loses sight of the fact that it was shown by West that he and Yinger were not partners, and that he was to receive an interest in the proceeds of the stock merely as compensation for the use of his name in securing Yinger's note.

Appellant's thirtieth, thirty-first, and thirty-second assignments complain of the action of the trial court in admitting testimony to the effect that Cochran, Davis, and others made certain false representations to West as to the character and value of the stock which was consideration of the notes sued upon. One of the propositions presented under these assignments is to the effect that such evidence should not have been heard until proof had been offered showing that the appellant participated in the fraud, or had notice of it. The objection goes merely to a question of practice, which involves the order in which the evidence is offered, and we do not think that any error was committed by the trial court. There could not well have been evidence of plaintiff's knowledge or participancy in the fraud alleged by West until there had been some evidence of fraud presented. We think that the court logically pursued the correct course; that the evidence of fraud should properly be first introduced, then followed by evidence showing the plaintiff's connection with or knowledge of it.

The thirty-fifth assignment of error complains of the charge because it does not set out, or attempt to set out, the issues raised by the appellant's petition. In view of another trial we suggest that the court more fully state the plaintiff's case, either in its general charge, or in a charge requested by appellant to that effect.

There is reversible error shown by the thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, and forty-second assignments of error. The first two assignments named complain of the action of the trial court in failing to sustain plaintiff's motion to quash the depositions of Mrs. McAuley and Mrs. Walton and M. E. Yinger, on the ground that the certificate of the notary indorsed on the envelopes, inclosing the depositions is not accompanied with an impression of his seal of office. Article 2284 of the statutes as amended (Laws 1907, p. 186, c. 91) states that the officer shall certify on the envelope inclosing depositions that he in person deposited Revised Statutes of 1895 that every notary public shall provide a seal of office, and he shall authenticate all his official acts therewith. This last statute should be read in connection with the first. It is true that the first says that the officer shall certify but it does not state that that shall be done under his signature and seal of office; it is clear from article 3507 that all of official acts shall be authenticated by seal of office. Indorsing the certificate on the envelope is certainly an official act; it is one required and demanded by law, and we know of no reason that is given why the act of making the certificate in a case of this character would not be official. He does not do it as an individual, but it is solely as an official that he performs this service.

The second two assignments complain of the action of the trial court in overruling appellant's motion to set aside the depositions of these witnesses on the ground of the fact that the postmaster had indorsed on the envelope that the deposition was taken from the hands of the officer before whom they were taken. We think this objection well taken and that the article of the constitution so referred to, making it the duty of the officer before whom the deposition is taken to certify that he has taken the same in the mail for transmission, if not directly, requires the postmaster to do so. We do not see how it can be the case. It is merely a double duty, looking to the Legislature may be satisfied with it, and a double check was an advantage. We see no reason why it should not be consistently performed by different officers.

We overrule the assignment of error, which also assigns error to the action of the court in setting aside the depositions of these witnesses on the ground that the certificates of the witnesses were false. We affirm the action of the court in setting aside the depositions of these witnesses when taken under the circumstances. The assignment was not intended to be sustained. The answers are taken and the depositions are propounded under the circumstances.

The certificate of the witnesses is substantially correct.

For the error assigned between the parties is reversed, and the case is remanded for a new trial.

*For other cases see tained by the court; and, upon plaintiff's declining further to amend, a final decree was entered dismissing his suit. Plaintiff has appealed from the decree, and has assigned as error the ruling of the court sustaining the demurrer to his petition.

The allegations in the petition are substantially: That on the day his suit was filed he was in actual possession of certain real estate therein described, holding the same as the tenant of W. F. Miller, and had been in quiet, lawful, and peaceable possession thereof, using, enjoying, and cultivating the same for about six years prior to March 14, 1908; that on or about the last-named date plaintiff began to plow the land, seed it with corn and vegetables, when defendants threatened him with violence, threw stones at him, commanded him not to plant or seed the land, and threatened to pour hot water on him if he did not desist from working on said premises; that plaintiff verily believes that defendants will carry out their said threats and assault him if he should prosecute his said lawful work; that if the land is not planted with seed and properly cultivated at this time of the year (the time the suit was brought), it will be impossible for plaintiff to raise any crop upon it, because too late in the season; and that defendants are insolvent and unable to respond in damages. Then follows the prayer for the injunction. We are of the opinion that the assignment of error is well taken. The rule is well settled that where the conduct complained of will cause irreparable injury to property rights, for which there is no adequate redress in a court of law, equity may properly interfere by injunction, and the fact that the same acts are declared to be crimes by the law of the state, and are punishable as such, constitute no defense to issuing the writ of injunction. Under such circumstances the court may properly grant the relief; but in so doing it acts solely for the purpose of protecting property rights from irreparable damage, and in no way interferes with the enforcement of the criminal laws of the state. High on Injunctions (4th Ed.) § 1415h. In such cases actual violence is not necessary to justify such relief, but it is regarded as sufficient if there is such a suggestion or display of force as to result in moral intimidation and coercion and in forcing a person of reasonable and ordinary courage to a course which he would otherwise not pursue. O'Neil v. Behanna, 182 Pa. 236, 37 Atl. 843, 38 L. R. A. 382, 61 Am. St. Rep. 702; Jersey City Printing Co. v. Cassidy, 63 N. J. Eq. 759, 53 Atl. 230; Vegeahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 44 N. E. 1077, 35 L. R. A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443.

It is said in High on Inj. (4th Ed.) § 772b, that: "An examination of the later authorities upon the subject of injunctions against trespass discloses a decided tendency to adopt the adequacy or inadequacy of the legal remedy as the sole and ultimate test to the right of equitable relief in such cases, and it would seem that the question of irreparable injury is of importance only in so far as it bears upon this fundamental question of legal remedy." The cases of Sumner v. Crawford, 91 Tex. 129, 41 S. W. 994, Lone Star Salt Co. v. Texas Short Line Ry. Co., 86 S. W. 355, City of Galveston v. Mistrot, 104 S. W. 417, and Chancey v. Allison, 107 S. W. 605, are in line with and illustrate the tendency of the modern authorities. Assuming the allegations in plaintiff's petition as true, and indulging every reasonable intendment in its favor, which must be done in testing its sufficiency as against a general demurrer, it appears that plaintiff was treated with such acts as would cause him irreparable injury to his property rights. For certainly his right to plant and cultivate his land and enjoy the products thereof, were property rights which he was entitled to exercise and enjoy without let or hindrance from the wrongful acts done and threatened by the defendants. It cannot be said as a matter of law that such acts done and threatened by them were not such as might force a person of reasonable and ordinary courage to a course which he would not otherwise pursue. The plaintiff, though he might have legally resorted to force and violence to protect his property rights from the trespasses of defendants, was not compelled to do so, but had the right to resort to the strong restraining hand of equity to protect such rights from the aggressions of defendants, who were insolvent, and could not respond in damages for their trespasses upon such rights of plaintiff.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

WHELESS v. W. Y. DAVIS & SON.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 18, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 9, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1027*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRORS NOT AFFECTING RESULT.

Where, in libel, the truth of the statements complained of was established without dispute as a defense, as authorized by Gen. Laws 1901, p. 30, c. 26, so that the only proper judgment that could be rendered was the one rendered for defendant, errors committed by the trial court were not ground for reversal.

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 54*)—ACTION FOR LIBEL—DEFENSES—TRUTH.

Under Gen. Laws 1901, p. 30, c. 26, providing that in libel the truth of the statements complained of shall be a defense, the defenses of truth pleaded and proved is a complete one, though the statements were libelous per se.

dict under peremptory instructions; it not being error to peremptorily instruct when there is no issue of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 356-364; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 54*)—DEFENSE—TRUTH.

Where, in libel, based on a statement that plaintiff was indebted to a hotel for entertainment, and that while so owing it, he, without notice to the hotel management, and in violation of the rules, removed his trunk from the hotel, leaving the bill unpaid, the evidence conclusively showed that plaintiff left the hotel while indebted for entertainment there; that he procured his trunk without saying anything to the hotel management, and the hotel management did not know that the trunk was moved out until plaintiff had left town—the truth of the libelous statement was shown, though plaintiff had claimed an offset to his bill which had been contested, and showed that he did not usually obey the rules of hotels as to the removal of baggage, without showing that the hotel management knew that fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 152; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

5. PARTNERSHIP (§ 153*)—SLANDER BY PARTNER—LIABILITY OF FIRM.

A partner is not liable for slanderous words uttered by his copartner, where it does not appear that the words were made in furtherance of the firm business, or specially authorized by the firm, or subsequently ratified by it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 274; Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

6. PARTNERSHIP (§ 153*)—SLANDER BY PARTNER—CONSPIRACY—LIABILITY OF FIRM.

A conspiracy between a partner and an employé of the firm to slander one, with which conspiracy the copartner is not connected, does not render the firm liable for the slander.

Appeal from District Court, Lamar County; T. D. Montrose, Judge.

Action by L. L. Wheless against W. Y. Davis & Son. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This action was brought by appellant against the appellees, W. Y. and Merrick Davis, as a copartnership owning and operating, under the management of Mrs. W. Y. Davis, the wife of W. Y. Davis and mother of Merrick Davis, the Merrick Hotel in Paris, Tex., at which hotel appellant had been stopping prior to the happening of the matters he complains of. The action grew out of an indebtedness of $10, admittedly due by appellant to the hotel as a balance on his board bill, against which he claimed an offset by reason of failure by the hotel management to produce and return to him a picture, "The Smokers," which he had left hanging in the hotel office, and in charge of the hotel while a guest there. By the petition the cause of action is twofold, and based upon alleged changing of his territory, as the sales representative of the Continental Tobacco Company, under the supervision of H. A. Benton, from Paris to Dallas. The slander was charged in the alleged malicious statements of Mrs. Davis and Merrick Davis acting together, in substance, that appellant had slipped his trunk out of the hotel, and had run away, leaving his board bill unpaid, made in the presence and hearing of the guests of the hotel and certain friends and acquaintances of his named. The court in the trial did not submit the allegation of slander to the jury, for reasons given in the ruling, which is complained of.

The libel was charged in the alleged false and malicious statements contained in a letter written by Merrick Davis to H. A. Benton, manager of the Continental Tobacco Company and immediate employer of appellant, and by the hotel management to the Continental Tobacco Company, and to the secretary of the Hotel Keepers' Association, of which this hotel was a member, and in the official bulletin No. 9, based on this letter issued and sent by the association to its members. The alleged defamatory matter in the letter to Benton is declared as: "He told our clerk he guessed he would pay the amount if held down to a pinch and not before. The pinch didn't come owing to his getting out of the house in the manner in which he did, and that is why the matters stand as they now are, the bill unpaid. In leaving the hotel he went to our porter, who makes the trains, and gave him the order about getting out his personal trunk and didn't say a word to the office about it, where of course all orders for baggage should be given; nor was it known to the office until after the train had left, and Lon, trunk and all were out of reach. The amount $10 is the correct amount due us by Mr. Wheless when he left last, that is just as our Mr. Edwards makes it up. My mother says that at no time did Lon ever offer to pay the difference to her if the picture was produced. She tried repeatedly, and one time particularly, to find out the reason why he would not settle up in full and failed to get any more satisfaction than that he would settle it all up at some future time. Seems that he wanted to keep putting it off as much as possible. He was a pretty hard subject to get any kind of money out of and it was all we could do to get him to make settlement at all." By an innuendo it was averred that "Lon" meant appellant, and that in writing "The pinch didn't come owing to his getting out of the house in the manner in which he did" it was intended and meant to convey to appellant's employer the defamatory charge against appellant that he had slipped his trunk out of the Merrick Hotel, leaving a part of his board bill unpaid. This letter was offered in evidence, and is quite lengthy, and purports in terms, when read connectedly and in its entirety, to make a statement, with full particulars, of the indebtedness of appellant to the hotel, and the claim of appellant in regard thereto, and his claim of the reasons for not paying the same, and the manner in which he left the hotel. The letter purports to have been written at the request of Benton, and commences with the words: "When you were here last week you remember I had quite a lengthy conversation with you in regard to a $10 balance that we had against Mr. L. L. Wheless. You told me to just get the particulars together and write them to you and that you would see that the amount was paid. I would have written you sooner but was waiting for a reply to a letter that Mr. Edwards our clerk wrote to Mr. Wheless a day or two after he left Dallas telling him that if the difference was not settled at an early date what modes we were going to use to get same." The balance of the letter continues, with statements and particulars mentioned.

The statements in the letter to the Continental Tobacco Company were alleged to be false, and written with malicious intent to injure appellant with his employer and in his business, and were defamatory as impeaching his honesty, and exposing him to contempt and hatred and ridicule and financial injury. The letter, which was in evidence, properly addressed to such company, reads: "Some time ago you had one Mr. L. L. Wheless representing your company in Paris and immediate territory who made this place (The Merrick Hotel) his headquarters during the entire time that he had this territory. When Mr. Wheless was transferred to another territory he left Paris indebted to us in the amount of $10 balance on his hotel bill which he now positively refuses to pay, and we have put forth every available effort to collect this balance from him, but it seems to no avail. We write now to know whether or not you feel disposed to lend us any aid in collecting this balance on Mr. Wheless' hotel bill. At any rate we shall greatly appreciate a reply to this letter and any other assistance you may feel disposed to give will be greatly appreciated and considered a great favor to us."

The libel in the letter written to the secretary of the Hotel Keepers' Association, and the official bulletin based on this letter, issued and sent by the association to its members, was on the alleged false and malicious statements of appellees, as follows: "Dear Sir: Below you will find the names of two delinquents, one of whom at least you may know quite well; L. L. Wheless $10, Continental Tob. Co., reg. out of Dallas." The other name this court does not regard as material to mention. The bulletin mentioned and which was by the association published to its members reads, as material to this case: "Official Delinquent Bulletin No. 9, Texas Hotel Keepers' Association. Cleburne, Texas, 4, 14, 1904. Dear Sir: The following people have been reported delinquent since last report: Name, L. L. Wheless—City, Paris—Hotel ——— Amount, $10."

It was alleged that the association existed and had for its object to notify the different hotels who are members of said association of any person who fails to pay his hotel bill where such person has been a guest, and such person is thereafter blacklisted by said association, and no hotel will receive such person as a guest until he pays in advance or gives a satisfactory reference or explanation. The evidence shows, admittedly by appellant, that he was due and owing appellees the sum of $10, as the balance due on a board bill, when he finally left the hotel. The evidence further shows that appellant, while he was a guest of the hotel, placed on the office wall a picture in the care and charge of the hotel, and that the hotel management lost or mislaid same and failed to return to him; that appellant claimed an offset or counterclaim against the debt for board claimed to be due by him to appellees. The evidence is sufficient, we think, to warrant the finding by us that appellant had offered to pay the debt claimed if appellees would return, or account for, the picture, and that appellees so knew at the time of the written communications complained of. It was indisputably shown by the evidence that appellant, at the time he finally left the hotel for Dallas, had the porter of the hotel take his trunk from his room for transfer to the depot, and that he did not make request of the hotel clerk to have his trunk so taken, and did not make known to the clerk or management, as was required by the hotel, the fact that he had the trunk so taken out. In fact appellant testified: "I did not leave any word at the office to have my trunk carried from my room; never do; never did." We make the finding that the statements complained of in the letters were indisputably proved to be true in fact. The trial was before a jury, and in accordance with their verdict a judgment was rendered.

Dudley & Dudley, Burdett & Connor, and B. Sturgeon, for appellant. Moore, Park & Birmingham and Lightfoot, Long & Wortham, for appellees.

LEVY, J. (after stating the facts as above). If in an action for libel the truth of the statements in such publication is a defense to such action, and we think it should be so ruled, then in this case, the truth of the published statements complained of appearing in the evidence, as it does, indisputably true in fact, it must be held, we think, that court (Pearson v. Burditt, 28 Tex. 172, 80 Am. Dec. 649) would not be ground for reversal (Gen. Laws 1901, p. 30, c. 26; Cranfill v. Hayden, 97 Tex. 544, 80 S. W. 609; Mitchell v. Spradley, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 43, 56 S. W. 134; Dem. Pub. Co. v. Jones, 83 Tex. 302, 18 S. W. 852; Newell on L. and S. 651, par. 68; 18 A. & E. Ency. Law, 1067). The statements published being proved true, the imputation or inference naturally arising from statements is justified by the truth of the statements. And the defense of truth under the statute and authorities cited would be complete if pleaded and proved, as in this case, even if the published statements were libelous per se, as contended for by appellant, and which we are inclined to so hold in this case. If the statements were true, and conclusively shown, even admitted, there was no issue for the jury to determine in the case, and appellees would have been entitled to a verdict under peremptory instruction from the court. It is not error to peremptorily instruct the jury when there is no issue of fact to determine. Joske v. Irvine, 91 Tex. 574, 44 S. W. 1059. That the truth of the published statements, allowable under the terms of the statute as a defense, was conclusively shown in gist and substance is evident from the record. The substance of the libel is founded in the fact that appellant is charged by the publication with owing a hotel bill, and, while so owing same and refusing to pay it, having without notice to the hotel management or authority, removed his trunk out of the hotel, leaving the bill unpaid. It was admitted by appellant that he owed the sum of $10 as a balance unpaid on a board bill when he finally left the hotel and changed his headquarters from Paris to Dallas, and that he positively refused to pay the amount. It was further admitted that in leaving the hotel he went to the porter of the hotel, who makes the trains, and had him get his trunk out of his room for transportation on the train, and did not say a word to the hotel office or management about what he had done in reference to the trunk, and did not make known to the hotel office, or any one in authority there, that he had moved out his trunk. It was conclusively shown that the hotel management did not know that the trunk was moved out until appellant and the train had left town. If these are the precise statements as published and appearing in the letters written and complained of, as they are, the sting or presence of the libel charged is justified by the truth of the statements published. The facts are true taken alone or together. It may be true that appellant positively refused to pay the board bill only until his picture was returned or its value paid him. This difference is not convert the fact, which was true, of there being an indebtedness to the hotel, into a false and defamatory statement. A debtor may claim an offset to his bill, and may be legally entitled to the offset, but until settled, by agreement of the parties or process of law, the fact remains as true that he is indebted. It does not appear from the record that appellees had agreed to credit the board bill to the value of the picture, or had adjusted the claim of appellant in any way so as to make the statement as to indebtedness by appellant false and untrue, but it does affirmatively appear that appellees were denying liability for the picture and appellant's claim to its value. The value of the picture is not conclusively shown. According to the testimony of appellees, the picture was an advertisement and reasonably worth $1. According to appellant, the picture was of extrinsic value to him, but he does not place any money value on it. But the exact amount of indebtedness is a non-essential to the plea in defense; the fact of an indebtedness is the essential, and it affirmatively appears true. It may be true that appellant in leaving the hotel did not, as he claims, usually give orders to the hotel office to have his trunk brought from his room. He does not deny that it was a rule of the hotel that guests desiring to get baggage out of their rooms, and on leaving the hotel, should give an order for removal to the hotel office with the clerk or management; nor does he prove that the hotel office knew that it was his custom to violate the rules, or that the porter had authority to execute such orders, in violation of the rules, direct from the guests. Hence the mere fact, we think, that appellant did not usually obey the rules of the hotel as to removal of baggage, in the absence of such knowledge to the hotel authority, would not warrant and be sufficient to support the holding that the substance of the charge as published is not established by the evidence. This mere fact, in the circumstances, would not make the statement as to the manner, at the particular time in question, of his leaving the hotel as published false and untrue either in substance or fact. If the gist of the charge is established by the evidence, the defendant has made his case. Hearne v. De Young, 119 Cal. 670, 52 Pac. 150, 499; Finley v. Widner, 112 Mich. 230, 70 N. W. 433. In this ruling, we think, assignments of error from 1 to 10, inclusive, are satisfactorily and properly disposed of.

By the twelfth and thirteenth assignments there is presented the question as to the admissibility of certain evidence, not allowed by the court, as bearing upon the alleged slanderous statements charged to have been spoken by Mrs. Davis and Merrick Davis acting together. We have carefully considered the contention, and think the same should be overruled. Under the pleadings of appellant, as we interpret it, a recovery would not be warranted for the alleged slander against either the copartnership, as being a tort for which the copartnership as such is not in this case liable, or W. Y. Davis individually, as no recovery is sought against him in an individual capacity for a distinct tort of himself or his wife. To construe the pleading as seeking a recovery against Merrick Davis individually for the slander would be, we think, to subject it to an objection of misjoinder of causes of action in this case, and be contrary to the construction appellant gives it as gathered from the brief. In a case for slander there is no such community of interest as would make one partner responsible in damages for the slanderous words of his copartner, or an agent of the copartnership, where it does not appear, as we construe the pleadings in the case, that the statements as spoken and claimed to be slanderous were made in furtherance of the business, or specially authorized and empowered by the partnership to be made, or subsequently ratified and adopted by the partnership. Newell on L. and S. 373; 1 Clark & Skyles on Agency, 1098; 25 Cyc. 434. It could not properly be held, we think, that the words alleged to have been spoken by Mrs. Davis appear in the allegations to have been in or during the performance or furtherance of the firm business. The allegation charging a conspiracy between Merrick Davis, one of the partners, and Mrs. Davis, an employé of the partnership, to slander the appellant, the other partner not by allegation being connected with the design and purpose of the conspirators, would not, we think, state an actionable liability for the alleged slander against the copartnership. We do not think it could be held that such conspiracy to slander is within the scope and authority of a partnership so as to make the conspiracy the subject of an action against the partnership; though it is well settled that the person wronged by the conspiracy may have his remedy against the individuals acting in or concurring in the conspiracy, in a proper suit for such injury. 1 Cooley on Torts, 209. It may be conceded, on the other contention, that the husband is liable for slanderous words spoken by his wife, in a proper suit against them. Zeliff v. Jennings, 61 Tex. 470; Taylor v. Pullen, 152 Mo. 434, 53 S. W. 1086. But the answer to this contention is that in this case the pleading, we think, could not be construed as seeking a personal judgment against them as such. The other contention in this respect as to the evidence being admissible to show malice is, we think, disposed of in the previous ruling on the action herein for libel.

In view of our conclusion disposing of this case, we do not think there could be predicated reversible error on the remaining assignments, and they are overruled.

The judgment was ordered affirmed.

CROW et al. v. FAILS et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 2, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 2, 1909.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 167*)—PROCEEDINGS—PLEADING—ALLEGATION—PROOF.

In mandamus to compel a county commissioners' court to recognize a school district, under allegations of the petition that a certain district was legally formed, and that a proposed second district changed the first without authority of law and was void, which were not excepted to, petitioners could show any fact which made void the act of the commissioners in changing the first district, including the fact that the change was without the consent of the majority of the legal voters of the first district.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 369, 370; Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 228*)—EXCEPTIONS—ADMISSIONS.

Allegations of a petition must be taken as true for the purpose of exceptions thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 590; Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 38*)—CHANGE OF DISTRICT—VALIDITY OF PROCEEDINGS—CONSENT OF VOTERS—NECESSITY.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3938, providing that, when school districts in district counties are once established, they shall not be changed without the consent of the majority of the voters of the district, the change of a legally established district by the county commissioners' court without the consent of such voters, was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 66; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

4. MANDAMUS (§ 79*)—PURPOSE OF WRIT—ENFORCEMENT OF MINISTERIAL DUTIES.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3995c, added by Laws 1897, p. 211, c. 146, § 1, requiring the county commissioners' court to adopt and enter on its record an order organizing a school district upon presentation of a proper petition by the citizens of a community, which district shall become entitled to all the privileges of districts in district counties, the commissioners' court was bound to recognize a district duly organized, and accord it all the rights and privileges of a district in district counties, and such duty was ministerial and could be enforced by mandamus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 170-176; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

5. MANDAMUS (§ 76*)—PURPOSE OF WRIT—ENFORCEMENT OF MINISTERIAL DUTIES.

Under Acts 29th Leg. 1905, p. 283, c. 124, § 89, requiring the county superintendent of public instruction to appoint one of the trustees of each school district or other qualified person to take a school census, the appointment of a census trustee by the superintendent is a ministerial duty, and may be enforced by mandamus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 158; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes require to canvass the returns and declare the result of an election for school trustees, the judgment, upon decreeing that the district was legally formed, need not further direct the commissioners to perform ministerial duties imposed upon them by statute as to legal school districts, as they were bound to do so by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 392-394; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

7. MANDAMUS (§ 187*)—HARMLESS ERROR—DECREE.

In mandamus to compel a county commissioners' court to recognize a school district and require it to canvass the returns and declare the result of an election for school trustee held therein, any error in the decree in not directing the commissioners' court to perform any ministerial duty, upon decreeing that the district was legally formed, was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 436; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

8. MANDAMUS (§ 178*) — JUDGMENT — CONSTRUCTION.

In mandamus to compel the county commissioners' court to canvass the returns of an election held for school trustees, and declare the result, and, upon a finding that no election was legally held, to declare a vacancy in the board of trustees and require the county superintendent to fill it, the decree, by declaring vacancies to exist, and directing that they be filled, in effect decreed that the election was not legally held.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 400; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

9. MANDAMUS (§ 187*)—REVIEW—RIGHT TO ALLEGE ERROR.

In such case, the commissioners' court or the county superintendent could not complain that the judgment did not expressly declare that the election was not legally held upon decreeing that a vacancy existed and directing that it be filled.

Appeal from District Court, Trinity County; S. W. Dean, Judge.

Mandamus by Ben Falls and others against C. H. Crow and others. From a decree for relators, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

O. H. Crow and J. P. Stevenson, for appellants. Kenley & Minton, for appellees.

MCMEANS, J. Suit by Ben Falls and others for mandamus against C. H. Crow, county judge of Trinity county, W. L. Avery, J. L. Manry, A. F. Reese, and B. F. Richardson, county commissioners composing the commissioners' court of Trinity county, and J. W. Bright, county superintendent of public instruction of said county, to compel the said judge and commissioners and said commissioners' court to recognize the school district created by order passed by said court on February 15, 1907, and to require said court to canvass the returns and declare the result of an election for school trustees held in said district on the first Saturday in April, 1908, and to require the said Bright, as such had been legally held, to declare a vacancy in the board of trustees and require said superintendent to fill such vacancy.

Appellees alleged in their petition: That the community school system has been in continuous operation in Trinity county. That on February 15, 1907, at a regular term of the commissioners' court of Trinity county, the said court, on the petition of Ben Falls and 16 other qualified voters, created by its order No. 40 a common school district; the said petitioners constituting a majority of the qualified voters of said district. That thereafter, on the 13th day of May, 1907, the said commissioners' court, upon petition, attempted to create, by its order No. 8, a district a large portion of which is included within the bounds of the one previously created by its order No. 40. That the first district created by order No. 40 is a valid district, and the attempt to create another district, including a large part of the territory of the district first created, is without authority of law and void; that the district first created is entitled to all the rights and privileges of a legally created district. That there is only one trustee of the district first created, and said district is entitled to two other trustees. That on April 4, 1908, a valid election was held in the district first created, for the election of two trustees, and two trustees were elected at said election, and the election returns were made to C. H. Crow, county judge, as required by law, and said commissioners' court refused to canvass said returns; that it is the duty of J. W. Bright, superintendent of public instruction for Trinity county, to appoint one of the trustees of said district, or some other suitable person, to take the census of persons within the scholastic age in said district. That no such appointment had been made, and the census had not been taken. They prayed for judgment requiring said commissioners' court to recognize the district created by order No. 40 as a valid and subsisting district, to canvass the returns of the election held therein for school trustees and to declare the result, and requiring the county superintendent to recognize said district as one legally created and subsisting, and to appoint a census trustee therefor, and that, in the event the court should find that the election for school trustees was not legally held, that it declare a vacancy in the board of trustees, and to require the county superintendent to fill such vacancy.

The respondents, in their answer and amended answer, presented general and special exceptions to the relators' petition, all of which were overruled, and pleaded a general denial; and in their trial amendment alleged the names of school patrons living in the district created by order No. 40, and also of the patrons living in the territory sought to be created by order No. 8; admitted that a portion of the district created by order No. 40, $1\frac{1}{2}$ by 4 miles in extent, was omitted from the district attempted to be created by order No. 8; but alleged that in the portion so omitted there were but two school patrons, and that they desired to be attached to another school district; and further pleaded that the district formed by order No. 8 would be more convenient for all school patrons of that neighborhood, and that a large majority living within the district created by order No. 8 are anxious to have said district remain as it is.

The case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of the relators, adjudging that the district created by order No. 40 is a legal, valid and subsisting common school district, and has been since its creation, and requiring the county judge and the several county commissioners, composing the commissioners' court of Trinity county, and the said Bright as county superintendent of public instruction, to recognize the said district as valid and subsisting, and further requiring the said Bright as such superintendent to appoint two school trustees for said district to fill the existing vacancies. The trial court filed his findings of fact and conclusion of law, which are as follows:

"Findings of Fact.

"(1) During all of the A. D. 1907, and up to the time of the trial, C. H. Crow was county judge of Trinity county, Tex.; W. L. Avery, Com. Prec. No. 1; J. L. Manry, Com. Prec. No. 2; A. F. Reese, Com. Prec. No. 3; B. F. Richardson, Com. Prec. No. 4; and J. W. Bright, County Superintendent.

"(2) The community system of schools was in effect in Trinity county during 1907 and at the time of the trial.

"(3) On February 13, 1907, Ben Falls and 16 others, all qualified voters, residents therein, filed their petition asking for a common school district to be established by the commissioners' court with the metes and bounds as set out therein and constituting the district as claimed by relators to be the true district. The signers to said petition constituted a majority of the legal voters in said district or territory proposed to be made a district.

"(4) At the February term, 1907, of the commissioners' court of said county, the court, after examining said petition and the evidence in support of same, established the district as prayed for.

"(5) After the establishment of the district, the court were informed that there would be a dissatisfaction with the district as formed, and at the May term accepted a petition and established a district with a part of the territory formerly included and a large scope of territory not formerly included in the district.

"(6) Before making the change as made at the May term of the court, there were no efforts made to determine whether a majority or any part of the legal voters in the district as formerly established would consent to the change; but the court was informed and believed that they were not willing to have the change made and would not consent to such change.

"(7) A majority of the legal voters in the district formed at the May term of the court signed the petition for such district and consented thereto; but those in the district as formerly constituted did not sign, and were not asked to sign, the same.

"(8) The district as formed at the May term of the court embraced a larger number of children within the scholastic age, and the school as located accommodates a larger number of children than as located in the former order it could have accommodated; but there are a number of the children in the old district who cannot attend the new on account of the distance and inconvenience.

"(9) No school has ever been taught in the district as first established; but school was taught in the new district during the past school year.

"(10) The commissioners' court, the county judge, and the county superintendent recognized the new district and refuse to recognize the old, and no election was ordered for trustees therein, and no election of trustees canvassed nor recognized. The county superintendent refuses to appoint trustees for the old district.

"Conclusion of Law.

"A majority of the legal voters in the district as established at the February term, A. D. 1907, did not consent to the change in the district, and the change is therefore void."

It does not appear that the court's findings of fact were excepted to, and there is no assignment of error attacking any finding of such fact. By their first assignment of error, appellants complain of the refusal of the court to sustain their exceptions to the appellees' petition; the complaint being that the petition shows on its face that appellees were attempting to use the powers of the court to force appellants to perform acts that involved the exercise of judicial and official discretion, and did not ask for an order requiring them to perform any ministerial act. We are of the opinion that the assignment is without merit. It was charged in the petition: That the community school system prevailed in Trinity county during the year 1907, and at the time of the trial; that appellee Falls and 16 others, constituting a majority of the qualified voters of a certain district, not less than 16 square miles in extent, petitioned the commissioners' court creating it valid; that subsequently said court attempted to create another district, embracing a large part of the territory of the district first created; and that this action of the court was without warrant of law and void. It was further alleged that an election for school trustees had been held in the district first created, and that returns thereof had been made to the county judge, but that the commissioners' court refused to canvass the returns or to declare the result. Under these allegations, the relators prayed that the commissioners' court be compelled to recognize as valid the district first created and to canvass the returns and declare the result of the election therein held for school trustees, and that the county superintendent be required to recognize said district as legally created and subsisting, and to appoint a census trustee, etc. Article 3908c, Rev. St. 1895, added thereto by Laws 1897, p. 211, c. 146, § 1, provides: "The citizens of any community or territory embraced in any community county may organize a school district in said community or section of territory, in the following manner: A petition asking for the organization of said district and giving the metes and bounds of the proposed district, shall be presented to the commissioners' court and signed by a majority of the qualified voters of the proposed district, it shall adopt and enter on its record an order organizing said district, upon which said district shall acquire and become entitled to all the privileges of districts in district counties, and the schools shall be conducted in the same manner; the intention of this article being to permit subdivisions of community counties to adopt the district system when the whole county does not wish to adopt it," etc. Now it is clear from the petition that a majority of the citizens residing in a certain territory of Trinity county, the metes and bounds of which were given in their application, and which application was attached to the relators' petition and made a part thereof, petitioned the commissioners' court to organize said territory into a school district, having all the rights and privileges of school districts in district counties, and that the said court, as it appears from a certified copy of its order, which is also attached to relators' petition and made a part thereof, after hearing evidence in support of the application, granted the same and ordered that the territory described in the application be created into a common school district, "with the name, metes, and bounds as prayed for in said petition." Upon this action of the commissioners' court, the district became a common also: "Provided that when districts are once established they shall not be changed without the consent of a majority of the legal voters in all districts affected by such change."

Now while it is true that relators did not charge in their petition in terms that the change attempted to be made by order No. 8 was not with the consent of a majority of the legal voters of the district created by order No. 40, it is alleged that the first district was legally formed, and that the proposed second district changed the first, and that such change was without authority of law and void. This allegation was not excepted to, and under it appellees were entitled to show any fact or facts that rendered void the act of the commissioners' court in changing the district first formed. The first district then, according to the allegations of the petition, which for the purpose of the exception must be taken as true, having been legally established, and the act of said court in changing it being void, the plain duty rested upon the commissioners' court to recognize the district as a common school district and to accord to it all the rights and privileges of a district in district counties, and such recognition and the according of such rights and privileges involved no judicial discretion, but were plainly ministerial. Sansom v. Mercer, 68 Tex. 488, 5 S. W. 62, 2 Am. St. Rep. 505; Barrett v. Coleman, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 663, 35 S. W. 418; Whitmire v. State, 47 S. W. 293. What we have said applies also to the county superintendent of public instruction in regard to the duties which it was sought in the petition to have him perform. Section 80, Acts 29th Leg. 1905, p. 285, c. 124. It follows therefore that the assignment is not well taken, and is, with the several propositions thereunder, overruled.

What we have said in disposing of the first assignment of error disposes also of the second.

The matters which appellants sought to prove by the testimony of the witnesses Watson, White, Lee, Crow, and Bright were not admissible over the objection offered, and the court did not err in excluding their testimony. The assignments raising the points are overruled.

Appellants complain that the court, in its judgment, failed to direct the appellants to perform any act or duty ministerial in its nature, but merely orders the commissioners' court to recognize the district created by order No. 40 as a legal and subsisting district. The duties of the commissioners' court and county superintendent in relation to legally constituted school districts are fixed by law. Hence, when the court decreed that the district has been legally formed, the law stepped in and directed these officers what they should do in the discharge of their duties, and, as such duties are ministerial, it was not necessary for the court to direct them in its decree to perform the duties the law imposed upon them. If there was error in the matter complained of, it certainly was not one of which the appellants are entitled to complain. The assignment raising the point is overruled.

Nor is there any error pointed out, in the eighteenth assignment, which complains that the judgment fails to respond to the pleadings of the relators, in that they prayed the commissioners' court be required to canvass the returns of election held for school trustees in district No. 40 and declare the result, and, in the event that the court should find that no election for trustees was legally held, to declare a vacancy in said board of trustees and require the county superintendent to fill said vacancy, and that the judgment is entirely silent on this question and makes no mention of the fact whether or not an election was held for the election of school trustees in district No. 40.

While the judgment did not in terms declare that the election for trustees was not legally held, it did this in effect by declaring vacancies to exist and directing the county superintendent to fill such vacancies. The assignment points out no error, or at least not one that is prejudicial to appellants, and is overruled.

The judgment was rendered against Crow, Avery, Manry, Reese, and Richardson, not as individuals, as complained in appellants' first supplemental assignment of error, but as county judge and county commissioners "composing the commissioners' court of Trinity county, Tex." This was proper.

To treat of all the assignments presented by appellants for a reversal of the judgment of the court below would extend this opinion to an unreasonable length. We have, however, examined all the assignments and conclude that no reversible error is shown in any of them.

We are of the opinion that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

1. INJUNCTION (§ 7*)—EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY—SEQUESTRATION.

An injunction may be issued under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2989, to prevent defendant in trespass to try title from inclosing the land and removing timber, though sequestration under article 4864 is an adequate legal remedy.

A petition for an injunction against trespass on land, described as 300 acres off the eastern portion of certain surveys definitely described, is sufficient to authorize the issuance of the writ, in the absence of special exception that the description is vague.

Appeal from District Court, King County; Jo. A. P. Dickson, Judge.

Action by S. B. Burnett against J. J. Mitchell. From an order granting a temporary injunction, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Coombes, Millwee & Coombes, for appellant. Smith, Turner, Bradley & Powell and Moore & Kendall, for appellee.

DUNKLIN, J. This is an appeal by J. J. Mitchell from an order of the judge of the district court of King county granting a temporary writ of injunction in favor of S. B. Burnett, plaintiff in the suit, restraining J. J. Mitchell, the defendant, from inclosing certain lands which plaintiff alleged he owned in fee simple, and also from removing timber therefrom. The suit was for trespass to try title in the usual form for five sections of land, and plaintiff further alleged in his petition that defendant was removing timber from about 300 acres off the eastern portion of those sections, and would continue to do so if not restrained from so doing.

By his first assignment appellant insists that plaintiff had an adequate remedy at law in the provisions of article 4864, Rev. St. 1895, for the issuance of writs of sequestration, and for that reason he contends that the writ of injunction was improperly issued. In support of this contention the case of Frazier v. Coleman, 111 S. W. 663, is cited; but the assignment must be overruled upon the following authorities: Sumner v. Crawford, 91 Tex. 129, 41 S. W. 994; Green v. Gresham, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 601, 53 S. W. 382; Sullivan v. Dooley, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 580, 73 S. W. 82; Chancey v. Allison, 107 S. W. 605; Buchanan v. Wilburn, 105 S. W. 841. In the case of Sumner v. Crawford, above cited, our Supreme Court sustained an injunction upon the ground that the applicant had no other adequate remedy, but quoted subdivision 1, art. 2989, authorizing the issuance of writs of injunction "where quires the restraint of some act prejudicial to the applicant," and expressed a strong inclination to hold that the right to an injunction given by that subdivision of the article was a legal right, although there might be some other adequate legal remedy for the wrong complained of. In the case of Green v. Gresham, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 601, 53 S. W. 382, an injunction of the same character as the one now under discussion, issued upon similar grounds, was sustained, and Justice Stephens, in discussing the question, used the following language: "Besides, to prevent threatened waste, injunction has long been a familiar remedy. See Hammond v. Martin, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 570, 40 S. W. 347."

Appellant further complains that the petition for injunction was too vague and indefinite to authorize the issuance of the writ, in that the 300 acres of land which it was alleged defendant was about to invade was not definitely described. As above noted, the 300 acres was described as being off the eastern portion of the five surveys which were definitely described. In the absence of a special exception to the petition raising this objection, we think the description was sufficient, and the assignment is overruled.

Appellant further insists that plaintiff's petition for injunction was insufficient in that it contained no allegation that the threatened wrongs of defendant would result in an irreparable injury to the petitioner, and that he had no legal remedy therefor. It would be a sufficient answer to this assignment to say, as of the last preceding one, that no special exception was urged to the petition, in the absence of which the allegation was sufficient. Furthermore, facts were alleged which warranted the conclusion by the judge ordering the writ that plaintiff was entitled to the relief prayed for, and we do not think an allegation by the pleader of that conclusion would in any manner have strengthened the petition.

What we have already said is sufficient to dispose of all other assignments adversely to appellant. The order directing the issuance of the writ of injunction is therefore affirmed.

Error from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Action by Hunter L. Wilson and others against R. J. Thacker and others. Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendant Thacker brings error. Reversed.

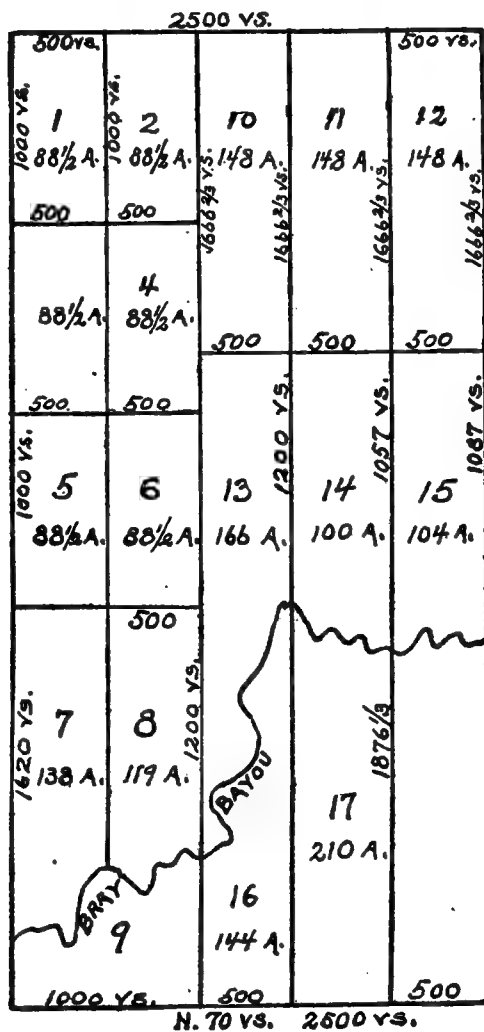

Tharp & Whitehead, for plaintiff in error.
Hutcheson, Campbell & Hutcheson, for defendants in error.

NEILL, J. Hunter L. Wilson and others sued the Houston Electric Company and a number of persons, including R. J. Thacker, in trespass to try title to recover lot 3 of the west half of the Luke Moore league. Upon the application of Thacker, a severance was granted him. He disclaimed as to all the land except a tract of 3.86 acres, which he claims to be a part of lot 5, and as to it pleaded not guilty, and the statutes of limitation of three, five, and ten years. The case as to him was tried before a jury, who, in obedience to a peremptory instruction of the court, returned a verdict in plaintiffs' favor, upon which the judgment from which this writ is prosecuted was entered.

It is not disputed that plaintiffs showed a chain of title to lot 3 from the sovereignty of the soil down to themselves. The contention of Thacker is that the tract in controversy is no part of lot 3, but is a part of lot 5, owned by him. If there was any evidence reasonably tending to support this theory, the court should have submitted as an issue to be determined by the jury the question as to which of the two lots the land in controversy is a part; it evidently being a part of one or the other. The evidence shows that the west half of the league was subdivided by Henry Trott, a surveyor, under the direction of James F. Perry, the executor of Stephen F. Austin, in 1838. Here is a copy of the plat:

shown by whom these lines were made, but we think the circumstances sufficiently tend to show that they were made by Trott as to require the issue as to whether they were made by him when he subdivided the land to be submitted to the jury. Among these old lines there is evidence of one extending from the southeast corner of lot 4, which is the northeast corner of lot 6, at which stands a black gum tree marked "XO," to the east line of the west half of the Luke Moore league. If this line was run by Trott when he subdivided the land, and is the one shown by his plat of the subdivision, then it would seem that it is the south boundary line of lot 3 and the north boundary line of lot 5. The evidence tends to show that this line is taken by surveyors, and regarded by persons living in the vicinity as the Trott line. If it is, in fact, such line, then, as shown by the plat attached, the 3.86 acres in controversy lies in lot 5, as is claimed by Thacker, and not in lot 3, which is sued for. So it is seen that an issue of fact was raised by the evidence, which should have been submitted to the jury.

Another assignment of error complains of the court's refusal to submit the case to the jury upon the issue of limitation. Under it is asserted the proposition that "the evidence was so conflicting that fair-minded men would reasonably differ as to whether or not R. J. Thacker acquired the 3.86 acres in controversy by the 10-year statute of limitation." If there were such conflict in the evidence, the case, of course, should have been submitted on that issue. Upon full examination and consideration of the testimony upon this question, we have reached the conclusion that it is insufficient as to length and continuity of occupancy of the land in controversy, as well as to cultivation, use, or enjoyment, to carry the case to the jury. In this connection we will say, in view of another trial, it is not essential to Thacker's recovery of the 3.86 acres that he should have been in actual or pedal possession of that very part of the land, cultivating, using, and enjoying the same; for, if he was in exclusive, actual, adverse possession of any part of lot 5 claimed by him, using, cultivating, or enjoying the same, such adverse possession would extend to the 3.86 acres in controversy, if a part of the land purchased, claimed, and occupied by him, unless the part in controversy was in possession of another holding adversely to him during some of the time necessary to complete the statutory period required to give him title by limitation.

A. E. Stimson, a witness for plaintiffs, having testified that J. J. Gillespie had been a surveyor in Harris county since 1850, that he had been dead for four years, and when tree marked "XO," seen by them at the northeast corner of lot 6 and the southeast corner of lot 4, was shown him by Gillespie. Upon objection being made that the question called for hearsay testimony, the witness was not permitted to answer it. He would, had he been permitted to do so, have answered that J. J. Gillespie pointed out the tree marked "XO" as a Trott corner between 4 and 6 and on the west line of 13. The action of the court in sustaining plaintiffs' objection to the question, and in not allowing the witness to answer it, is assigned as error. The assignment is not well taken. The declarations of a surveyor who is dead, made at a time when he was attempting to survey a tract of land not originally surveyed by him, of which he had no previous knowledge, which relate to his opinion regarding the identification of corners and lines of a survey, are inadmissible as evidence. Russell v. Hunnicutt, 70 Tex. 657, 8 S. W. 500; Titterington v. Trees, 78 Tex. 570, 14 S. W. 692; Goodson v. Fitzgerald, 115 S. W. 50; Cable v. Jackson, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 579, 42 S. W. 137; Hurt v. Evans, 49 Tex. 311.

The defendant Thacker, having testified that he purchased the land in controversy in 1879 or 1880 and had it surveyed by Alstaten, and Gillespie, since deceased, who started from the gum tree marked "XO" and run from there to the Tierwester line to the west line of the Luke Moore league, and that their survey placed the land in controversy in lot 5, and that in 1880 he fenced the land according to the survey, was then asked if he knew the general reputation of the line between lots 3 and 5. The plaintiffs objected to the question upon the grounds that it was inadmissible to prove the location of the line by reputation, unless it was shown that the owners of 3 and 5 recognized the line, and that the reputation was based upon some ancient mark or line shown to have been put there by the party who originally ran the line. The objection was sustained, and the witness was not permitted to answer the question. He would have testified that the line run by Gillespie and Alstaten between lots 3 and 5 is reputed as being the Trott line upon the ground. The exclusion of the testimony is assigned as error. Prof. Wigmore in volume 2, § 1587, in his work on Evidence, in considering the question as to the admissibility of reputation to prove private boundaries, reaches the conclusion that, except in Maine and Massachusetts, it is now everywhere accepted in the United States as a legitimate application of the general principle that reputation, so far as it definitely exists, is admissible to prove the location of private boundaries. Among the cases cited to sustain this conclusion are Stroud v. Spring- field, 28 Tex. 649; Clark v. Hills, 67 Tex. 141, 2 S. W. 856. See, also, Camp v. League, 92 S. W. 1062; Greenl. Ev. (15th Ed.) notes under section 145; Elliott Ev. §§ 398, 401. It may be that a sufficient predicate was not laid for the introduction of such evidence; it not being shown when such reputation began, whether before or after the origin of the dispute as to such boundary line, but such objection was not urged against the testimony offered. Under the authorities cited we believe such testimony was admissible as against the objections made.

We have not considered or discussed the plaintiffs' evidence on the question as to the location of the boundary line between lots 3 and 5, but have only considered so much of the testimony in the case as was necessary to show that the case should have been submitted to the jury upon that issue. In this connection we will observe that the burden of showing that the strip of land in controversy was a part of lot 3 was upon the plaintiffs; and if, as the evidence indicates, the line was actually run on the ground, it was incumbent upon them to show the line actually run, and that, according to it, the land in controversy was on their lot.

For reason of the errors indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Appeal from District Court, Nolan County; Jas. L. Shepherd, Judge.

Action by Mrs. M. A. Shelton against Latham Company, Bankers, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Earl Conner, for appellants. H. M. Lightfoot, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. This is an appeal from an ex parte order of the judge of the Thirty-Second judicial district granting an injunction to restrain the sale of lot 4, block 110, in the town of Sweetwater, Nolan county, upon which the sheriff of said county had levied certain executions in favor of appellants and against H. M. Lightfoot and M. L. Lightfoot. It is alleged in the petition upon which the injunction rests that appellee, Mrs. M. A. Shelton, at the date of the executions, which were issued on the same day, and at the date of the levy of the same was "the legal and equitable owner" of said lot 4, and "that her title is duly recorded in deed records of Nolan county, Tex., and was so recorded" at the time said executions were levied. The petition further describes the executions and the several judgments by virtue of which they were issued, from which it appears that the judgments were by the justice court of Eastland county in favor of appellants and against said H. M. and M. L. Lightfoot only. Appellee, therefore, was not a party to the proceedings, and, her title being of record, the levy upon and the threatened sale of lot 4 as the property of the Lightfoots, strangers to the title, did not authorize the grant of an injunction.

The early case of Carlin v. Hudson, reported in 12 Tex. 202, 62 Am. Dec. 521, is closely in point. In that case Carlin sought and was awarded an injunction by the district court restraining the sale of certain lands which had been levied upon as the property of one Ford. Carlin alleged in his petition for the injunction that by a bona fide purchase from Ford he was the owner of the lands levied upon, and that on the 12th day of March, 1852, some three days before the levy of the execution, he "had his title deeds duly recorded." In disposing of the case on appeal our Supreme Court said: "The cases in which injunctions are granted to restrain the alienation of property are those where it is indispensable to secure the enjoyment of specific property; or to preserve the title to such property; or to prevent frauds, or gross and irremediable injustice in respect to such property. 2 Story, Eq. c. 23. The present manifestly does not come within that description of cases. The proposed sale of the land as the property of Ford could not operate to dispossess the plaintiff, or deprive him of its enjoyment, or to defeat his title, or embarrass him in the prosecution of his legal remedies for any injury to his title or possession, if, indeed, the property was his by a fair and bona fide purchase, made before any lien had attached or any right had ac-might be. If he had none, the sale could not work any irreparable injury to the real owner. And to permit the execution of judgments to be enjoined for such causes would be to enable judgment debtors, by fraudulent transfers of property, to embarrass the collection of debts by imposing upon their creditors the necessity of almost interminable litigation and delay. The present was not a proper occasion for the court to interpose its preventive and protective authority by injunction. Henderson v. Morrill, 12 Tex. 1; Cameron v. White, 3 Tex. 152. The injunction was improvidently awarded. And as the threatened sale was the only injury complained of, and the obtaining of an injunction the sole purpose of the suit, the petition was rightly dismissed for the want of equity."

The case of Carlin v. Hudson has been followed and approved by numerous subsequent decisions. In some of the cases injunctions have been upheld where the title or right of the petitioner rested in part in parol or was not of record at the time of the levy of the execution against a third party. But we know of no case in which an order for an injunction has been sustained where, as here, the petitioner shows that she was not a party to the judgment or execution sought to be enforced, and where she is the legal and equitable owner by virtue of due conveyance of which the plaintiff in execution has full notice by record or otherwise. In such cases the owner has full and adequate legal remedy in the action of trespass to try title, and a resort to the equitable remedy of injunction is unnecessary and unauthorized. Walker v. Herron, 22 Tex. 58; Purinton v. Davis, 66 Tex. 456, 1 S. W. 343; Mann v. Wallis, Landes & Co., 75 Tex. 611, 12 S. W. 1123; Cook v. T. & P. Ry. Co., 3 Tex. Civ. App. 145, 22 S. W. 58; Chamberlain v. Baker, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 499, 67 S. W. 532; Brown v. Ikard, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 661, 77 S. W. 967.

We conclude that appellee's petition exhibits no equity, and that the court erred, as assigned, in granting the injunction prayed for. It follows that the order appealed from should be set aside and the writ of injunction issued by virtue thereof vacated, and it is so ordered. The suit, however, will not be dismissed, as usual in cases where no relief other than for an injunction is sought, for the reason that some of the members of the court are inclined to think that the statutory right to an injunction has been enlarged by the amendment of Rev. St. 1895, art. 2689, passed since the date of the order herein appealed from, to the effect that, in addition to cases heretofore prescribed, injunction may now be granted " * * * where a cloud would be put on the title of irreparable injury to real estate or personal property is threatened, irrespective of any legal remedy at law." See chapter 34, p. 354, Gen. Laws 1909.

The suit, therefore, will be remanded to the end that appellee may, if she can and so desires, amend her petition so as to bring her case within the new statute.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 218*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ASSUMED RISK—KNOWLEDGE OF DANGER.

To charge a minor with the assumption of a risk incident to a dangerous employment, he must not only know the danger, but must be aware of its extent, and have sufficient discretion to comprehend the risk.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 218*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—MINORS—ASSUMED RISK—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT.

The rule that a minor servant does not assume the risk unless he is aware of the danger and its extent, and has sufficient discretion to comprehend the risk, was not affected by the fact that his contract of employment was made with his parents; they having no authority to contract away his rights, and relieve the master from duties imposed by law for his protection.

6. TRIAL (§ 296*)—INSTRUCTIONS—OMISSIONS.

The omission of an element essential to the cause of action or defense from one paragraph of the charge is not material, where it is included in another.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 295, 296*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—ASSUMED RISK—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction charged that if plaintiff knew, or had the same means of knowing as his employer, of the danger to which he would be exposed when cleaning the machine in question, and failed to exercise that degree of care that a man of ordinary prudence would have used under the circumstances to avoid injury, and by reason of such omission, he was injured, he could not recover; that if he was a youth of immature judgment and inexperience, and the perils of the undertaking were not communicated or known to him, and by reason of his immaturity he was incapable of understanding the nature of the hazards he had undertaken, the jury, to prevent recovery by him, must believe that he failed to exercise that degree of care that persons of his age, undeveloped judgment, and want of information would have used under the circumstances. The court also charged that if the jury believed that there was danger of the waste being caught in the cogs, and his hand drawn therein, while he was cleaning the machine in motion, and if plaintiff had discretion to understand such danger, then he assumed the risk and could not recover. Held, that such instruction prevented a recovery in case plaintiff either assumed the risk, or was guilty of contributory negligence, and was not objectionable as requiring a finding of both to prevent a recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1163, 1180; Dec. Dig. §§ 295, 296.*]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 296*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—MINORS—DEGREE OF CARE REQUIRED—INSTRUCTIONS.

Such instruction was not erroneous in so far as it charged that plaintiff was required to exercise that degree of care that a person of his age, undeveloped judgment, and want of information would have used under the same circumstances, on the theory that the correct test was the exercise of that degree of care that a person of ordinary prudence of his age, undeveloped judgment, and want of information would have used under the same circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1184; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTED CHARGE—REFUSAL.

It is not error to refuse a requested charge, the subject of which has been correctly stated in the court's main charge.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Action by W. C. Plummer against the Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood and Lane, Jackson, Kelley & Wolters, for appellant. Lovejoy & Parker, for appellee.

NEILL, J. This is a suit by W. C. Plummer, a minor, brought by Cordella Plummer, as his next friend, against the railroad company to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been inflicted upon him by the latter's negligence. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $5,000.

Conclusions of Fact.

The evidence shows that on November 3, 1906, plaintiff, then a minor 17 years old, while in the employ of defendant and working in its machine shops at Houston in the duty of his employment, got his right hand caught in the cogwheels of a machine called a "nut tapper," which he was cleaning, and three of his fingers were mashed off, leaving only his thumb and index finger, of which the latter was seriously injured, and its use permanently impaired. The plaintiff had only been engaged in working about the machine three days prior to the accident, and had never cleaned it before, and had never been instructed by defendant or any of its servants as to how such work should be done, or informed of the danger in cleaning the machine when it was in motion. When he commenced to clean the machine, it was not in motion, but when he had cleaned the part exposed, he put it in motion so as to expose parts which could not be reached unless moved by operating the machine. And while it was in motion, and he was cleaning the revolving cylinders by the application of "waste" thereto, the shreds of the waste caught in a cogwheel and drew his hand between the cogs, whereby it was injured as before stated. On account of plaintiff's youth and inexperience he did not know of the danger of being injured as he was in cleaning the machine, nor was such danger obvious or apparent to one of his age and inexperience, who had never been instructed how to clean the machine, nor warned of the danger of cleaning the same while in motion. Hence we conclude that the defendant was negligent in not instructing the plaintiff as to the proper method of cleaning the machine, and in not warning him of the danger in doing such work when the machine was in motion, that such negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, and that by reason of such negligence he was damaged in the amount found by the jury.

Conclusions of Law.

1. It was not error to allow plaintiff to testify that he did not know of the danger in performing the work in which he was injured in the way he did. As to whether he was aware of the danger or not was a matter about which he knew more than any one else. This was the principal issue in the case. If he knew of the danger, whether it was obvious to one of his age and experience or not, his doing such work in the manner he did with knowledge of such danger might have defeated his action. Therefore it was per-

2. The paragraph of the charge assailed by the second assignment is not obnoxious to the first proposition advanced. It is certainly the law in this state that, to charge a minor with the assumption of a risk incident to a dangerous employment, he must not only know the danger, but be aware of its extent and have sufficient discretion to comprehend and understand the risk. T. & N. O. Ry. Co. v. McCoy, 117 S. W. 446; Wood v. Texas Cotton Product Co., 88 S. W. 496. Nor can an implication contrary to this principle arise from the fact that the contract of employment was made with the minor's parents. A child has no voice in such a contract; his duty in the matter is simply obedience to the will of his parents, and they cannot impliedly or expressly contract away his rights or relieve the master from a duty the law imposes on him for the protection of the minor. Nor, when the entire charge is read and construed in connection with it, is the fifth paragraph obnoxious to the second proposition advanced under this assignment.

3. The sixth paragraph of the charge, attacked by the third assignment, is a correct application of the law to plaintiff's theory of the case made by his pleadings and evidence, leaving it to the jury to find whether the essential facts pleaded were proved, and, if proved, whether they constituted negligence, and, if so, whether such negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. It does not eliminate the defense of contributory negligence, but requires that the jury should believe from the evidence that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence before they could return a verdict for him.

4. The seventh paragraph of the charge, which is the subject of the fourth assignment, explicitly presents the issuable facts necessary for plaintiff to prove to entitle him to a verdict, and, in effect, plainly tells the jury that if he has failed to establish any of them by a preponderance of the evidence, they must return a verdict for the defendant. The objection urged by defendant is that it does not present the proposition that, if plaintiff failed to exercise ordinary care in cleaning the machine, such as a person of his age and discretion would exercise under similar circumstances, he would not be entitled to recover. This is merely an omission which, if appearing in the charge taken as a whole, would not, in the absence of a requested charge supplying it, authorize a reversal of the judgment on account of it. But in the fifth paragraph the substance of the proposition, claimed to be omitted, occurs. A charge must be taken as a whole, and not in fragments, in order to determine whether it is erroneous.

knowing as his employer, of the danger to which he would be exposed in cleaning the said machine, and further believe from the evidence that the plaintiff failed to exercise that degree of care that a man of ordinary prudence would have used under the circumstances to avoid injury from such danger, and that by reason of his omission to observe that measure of caution he was injured, he cannot recover, unless, however, you believe from the evidence that, at the time plaintiff was hurt, he was a youth of immature judgment and inexperienced in the business in which he was employed, and that the perils of his undertaking were not communicated or known to him, and that by reason of such immaturity of judgment and inexperience, and want of information as to the perils of the employment, he was incapable of understanding the nature and extent of the hazards to which he was subjected, in which event, in order to prevent recovery by him, you must believe that he failed to exercise that degree of care that persons of his age, undeveloped judgment, and want of information would ordinarily use under the circumstances. From what has been stated, you will perceive that it is not the mere fact of plaintiff's minority at the time he was hurt that would relieve from the care demanded of an adult, but such immaturity of judgment, inexperience, and lack of information as has been defined to you would be necessary to relieve him from that degree of care. And in this connection you are also instructed that if you believe from the evidence that there was danger of the waste being caught in the cogs, and plaintiff's hand drawn therein, while he was cleaning the machine in motion, and believe that plaintiff had the discretion to understand such danger, then he assumed the same, and cannot recover."

It is contended under the fifth assignment of error that this part of the charge in effect tells the jury that they must believe both that the plaintiff assumed the risk of the danger, and that he was guilty of contributory negligence, before they could find for the defendant. Clearly this is not the effect of the charge. On the contrary, it is obvious from it that he could not recover if he either assumed the risk of his injuries, or was guilty of negligence contributory to them. See T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Brick, 83 Tex. 600, 20 S. W. 511. Again it is urged that this part of the charge gives an incorrect statement of the degree of care required of a minor, in that it tells the jury that plaintiff was required to exercise that degree of care that a person of his age, undeveloped judgment, and want of information would use under the same circumstances; the correct test being the exercise of that degree of care that a person of ordinary prudence of his age, undeveloped judgment, and want of information would use under the same circumstances. It will be observed that the charge is almost in the exact language of the Supreme Court in T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Brick, supra. Besides, we are not prepared to say that the test as to negligence of a minor is as contended for by the defendant, for it is difficult to determine who is a person of "ordinary prudence" in the application of the term to minors. Unless such a standard of conduct can be reasonably established, it would seem that the test given by the court in its charge is preferable to the one contended for by the defendant.

6. The defendant evidently misconstrues the charge in asserting in its sixth assignment that it fails to present the issue of assumed risk, for it prominently presents the question in accordance with the law governing cases of this character. Nor does the charge, as is asserted by the seventh assignment, fail to present the issue of contributory negligence.

7. There was no error in the court's refusing to instruct the jury, at appellant's request, that plaintiff had failed to make out a case, and for that reason to return a verdict in defendant's favor. The evidence emphatically disclosed such facts and circumstances as required the submission of the question of defendant's negligence to the jury; it not appearing as a matter of law that plaintiff's injuries resulted from a risk assumed by him as incident to his employment, or that he was guilty of negligence contributing to them.

8. So much of the special charges, the refusal of which is the subject of the ninth, tenth, and eleventh assignments, as is the law applicable to the case is embraced in the main charge. Therefore it was not error to refuse each and all of them.

9. The conclusions of fact dispose of the twelfth assignment, which complains that the verdict is contrary to the law and evidence.

There is no error in the judgment, and it is affirmed.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. v. SHOCKLEY.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. July 3, 1909.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1909.)

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 37*)—DELAY IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGE—LIABILITY.

Where a contract for transmission of a telegram, evidenced by the message, was to promptly deliver it to the sendee at the point to which it had been directed, the original message containing the clause that messages would be delivered free within established free delivery limits of the terminal office, but that for delivery at a greater distance a special charge would be made, and only the charge for transmission to the place where directed was paid, the company was not liable for failure to deliver the message to the sendee at his residence, seven miles in the country.

Appeal from District Court, Young County; A. H. Carrigan, Judge.

Action by N. C. Shockley against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and rendered.

Spoons, Thompson & Barwise and Geo. H. Fearons, for appellant. Kay & Akin and Theodore Mack, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. Appellee sued in the district court to recover damages in the sum of $1,995.60 for the failure to seasonably deliver to him the following message: "To Newt Shockley, Graham, Texas. Your mother is dead. W. B. Shockley." From a judgment in his favor in the sum of $500 this appeal has been prosecuted.

The principal complaint is that the court erred in refusing to give to the jury a requested peremptory instruction to find in appellant's favor. The following facts seem undisputed: Appellee, who is the Newt Shockley referred to in the telegram, lived in the country about seven miles from Graham, Tex. His post office and trading point, however, was Graham. Appellee's mother lived several miles in the country from Heflin, Ala., and died at her home on January 1, 1908. Some time previously, appellee had visited his mother in Alabama, and had arranged with W. B. Shockley, a kinsman, to send a telegram in event of the serious sickness or death of his mother, and on January 1st W. B. Shockley over the phone directed one of his friends living at Heflin (a Mr. Glasgow) to send a message to Newt Shockley at Graham, Tex., informing the latter of the death of his mother. Glasgow delivered the message we have quoted to the agent at Heflin, and it was received at Graham, Tex., about 11 a. m. on January 2d. W. B. Shockley knew the place of appellee's residence in the country, but it appears that Glasgow for him paid only the charge of transmission from Heflin to Graham, the record being silent as to what, if anything, was said about appellee's residence, or whether an additional charge would be required. The evidence is conflicting as to whether appellant's agent at Graham ascertained appellee's place of residence, but, in deference to the verdict of the jury, we find that appellee's Graham agent was informed of it on the day of the receipt of the telegram at the Graham office. The telegram, however, was not in fact delivered until the 9th day of January, when appellee called for it at appellant's office in Graham; appellee having learned of the death of his mother by letter. The burial of appellee's mother was delayed five days awaiting his arrival, and appellee could and would have attended the burial had the telegram been promptly delivered. It should be further stated that on January 3d the Graham office sent a service message to its agent at Heflin inquiring for a better address, but it does not appear that any other or further inquiry or demand was made. After the dispatch of the service message, appellant's Graham agent also mailed in the post office at Graham a notice of the receipt of the telegram.

We are of opinion that appellee failed to show a right of recovery, and that the special instruction should have been given. The basis of appellee's right, if any, is the contract evidenced by the message, and not the nonperformance of a duty prescribed by any general law. That contract was for the prompt transmission and delivery of the telegram to appellee at Graham, Tex., and not at his residence, seven miles in the country. See W. U. Tel. Co. v. Taylor, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 310, 22 S. W. 532; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Swearingen, 95 Tex. 423, 67 S. W. 767; s. c., 97 Tex. 293, 78 S. W. 491, 104 Am. St. Rep. 876. The original message contained the clause that "messages will be delivered free within the established free delivery limits of the terminal office. For delivery at a greater distance a special charge will be made to cover the cost of such delivery"; and appellee insists upon the authority of W. U. Tel. Co. v. Ayres, 105 S. W. 1165, that appellant is liable on the ground that it failed to inquire of W. B. Shockley, the sender of the telegram, and afford him an opportunity of guaranteeing the special charge of $3 which the evidence shows under appellant's regulations would have been necessary in order to transmit the telegram from Graham to appellee's residence in the country. The case cited is quite distinguishable from the one before us. Among other things in that case there was a failure to deliver for some 15 hours after the sender of the telegram had paid additional charges when informed that the party lived outside of the company's free delivery limits. Again, the facts in the Ayres Case show that the addressee, in fact, lived within the town or city to which it had been addressed. In such a case there is support for the holding of the court to the effect that it is the duty of the company, in view of a provision like that we have quoted, to deliver the telegram or to at least afford the addressee an opportunity to pay the additional charges, and certainly, after the additional charges had been paid, it could be said that a new contract was entered into requiring the telegraph company to deliver to the addressee, notwithstanding her residence beyond the free delivery limit. But in this case appellee did not live in any part of the town of Graham, to which the telegram had been directed by the sender. We cannot assume that it was intended by the sender to pay an extra charge for a delivery to appellee seven miles in the country. He had the right, if he desired to do so, to avoid the payment of extra costs by taking the risk of appellee's being found in the town of Graham at the time of or soon after the receipt of the telegram at that place. At all events, it cannot be said that appellant contracted to deliver the telegram at appellee's residence, and, in the absence of such a contract, we know of no duty on appellant's part, for the violation of which a pecuniary liability arises, which required its agent or employé at Graham, in violation of appellant's regulation to the contrary, to take or send the telegram to appellee seven miles in the country.

The foregoing conclusion renders the disposition of other assignments unnecessary; and it is ordered that the judgment be reversed and here rendered for appellant.

a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood, Parker, Hefner & Orgain, and Stevens & Pickett, for appellant. H. E. Marshall, F. M. Stevens, and J. F. Dabney, for appellee.

REESSE, J. This is a suit by A. W. Marshall against the Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company to recover damages in the sum of $995 for alleged mistreatment of plaintiff while as a passenger on one of defendant's passenger trains by the conductor in charge of the train. The mistreatment consisted in rough and insulting language alleged to have been used by the conductor to plaintiff in taking up his ticket, which by mistake of the agent who sold the ticket was not the kind of a ticket plaintiff should have had to entitle him to a passage. The conductor accepted the ticket, but it is alleged that he used towards plaintiff discourteous, rough, and insulting language in doing so. A trial with the assistance of a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $995, the full amount claimed, from which defendant appeals.

Over seasonable and proper objections by appellant, the court allowed appellee to testify that after the dispute between himself and the conductor was ended, and about the time the conductor stepped away, a fellow passenger, who had heard the language used by the conductor, said to witness: "It is a shame for a man to have to take anything like that. You ought to have gotten up and slapped him." To the admission of this evidence appellant took a bill of exceptions, and the question of the admissibility of the evidence is presented by the first assignment of error. The evidence was clearly inadmissible. It was nothing more nor less than the opinion of a passenger, a stranger to the occurrence, as to the conduct of the conductor. The testimony does not come within the exception with regard to admission of testimony of acts done or words spoken as part of the res gestæ. Railway v. Ivy, 71 Tex. 417, 9 S. W. 346, 1 L. R. A. 500, 10 Am. St. Rep. 758; Duyer v. Continental Ins. Co., 63 Tex. 356; T. & M. O. R. R. Co. v. Beller, 112 S. W. 323. This testimony must have had great influence with the jury, and is probably the cause, in part, of the extraordinary size of the verdict.

The testimony of the witness Smith, referred to in the second assignment of error, was inadmissible. If a witness under examination makes a statement about an entirely immaterial matter, it is not admissible, for the purpose of impeaching him to show that such testimony is not true. The testimony did not tend to show that the conductor was drunk at the time of the occurrence in question. The second assignment of error presenting the point must be sustained. T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Phillips, 91 Tex. 278, 42 S. W. 852.

There was no error in the charge complained of in the third assignment of error. The assignment is overruled.

The court did not err in refusing to give the charge referred to in the fourth assignment of error. No question is made of the right of the conductor to question the ticket produced by appellee, but complaint is made of the rude and insulting way in which he is alleged to have acted.

The fifth and sixth assignments of error are overruled without discussion.

The seventh assignment of error complains of the verdict as excessive, and must be sustained. If there were no other errors requiring a reversal, this could be cured by proper remittitur, and would not require a remand of the cause.

We are not prepared to say that as a matter of law the evidence for plaintiff does not authorize a recovery of any amount as damages, as contended by appellant in the eighth assignment.

It was error to instruct the jury that it was "the duty of the defendant company to furnish courteous employes." No case is presented by the pleadings or evidence against appellant in this regard.

For the errors indicated, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

10. DAMAGES (§ 122*)—DELAY IN PERFORMING CONTRACT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The proper measure of damages of defendants would be the rental value of the building for such time as they were deprived of the use thereof after the contract date for completion thereof, and not the profits that would have been made during the time they were deprived of its use by failure of plaintiff to complete it within the time agreed upon, since, to determine such profits, it would be necessary to take into consideration the operation of the entire elevator plant; whereas plaintiff undertook to erect only portions of the plant, especially in the absence of evidence that defendants, at the time of plaintiff's contracts, had any contracts for the storing or handling of grain in the elevator when it should be completed, and that plaintiff contracted with knowledge or with reference thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 310-315; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

11. DAMAGES (§ 218*)—DELAY IN PERFORMING CONTRACT—INSTRUCTIONS.

A charge not to consider profits that defendant could or would have made if the elevator had been completed within the contract time, in computing defendants' damages, did not mislead the jury or withdraw from their consideration evidence proper to be considered in determining the rental value of the elevator building, there being direct evidence as to such value which manifestly was considered by the jury, with perhaps other evidence, in view of the verdict, which would or should have been for a larger amount for plaintiff, if damages for the rental value of the building had not been allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 560-562; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

12. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY TO ASK.

Where a charge given is correct so far as it goes, if a party desires fuller instructions upon the subject, they must be asked for.

Appeal from District Court, Collin County; J. M. Pearson, Judge.

Action by the Harry Bros. Company against the J. T. Stark Grain Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

TALBOT, J. Appellee, Harry Bros. Company, a corporation, sued appellants, J. T. Stark Grain Company, J. T. Stark, J. H. Bowman, G. W. Bowman, T. C. Jasper, W. A. Vines, H. W. Colt, John J. Russell, and W. R. Norton, in the district court of Collin county, Tex., and alleged, in substance, as follows: That on March 25, 1905, plaintiff and defendant J. T. Stark Grain Company entered into a written contract, whereby the plaintiff agreed to erect for said defendant six grain storage tanks of the capacity of 15,000 bushels each, near the railroad at Plano, Tex., for the sum of $6,000, and six black steel grain storage tanks of the capacity of 1,000 bushels each in the mill of defendant for the sum of $150 each, all of said tanks to be erected according to certain plans and specifications made a part of said contract; that defendant Stark Grain Company was to build foundation for said tanks, and plaintiff was to have 60 days after the completion of said foundation and notice thereof to complete its part of the contract, and, if said tanks should buckle or leak within the first 12 months used, plaintiff was to fix the same free of charge; that on the 19th day of May, 1905, plaintiff and defendant grain company entered into another and additional contract, by the terms of which plaintiff agreed to build a certain line of eight-inch piping and six-inch piping to connect the head of said defendant's elevator with the outside tanks, for which said defendant agreed to pay plaintiff 68 cents per foot for the eight-inch pipe and 55 cents per foot for the six-inch pipe, and, in addition thereto, the sum of $45 for erecting and installing the same. It was further alleged that on April 10, 1905, plaintiff contracted in writing to erect for the defendant Stark Grain Company a certain steel elevator building according to the plans and specifications made a part of the contract, and to have the same completed and ready for occupancy by June 1, 1905; that said defendant agreed to pay for said building $2,600 on the 1st day of June, 1905, provided the same was completed, and, if not completed at that time, then as soon as the same was completed and accepted; that said defendant Stark Grain Company reserved the right to have a competent architect to examine the building while it was being erected, and after same had been completed, and that the judgment of said architect should be final as to whether or not the building was being constructed or had been constructed in a workmanlike manner and of sufficient strength to carry the load that it was supposed to carry, etc.; that plaintiff complied with its contract with reference to said building, and that said defendant had said building inspected and examined by a competent architect, who decided that said building had been constructed according to the contract, and that the judgment of the architect was final; that said defendant Stark Grain Company had accepted said building as having been completed according to said contract, and had been using and enjoying the benefits thereof; that Stark Grain Company sold all of its assets to J. T. Stark to defraud its creditors; that J. T. Stark assumed the payment of the debt sued for, and mortgaged all the property to W. R. Norton, trustee for J. H. Bowman, G. W. Bowman, W. A. Vines, John J. Russell, H. W. Colt, and T. C. Jasper. Plaintiff prayed for judgment against Stark Grain Company and J. T. Stark for the amount of its debt and interest and the foreclosure of lien on the property sold by Stark Grain Company to J. T. Stark as against all the defendants. Defendants J. T. Stark Grain Company and J. T. Stark each pleaded a general denial, and, in addition to the general denial, said defendants pleaded, among other things, that the building was not constructed absolutely waterproof; that plaintiff did not use the material contracted for as set out in plaintiff's petition, and used an inferior grade of material, and failed to have the workmanship done in a neat and substantial manner and workmanlike manner and in accordance with the best practice for such work; also, that the plaintiff failed to comply with its contract as to painting; that the "I" beams and bracings were not strong enough to stand the load they were designed to carry; that the six black steel storage tanks did not hold 1,000 bushels each, but only 900 bushels each; that the top and bottom of the large tanks were not watertight, but leaked, etc. J. T. Stark adopted all the allegations of the Stark Grain Company not inconsistent with his pleas. Defendant J. T. Stark further answered that he had bought the property involved in this suit, and all claims for damages in favor of Stark Grain Company against plaintiff; that he assumed the payment of any debt due plaintiff by Stark Grain Company, and asked judgment against plaintiff for the amount of his damages. Defendants Bowman, Norton, Russell, Vines, Colt, and Bowman answered by general demurrers and general denial, and that they, except W. R. Norton, held a superior lien to plaintiff. Plaintiff replied by special exceptions, estoppel, and general denial. The case was tried before the court and a jury on September 30, 1908, resulting in a verdict in plaintiff's favor for $4,461.25 against Stark Grain Company and J. T. Stark, and for a foreclosure of lien on the property in question against all defendants, and a judgment was duly entered thereon. From this judgment all the defendants appealed.

The contract for the erection of the elevator building, among other things, provided that plaintiff should "furnish and erect in place 6-in.x12¼-in. I-beams. The beams to be covered on the lower flange with curved corrugated galvanized steel of sufficient strength to carry a safe load of 150 pounds per square foot; that all workmanship should be done in a neat, substantial and workmanlike manner and in accordance with best practice for such work; that the entire framework should be painted with two coats of good metallic paint, one coat to be applied before the material left the shop and one after the building was erected; that both the roof and sides of said building should be absolutely waterproof." Appellee has filed a motion in this court to dismiss the appeal of the J. T. Stark Grain Company on the ground that it had forfeited its right to do business in this state by failing to pay its franchise tax. If such matter could be presented and urged by an original motion filed in this court, the motion in this case is, we think, without merit. At the time this suit was filed, the appellant had not failed to pay its franchise tax, and, if it afterwards forfeited its right to do business in this state by failing to pay such tax, it would not thereby be deprived of defending this suit. Besides, the undisputed evidence in the record shows that prior to the date of the forfeiture alleged the appellant grain company had disposed of all of its property in Texas to J. T. Stark, one of its codefendants; that said defendant has assumed the payment of the obligation sued on, and that its entire property out of the state had been sold to certain of its stockholders; that all of its business, with the exception of the matters involved in this suit, had been wound up, and that it had ceased to do the business for which it was incorporated. The motion is therefore overruled.

The first, second, and third assignments of error, as numbered in the brief, raise the same question of law, and will be considered together. It is complained in these assignments that the trial court erred in permitting the plaintiff's witness, Oury, to testify that the elevator building, the line of piping, and the six storage tanks of the capacity of 1,000 bushels each were constructed and erected in accordance with the terms of the respective contracts entered into between the parties. It is objected that the testimony was the opinion and conclusion of the witness, involved a mixed question of law and fact about a matter not the subject of expert testimony, and permitted the witness to invade the province of the court and jury. We think there was no material error in the admission of the testimony. The witness qualified as an expert of large experience in the construction of steel buildings, tanks, etc., and was therefore competent to express an opinion in regard to the matter to which his testimony related. But, if mistaken in this, then the record shows that the witness testified that the work of erecting the building, tanks, and pipe line in question was under his supervision from the time it was begun until it was completed; that while said work was being done he had possession of and was fully acquainted with the contract, agreement, and specifications with reference to said improvements. Furthermore, in connection with his testimony that the building, tanks, and pipe line were erected in accordance with the contracts and specifications, the witness stated, if not fully, in many respects the size of the elevator building and tanks, etc., the character of the material used and manner in which the work was done, which was substantially as called for in the contract. We therefore regard the testimony complained of as the statement of a fact within the knowledge of the witness, and not merely the statement of an opinion or conclusion. This case is distinguishable in the facts from the case of Anderson Electric Light Company v. Cleburne Water, Ice & Light Co., 23 Tex. Civ. App. 328, 57 S. W. 575, cited by appellants. In that case it does not appear that the witness had qualified and was testifying as an expert, or that the evidence showed, as it does in this case, that he was testifying to facts within his own knowledge. But, aside from the foregoing view of the matter, it appears, we think, that, if the court erred in admitting the testimony, the error was harmless, for the reason that the witness was allowed to make substantially the same statement without objection. He said: "I have been through said elevator building and machinery since the same has been installed and put in operation, and, so far as I could see from my knowledge in that line of business, everything was working as smoothly and as nicely as could be expected for a new plant. In other words, everything was working perfectly as far as I could see. I will state that in my judgment there is nothing lacking as far as I could see to make the building perfect in every respect for the purpose it was intended for. And, as to its efficiency, I am sure that it would come up to the contract and specifications in every respect. I talked with Mr. Stark several times after the elevator was completed. * * * I heard Mr. Stark make the remark 'that he had the best elevator in the state of Texas.'"

The fifth assignment is as follows: "The court erred in permitting plaintiff to introduce in evidence over the objections of the defendants made thereto at the time the following written instrument: 'Plano, Texas, 10-17-05. Harry Bros., Dallas, Tex. Gentlemen: We beg to inform you that on yesterday we loaded into one of the inside tanks, constructed for us, one thousand bushels of wheat. The tank buckled at the hugs and twisted out of shape. We consider it dangerous and would be glad to have your Mr. Oury come and look at the tank, and take steps to put it into serviceable condition. We were obliged to empty the tank and throw the load into the big outside tank for fear it would collapse. Please give this your prompt attention. Yours truly, J. T. Stark Grain Company, W. F. M. L.' Appellant objected to the introduction in evidence of this letter on the ground that "it was not proven that the letter had been executed by any one having authority to make declarations binding upon defendant, and that it was not shown to have been executed by any one. Just simply a letter written with typewriting on it, signed with a typewriter, and there is no handwriting on it whatever, and its execution is not proven, and there is nothing to show who wrote it, and it is hearsay and prejudicial." The language, "We beg to inform you that on yesterday we loaded into one of the inside tanks, constructed for us, one thousand bushels of wheat," is the objectionable part of the letter; appellants claiming that the tanks therein referred to were not in accordance with the terms of the contract, in that said tanks did not hold 1,000 bushels each, and the portion of the letter quoted tended to show an admission on their part that they did. We are of the opinion that the trial judge's explanation of his ruling in admitting in evidence this letter, as contained in the bill of exception reserved thereto, shows the execution of the letter by the defendant Stark Grain Company. He certifies that the proof shows that the letter was on the stationery and letter head of the defendant J. T. Stark Grain Company, and that it was entirely in typewriting, and that W. F. M. L. were the initial letters of the name of the assistant bookkeeper of the defendant J. T. Stark Grain Company. It was also shown that the plaintiff received the letter in due course of the United States mail, and that the letter was acted upon by plaintiffs, in that they sent men to Plano to work on the tanks in question. If, however, it can be said the evidence was insufficient to show the execution of the letter by said defendant, its admission was harmless because the presiding judge in further explanation of his ruling in admitting the letter in evidence certifies that the undisputed evidence in the case showed that the tanks did not hold 1,000 bushels and the size of the hopper had been changed by agreement, and it was admitted in open court by plaintiffs' attorneys that said tank as constructed would not hold one thousand bushels.

We are also of the opinion that the court did not err in refusing to give appellant's special charge, to the effect that inasmuch as the plaintiff had averred in its supplemental petition that the claim sued on had been transferred to Harry Bros. Manufacturing Company, and that fact was established by the undisputed evidence, to find that said plaintiff take nothing by its suit, and proceed to determine whether said defendants are entitled to recover on their crossbill. The claim sued on was transferred to the Harry Bros. Manufacturing Company after the institution of this suit. The original petition was filed by Harry Bros. Company December 21, 1906, and they filed an amended second supplemental petition September 23, 1908, in which it was alleged that after the institution of the suit, and on, to wit, June 29, 1907, Harry Bros. Manufacturing Company became the owner of the claim and cause of action sued on. This supplemental petition was in reply to the answer of the defendants charging that the plaintiff Harry Bros. Company was not the owner of said claim, and it was alleged in said petition that Harry Bros. Company was prosecuting the suit in its name for the use and benefit of Harry Bros. Manufacturing Company. The supplemental petition in the respects mentioned was doubtless unnecessary, and it did not authorize a judgment in favor of the defendants as to the claim sued on. The transfer of the claim having been made during the pendency of the suit, Harry Bros. Company could legally prosecute the suit to final judgment. In such case it is not necessary to make new parties. In Matthews v. Boydston, 31 S. W. 814, this court said: "The transferee may come in and make himself a party by appropriate pleading, but it is not necessary that he should do so. He takes the transfer subject to the result of the litigation, and the defendant is fully protected by the judgment rendered."

The seventh and eighth assignments of error are grouped by the appellants, and presented as one assignment in the brief. The seventh complains that the court erred in refusing to give requested special charge No. 2, to the effect that, if the plaintiff Harry Bros. Company did not complete the elevator building and tanks within the time specified in the contract or contracts, then the defendant J. T. Stark Grain Company would be entitled to recover from the plaintiff the reasonable value of the use of said elevator and said tanks from the time the same should have been completed under said contract and the time the same were actually completed and delivered to defendants, and that they might consider in determining the value of such use the purpose for which the parties intended the elevator building and tanks to be used. The eighth complains that the court erred in not giving special charge No. 12, to the effect that, if plaintiff Harry Bros. Company failed to erect the elevator building and tanks (in question) within the time stipulated in the contracts, defendant would be entitled to recover the reasonable value of the use of such property as it contracted to erect from the time it was bound to erect the same until the same was constructed, and that, in determining the reasonable value of such use of said property, to look to all the circumstances of the case, and that, if they believed from the evidence that by reasonable expenditure of money (defendants) could and would have used the same as an elevator, then its value as an elevator would be the measure of defendant's damages. As presented, we think the assignment embraces two or more distinct and inconsistent propositions of law, pellant was entitled to recover the reasonable value of the elevator building and tanks from the time they should have been completed under the written contracts and the time that they were actually completed, and that the jury, in determining the value of such use, might consider the purpose for which said building and tanks were intended to be used, is materially different from the proposition involved in special charge No. 12, to the effect that appellants were entitled to the reasonable value of the use of said property for such time as they lost by reason of the same not being completed within a reasonable time, and that, if by reasonable expenditure of money the property could and would have been used as an elevator, then its value as an elevator would be the measure of appellants' damages. But, if we are mistaken in this, then the answer to the assignment is that whatever may be the pleadings the concluding part of special charge No. 12 is not a correct statement of the law, and both of the special charges in question are inapplicable to the facts and misleading. The contract for the building of the tanks referred to in the charges was entered into March 25, 1905, and that for the erection of the steel elevator April 10, 1905. The latter contract provided that the elevator shall be completed by the 1st day of June, 1905, but no time was specified in the contract entered into for the erection of the tanks within which said tanks should be completed. Appellant does not point out any evidence, and we have discovered none, showing that these tanks were not finished and ready for use within a reasonable time from the date of the contract; nor do we find any evidence that, by "a reasonable expenditure of money," appellants could and would have used the property as an elevator, and that issue, and the issue as to whether the tanks were completed within a reasonable time as sought to be submitted by the special charge No. 12, was not raised by the evidence. Therefore charge No. 12 was properly refused; and, as the contract for the erection of the tanks did not stipulate when the tanks should be completed, and there was no evidence that they were not completed within a reasonable time, special charge No. 2 should not have been given. The charge of the court upon this phase of the case, limiting appellant's right to recover damages for such time as appellant was deprived of the use of the elevator building after June 1, 1905, and in instructing them that the measure of such damages was the rental value of said building for such time, was, we think, a correct application of the law to the facts, and full enough, at least, in the absence of a correct special charge upon the subject.

Appellants' ninth assignment asserts that the court erred in charging the jury at ap-to show the profit that defendant J. T. Stark Grain Company could or would have made, if said elevator building had been completed within the time required by the contract, in considering the damage which said defendant J. T. Stark, by reason of such delay, if any, is entitled to receive." The objections to this charge are, in substance, that it is erroneous, misleading, and upon the weight of the evidence, in that appellants were entitled to the value of the use of the building for the purpose for which it was intended to be used and that the jury should have permitted, in estimating their damages, "to consider the profits that could have been made out of the building"; that, in withdrawing from the consideration of the jury all evidence tending to show the profits that could have been made, the court withdrew from their consideration evidence which tended to establish its rental value. We are of the opinion that the rental value of the elevator building, as charged by the court, was the measure of appellants' damages in this case, and not the profits that could have been made during the time they were deprived of its use by the failure of appellee to complete said building within the time agreed upon. To determine the amount of profits which could have been made during such time, it would be necessary to take into consideration the operation of the entire elevator plant, including the outside storage tanks and all inside machinery. The appellee did not undertake to erect for the appellants an elevator plant complete, but only portions of such a plant under contracts executed at different times and for different, separate, and distinct portions thereof. The defendant Stark Grain Company constructed the foundation for the outside storage tanks, the concrete foundation for the elevator building, and installed in said building a large amount of machinery necessary for its operation with which appellee had nothing whatever to do. Besides, there is no evidence to show that the appellant Stark Grain Company at the time of the execution of either of the contracts entered into by appellee had any contracts for the storing or handling of grain in the elevator plant when the same should be completed and that appellee contracted with a knowledge of or reference thereto. It seems clear that the profits were not in the contemplation of the parties when the contracts referred to were entered into.

We are further of the opinion that the charge did not have the effect to mislead the jury or to withdraw from their consideration evidence which was legitimate and proper to be considered by them in arriving at the rental value of the elevator building. There was direct evidence as to such value, and that such and perhaps other evidence upon the question was considered by the jury, and the appellants allowed some damages for the breach of the contract as alleged, is manifest from the amount of the verdict rendered in favor of appellee; for it is evident from the record and a simple calculation of the interest on the amount shown to have been unpaid on the contracts declared on that, had not such damages been allowed, the verdict in appellee's favor would or should have been for a larger amount.

The clause of the court's charge complained of in the tenth and eleventh assignments was correct as far as it went, and, if appellants desired further and fuller instructions upon the subject to which it relates, such charge should have been asked. If there was error in the charge, it was not an affirmative error, but one of omission.

The fifteenth assignment is, in effect, that the verdict of the jury is contrary to, and not supported by, the evidence. In this contention we do not concur. We have carefully considered the evidence, and conclude that it is amply sufficient to authorize and sustain the verdict, and this assignment is overruled.

Some of the assignments not discussed have been disposed of by what we have said in discussing others; and those not so disposed of present, in our judgment, no reversible error.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from District Court, Hansford County; H. G. Hendricks, Judge.

Action by Bert O. Cator, administrator, against E. C. Hays and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hoover & Taylor, for appellant.

RICE, J. This suit was originally brought May 27, 1907, by George Aitken in the district court of said county against E. C. Hays, as county judge, and against B. V. Andrews, W. O. Douglas, J. C. Sangster, and J. A. Deal, county commissioners, constituting the commissioners' court of said county, and against Joe Stafford, an overseer, to enjoin the opening by said county of a road known as the "Guymon and Ochiltree road," which is alleged to have been formerly established by said court, and for the recovery of $250 damages incident thereto. During the progress of the suit said Aitken died, and appellant was duly appointed his administrator, and continued said litigation as such, and in such capacity prosecutes this appeal.

A temporary writ of injunction was granted as prayed for, and at the October term, 1907, of said court, appellees answered by general demurrer, special exceptions, special answer, and a general denial. A trial was had before the court without a jury at the April term, 1908, resulting in a judgment in favor of appellees dissolving the injunction, and in favor of appellant against said appellees for the sum of $10, awarding costs against him, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

There is no statement of facts in the record, but the trial judge filed his conclusions of fact and law. Among other things, he found that the county commissioners' court of Hansford county upon June 13, 1904, same being a called session, made the following order: "It is ordered by the court that a third-class road be established as follows: From the east line of the county to the north line, and described as follows: Commencing at the east line of section 12 block 2 W. C. Ry. Co.; thence N. W. to the S. E. corner of section 69 block 45 H. & T. C. Ry.; thence N. W. to a gate on the old three-seven trail; thence through road now traveled on section 58 and 57, block 45 H. & T. C. Ry. Co., crossing Palo Duro Creek at the N. E. corner of section 56 block 45 H. & T. C. R. R. Co., following the road traveled near the line of said section 56 and in an N. W. direction by C. A. Hitch's windmill on Hackberry Creek, along the road now traveled the N. line of the county near what is known as Texas Lake." Several other orders of the court were set out in the findings, but all were made subsequent to the above order, and it is questionable whether they should be regarded as pertinent to the inquiry before us. The fifth finding of the court was as follows: "I find from the testimony of N. B. Crosby, then county judge of Hansford county, Tex., that the deceased, Aitken, the original plaintiff, presented his claim for $1,000 at the same session of said commissioners' court the said Aitken, after understanding that it was a third-class road, and that he could fence across it at any place just so he left a gate on the road, withdrew his claim for damages, and said that the commissioners' court might proceed and open up the road as laid out by the jury of view, and I further find that the report of the jury of view was accepted, the road declared open, and an overseer appointed. Seventh. I find that the road in question was marked by plowing furrows by the jury of view, and thereafter was traveled by the general public until the temporary writ of injunction was issued in this cause."

By his first assignment appellant questions the correctness of that part of the court's fifth finding of fact as above set out, wherein it is recited that the report of the jury of views was accepted (meaning by the commissioners' court) since the order itself merely recited that said report be received, but did not declare the road open as found by the court, nor show that the overseer was appointed, nor that the report of the jury of view was accepted, insisting by his proposition thereunder that it was error for the court to find a fact that was not supported by the evidence. While it is true that the order referred to only recited that the report was received, still, in the absence of a statement of facts, we believe we are authorized to presume, in aid of judgment of the court, that there was other evidence before the court which would sustain his findings in this respect, and the findings of the court do show that there was evidence aliunde the order upon which the court based its findings in this regard. There was no objection, so far as the record discloses, to the introduction of this evidence, and, even if there had been, we are inclined to believe that there is authority to the effect that such evidence would be admissible to establish the existence of such order. The county could not be prejudiced by reason of the fact that the same had not been entered in the minutes of the court. The chief question was whether such order had, in fact, been made, since its entry could have been made nunc pro tunc at any time thereafter.

By his second assignment appellant assails the court's conclusion of law wherein it is found that as matter of law the plaintiff has wholly failed to show that the road in question was an illegal one, for the reason, as claimed by him, that there was a variance between the order directing the laying out of the road and the report of the jury of view made thereunder, insisting by his proposition that the statute with reference to laying out a public road must be strictly complied with, and, in effect, that the report of jury of view must conform to the order indicate that the law in this respect was substantially complied with. While it is by no means clear that the order of June 13, 1904, heretofore set out, was the only order made upon this subject, especially so, since the court has found that the road was established, ordered opened, and an overseer appointed, as above shown, still, if this were the only order directing the laying out of this road, there is no substantial variance between it and the report of the jury of view. In the order of June 13th it is directed that the road be laid out from the east line of the county to the north line thereof, describing by intermediate calls its direction between said two points. The report of the jury of view recites that they were appointed by the commissioners' court to view a third-class road from the east line of Hansford county, Tex., to the south line of Beaver county, Tex., in the direction of Guymon, Okl., and the body of the report shows that they commenced at the same point as directed in the order and terminated at the Beaver county line. Notwithstanding the fact that the report of the jury of view recited that they were appointed to review a road from the east line of Hansford county, Tex., to the south line of Beaver county, Tex., still the court judicially knows that there is no such county in Texas as Beaver county; and the report, together with the order, clearly indicates that it was the intention and object of the court to direct the road to be laid out from the east line of Hansford county to the north line thereof. The court can take judicial cognizance of geographical subdivisions of the state. Elliott on Evid. § 66. Courts will likewise take judicial cognizance of state and federal boundaries. Ogden v. Lund, 11 Tex. 688. So that we therefore understand by this report that the jury of view knew that they were to locate a road running from the east line of Hansford county, Tex., to the north line thereof, which point was also the south line of Beaver county, Okl.; thus giving the same terminal as indicated in the order, and this was in fact done, as shown by the report of said jury of view. And, while it is true that the intermediate calls of the order do not coincide with those of the report, still it has been held in Kelley v. Honea, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 220, 73 S. W. 846, that, as the statute does not require the application for the road to more than specify its beginning and termination, the fact that the application specified section lines along which the road is to run did not deprive the commissioners' court of the power to open it, on the recommendation of the jury of view, along a different route. So in this case we are inclined to believe that, since the jury of view commenced at the point directed in the order of the commissioners' court, and ran to the north line of the county, as directed therein, that it was immaterial whether they in their report, in fact, followed the intermediate calls named in the order, because we believe the commissioners' court, under the authority of the case just cited, would have had the power to adopt said report and order the road opened in accordance therewith, which it seems from the evidence as found by the court was done.

In Sneed v. Falls County et al., 42 S. W. 121, it is held by this court, as shown by the syllabus, that it is not essential to the validity of the laying out of a highway that the face of the record of the commissioners' court should affirmatively show a compliance with all the requirements preliminary to the establishment of such road; clearly indicating that, if the proper steps which were necessary to the laying out and establishment of the highways had in fact been taken, in that event, the same could not be regarded as improperly laid out, simply because of the failure on the part of the court to place of record all of such requirements. We therefore hold that there was no such variance in this case as would defeat the action of the commissioners' court in establishing and laying out the road. See, also, Sneed v. Falls County, 91 Tex. 168, 41 S. W. 481.

We do not think there is any merits in the contention urged in appellant's third assignment of error, and therefore overrule same.

Finding no error in the judgment of the court below, the same is in all respects affirmed.

Affirmed.

MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO. OF TEXAS et al. v. VANDIVER.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 10, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*) — PRESUMPTIONS — EVIDENCE CONSIDERED BY LOWER COURT.

Where the lower court in a nonjury trial makes its written conclusions of fact, in accordance with certain testimony, in the absence of a showing that such facts were not considered by it in the final determination of the case, an appeal must be disposed of upon the theory that they were so considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3765; Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 104*)—DELAY IN TRANSPORTING CORPSE.

In an action against a carrier for mental anguish caused by delay in not carrying plaintiff's wife's body on the same train that he was carried on, and in not delivering it at his destination by the time that he arrived there, testimony that while in transit the conductor told him that the body of his wife was on the same train was inadmissible; as plaintiff could not have suffered mental anguish until he ascertained that the body was not being carried on the train; and the conductor's statement to the contrary, if untrue, could have caused no distress of mind.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 105*)—DELAY IN TRANSPORTING CORPSE—MENTAL SUFFERING.

In an action against a carrier for mental anguish by delay in not carrying plaintiff's wife's body on the train upon which plaintiff was carried, recovery could not be had for mental anguish sustained by plaintiff's daughter and sister-in-law as a result of the delay.

Appeal from the Tarrant County Court; John L. Terrell, Judge.

Action by J. S. Vandiver against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Spoons, Thompson & Barwise, for appellants. James C. Scott, for appellee.

KEY, J. Appellee instituted this suit for the recovery of damages caused by alleged delay in the transportation of the body of his deceased wife between Ft. Worth, Tex., and St. Louis, Mo. The principal item of damage was mental suffering alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff and his daughter and his wife's sister. There was a nonjury trial, which resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff for $260, and the defendants have appealed.

The assignments of error are addressed to the action of the court in permitting the plaintiff to testify that, after he left Ft. Worth and while in transit, the conductor on the train told him that the body of his wife was on the same train, and in allowing proof that his daughter and sister-in-law were greatly distressed and grieved when they ascertained that the body was not on the train, and did not reach St. Louis until several hours after they and the plaintiff reached there, and in considering the facts referred to in deciding the case. In his written conclusions of fact, the judge found in accordance with the testimony referred to, and, therefore, in the absence of a showing that such facts were not considered by him in the final determination of the case, the appeal must be disposed of upon the theory that they were so considered. The plaintiff's suit was based upon mental anguish caused by the carrier's delay in not carrying the body of his wife on the same train that he was carried on, and in not delivering it in St. Louis by the time he reached there. This being the nature of his case, it necessarily follows that the plaintiff could not have suffered mental anguish until he ascertained that the body was not being carried on the train upon which he was traveling. Therefore the statement of the conductor that the body was on the train, though distress.

The plaintiff was not entitled to recover any damages on account of mental anguish sustained by his daughter and sister-in-law as a result of the delay in transporting the corpse, and the trial court erred in admitting and considering the testimony referred to upon that subject. Railway Co. v. Overton (Sup.) 110 S. W. 736, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500.

For the errors indicated, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

SCHWARTZ v. JONES et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Nov. 20, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 878*)—PARTIES ENTITLED TO RAISE QUESTIONS.

Where, in trespass to try title, defendant brought in his vendor as a party, and sought to recover on his warranty of title, and the court gave judgment for plaintiff for the land, and for defendant against his vendor on the warranty, and the vendor alone perfected his appeal, defendant could not on appeal question the correctness of the judgment for plaintiff, but he could, by cross-assignments of error, combat the vendor's appeal against him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2573, 2574; Dec. Dig. § 878.*]

2. COVENANTS (§ 100*)—TITLE—BREACH.

A covenant of title of a grantor, conveying land owned in part by another, and while the latter's title to the other part was maturing by adverse possession, was only breached as to the extent the latter owned the land, and not to the extent of title acquired by adverse possession after the conveyance.

3. COSTS (§ 241*)—PARTIES LIABLE.

Where, in trespass to try title, defendant brought in his vendor, and sought recovery on his warranty of title, and the court gave judgment for plaintiff for the land, and for defendant against his vendor on the warranty, and the vendor appealed and obtained a modification of the judgment against him to the extent of one-half, one-half of the costs of the trial court should be taxed against defendant, and one-half against the vendor.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; W. P. Hamblen, Judge.

Action by Lucinda Jones against E. A. Witt, who brought in C. Schwartz as a defendant, and asked for judgment against him. From a judgment for plaintiff, and for defendant Witt against defendant Schwartz, the latter appeals. Affirmed in part; reformed and affirmed in part.

Love & Channell, for appellant. Fisher, Sears & Campbell, for appellee Witt.

stated to contain half an acre. Witt brought in his vendor, C. Schwartz, as defendant, and under appropriate allegations sought to recover on his warranty of title from his vendor. The case was tried with the assistance of a jury, resulting in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff for all the land sued for, and for defendant Witt against Schwartz on his warranty for $125. Both Witt and Schwartz made motions for new trial, which were overruled, from which both parties gave notice of appeal. Each of them filed in the trial court assignment of errors, but Schwartz alone perfected his appeal by giving bond. In this court Schwartz has filed briefs presenting one assignment of error attacking the judgment in favor of the plaintiff in favor of the land, and several assignments assailing the judgment against him in favor of Witt on the warranty. He has expressly waived the assignment attacking the judgment in favor of plaintiff for the land, and presents only those questioning the judgment against him on the warranty. Defendant Witt has filed a brief seeking to present the assignment of error filed by him, questioning the judgment for plaintiff for the land. In this state of the record defendant Witt, not having perfected his appeal, is in no position here to question the judgment, in favor of plaintiff against him, and his brief, which is limited to the single assignment, abandoned defendant Schwartz, questioning judgment for the land, must be disregarded. The appeal of Schwartz authorized Witt, without filing appeal bond himself, by cross-assignments of error to combat Schwartz's appeal against him, but not the plaintiff's judgment. Carroll v. Carroll, 20 Tex. 740; Caperon v. Wanslow, 18 Tex. 125; Halsell v. Neal, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 26, 56 S. W. 137. The judgment, therefore, in so far as it is in favor of plaintiff for the recovery of the land, must be affirmed, and it remains only to consider the objections to the judgment in favor of Witt against Schwartz on the warranty.

The court gave the jury the following charge: "You are charged, if you find for plaintiff for the land sued, then you will find for the defendant Witt, against the defendant Schwartz, for the sum of $125. If you find for plaintiff for one-half of the land under this charge, then you will find for the defendant Witt against said Schwartz for the sum of $62.50." This charge is assailed by the second assignment of error. The court charged the jury, in substance, that the plaintiff, Mrs. Jones, could not recover more than one-half of the land in controversy, unless she had acquired title under the statute of limitation of 10 years, that is, that under her plea of 10 years' adverse possession. As no objection is presented by any assignment of error to this charge, it must be assumed to be correct. The jury found for her the entire tract.

Schwartz had conveyed to Witt, by deed dated August 30, 1899, two acres of land, of which the half acre sued for forms a part. The court also instructed the jury that Mrs. Jones' adverse possession did not begin, in any event, earlier than August 19, 1892. So on August 30, 1899, her adverse possession had not ripened into a title under the 10-year statute of limitation, which could only be when the 10 years' adverse occupancy was fully completed. As the case thus stands at the date of Schwartz's deed to Witt, Mrs. Jones had title to one-half of the land in suit, and her claim, by virtue of her adverse occupancy, was in course of maturing into a title under the 10-year statute, but not yet matured, lacking 3 years. As to one half of the land, then, there was breach of Schwartz's warranty to Witt, but not as to the other half. The covenant of title was not broken by adverse title acquired by limitation after the conveyance by Schwartz to Witt. Harn v. Smith, 79 Tex. 310, 15 S. W. 240, 23 Am. St. Rep. 340; Thompson v. Weisman, 98 Tex. 175, 82 S. W. 508.

Schwartz's warranty to title to the two acres was limited to $500 for the whole. It does not appear that the half acre here involved had a greater value than its proper proportion of the whole. From this it would result that Witt was entitled to judgment only for the proportion of the $500 which the part of the land for which the warranty was breached bore to the entire two acres. The adverse title acquired by limitation after the date of Schwartz's conveyance being no breach, Witt was entitled to recover only for the breach by reason of Mrs. Jones' superior title at date of the conveyance to Witt, which only extended to one-half of the half acre sued for—that is, one-eighth of the two acres—and Witt was only entitled to recover a corresponding proportion of the $500; that is, $62.50. The jury by its verdict gave him $125, for which the court rendered judgment. Appellant Schwartz sought to have presented to the jury, by requested charges which were refused, the law as here stated with regard to the effect of the title, acquired by limitation upon the warranty, as a breach thereof. The refusal of the charges, and also the objections to the judgment for $125, are presented by proper assignments of error, which must be sustained. As we have said, no reply is attempted to be made to these assignments by appellee Witt. It is entirely clear that upon no theory of the evidence was Witt that amount. It necessarily follows that the judgment against Schwartz for all of the costs of the trial court is erroneous. One-half of such costs should have been taxed against Witt, as he lost one-half of the land for which Schwartz was not responsible. The judgment will also be reformed in this particular, adjudging one-half of the costs of the trial court against Witt, and one-half against Schwartz, as between them. Mrs. Jones, however, is entitled to have her judgment affirmed as it was rendered.

The judgment in favor of Mrs. Jones for the land is affirmed, and the judgment in favor of Witt against Schwartz is reformed as herein indicated, and, as so reformed, is affirmed. One-half of the costs of the appeal will be adjudged against appellant Schwartz, and one-half against Witt.

Affirmed in part; reformed and affirmed in part.

MAYHEW & CO. v. HARRELL et al.

1. PROCESS (§ 4*)—ON CROSS-PLEA.

Where defendants filed a cross-plea against codefendants for affirmative relief, and codefendants never appeared nor filed answers, in the absence of service of citation on the cross-plea, the court was without jurisdiction to award the relief prayed for.

Error from District Court, Eastland County; J. H. Calhoun, Judge.

Action by Mrs. J. C. Harrell and others

J. R. Stubblefield and B. W. Patterson, for plaintiff in error. Scott & Brelsford, for defendant in error.

DUNKLIN, J. J. J. Wright and Mattie M. Wright executed their promissory note in favor of Mayhew & Co., a corporation, for $1,000. The payee indorsed and delivered the note to Mrs. J. C. Harrell, who sued the makers and indorsers. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff against J. J. Wright as principal and Mayhew & Co. as indorser for the amount due on the note; but the court found that Mattie M. Wright was a married woman at the time she executed the note, that no facts existed to render her personally liable thereon, or which would subject her separate property to the payment of the same, and upon such findings judgment was rendered in her favor. By plea over against J. J. Wright and Mattie M. Wright, Mayhew & Co. alleged that it was liable on the note as an indorser only, and prayed that in case of recovery by plaintiff, execution should first issue against the makers of the note, as provided by the statutes, and that Mayhew & Co. should have judgment over against the two makers for any sum it might pay on said judgment. In its answer Mayhew & Co. further alleged that two fire insurance policies on property, since destroyed by fire, had been hypothecated to secure payment of the note sued on, that suits had been instituted by J. J. Wright to collect the policies against the companies issuing them, and upon those allegations Mayhew & Co. prayed that this suit be abated, and that plaintiff Mrs. J. C. Harrell be required to exhaust such security before recovering judgment in this suit. The trial court found that the suits to collect the policies were pending, and adjudged that Mayhew & Co. was subrogated to all the rights of J. J. Wright and Mattie M. Wright in and to those policies and the proceeds thereof. After reciting appearance of plaintiff and defendant Mayhew & Co., the judgment contained the following further recital: "The defendants J. J. Wright and Mattie M. Wright, although duly cited to appear and answer herein, came not, but wholly made default."

None of the pleadings of plaintiff or defendant Mayhew & Co. contained any allegation that Mattie M. Wright was a married woman. Mayhew & Co. has prosecuted this writ of error, and by various assignments insists that the trial court erred in failing to render judgment in favor of plaintiff and Mayhew & Co. against Mattie M. Wright, as well as against J. J. Wright. Plaintiff in the suit has not complained of a failure to enter such judgment in her favor. The record falls to show any service of citation upon J. J. Wright or Mattie M. Wright to answer the cross-or any character, and, in the absence of service of citation on the cross-plea, the court was without jurisdiction to render judgment awarding any affirmative relief prayed for therein as against those defendants. Harris v. Schlinke, 95 Tex. 91, 65 S. W. 172; Kruegel v. Bolanz, 100 Tex. 572, 102 S. W. 110; Johnston v. Fraser, 92 S. W. 49; Field v. O'Connor, 80 S. W. 872. And this is true, even though it should be held that the recital in the judgment of due service upon J. J. Wright and Mattie M. Wright should be construed as meaning due service upon the cross-plea, as well as upon plaintiff's petition. If judgment had been entered upon the cross-plea, it would have been by default, and to sustain such a judgment upon appeal the record must show an appearance by defendants, or else service aside from recitals in the judgment. Burditt v. Howth, 45 Tex. 466; Carlton v. Miller, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 21 S. W. 697, and authorities there cited; Shook v. Laufer, 84 S. W. 277; Smithers v. Smith, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 508, 80 S. W. 646.

The foregoing disposes of all assignments of error except the sixth, which reads as follows: "The court erred in not adjudging that plaintiff should exhaust her security against the mortgaged property, or fire policies covering same, given to secure the note sued on, before execution be issued against Mayhew & Co." Plaintiff did not allege the existence of the insurance policies, nor ask any foreclosure lien thereon, neither in her original petition nor after they had been pleaded by defendant. Consequently, plaintiff's pleadings did not warrant a foreclosure of lien on the policies. The policies were in favor of J. J. Wright, and, as the record fails to show legal service of any citation on him upon the cross-plea of Mayhew & Co., the court was also without authority to decree a foreclosure of the lien with the cross-plea as a basis for the foreclosure. However, the court did decree that Mayhew & Co. was subrogated to all the rights of J. J. Wright in the policies and their proceeds, and J. J. Wright makes no complaint of this decree.

Mayhew & Co. in their answer pleaded that the plaintiff's suit should be abated until suits upon the policies should be disposed of, to the end that any proceeds therefrom should be first applied to the note sued on before trial of this suit; but no assignment of error has been prosecuted complaining of the action of the court in failing to abate the suit. Furthermore, the record contains no statement of facts, and there is not even a recital in the judgment to show that the policies of insurance were of any value.

The sixth assignment of error is, accordingly, overruled, and the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

PLEASANTS, C. J. The term of the court at which the judgment was rendered from which this appeal is prosecuted adjourned on October 29, 1908. The appeal bond was filed on the 28th day of November, 1908. The bond not having been filed within 20 days after the adjournment of the trial court, as required by the statute, this court has no jurisdiction to hear and determine the case, and the appeal must be dismissed. Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1387; Converse v. Trapp, 29 S. W. 415.

One of the appellants is a nonresident of the county in which the judgment appealed from was rendered; but, under the statute above referred to, such nonresident did not have 30 days after the notice of appeal within which to file his appeal bond, because the term of the court at which the judgment was rendered could not have continued by law longer than 8 weeks. If the court could have continued in session for more than 8 weeks, the bond should have been filed within 30 days after notice of appeal, and this bond was not filed within that time; such notice having been given on October 9, 1908. For the reason stated, the appeal is dismissed.

Suit by the City of Gainesville against the Gainesville Water Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gregory, Batts & Brooks and Potter & Culp, for appellant. J. T. Adams, Davis & Thomason, and Garnett & Eldridge, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. This suit was instituted by the city of Gainesville on June 25, 1907, against the appellant company, a private corporation, alleging that Gainesville was incorporated under the General Laws of Texas, with a population of more than 200, and less than 10,000, inhabitants; that in 1883 the city council by ordinance granted the defendant the right to construct and operate a system of waterworks within its corporate limits for 25 years, and that this ordinance, with a few changes, was re-enacted in 1889, and again slightly changed in 1897, so as to require, among other things, that the water furnished plaintiff and its inhabitants by the company should be suitable for domestic con-failed to comply with the terms of its contract in the following respects: First, that the pumping engine used by it was not of the character contracted for; second, that the water mains were not of the material and strength contracted for, and were not laid at the depth required by the ordinances; third, that the building in which the machinery of defendant was installed was insecure, and not of the material provided for by the ordinances; fourth, that the system operated by defendant had not for many years been capable of discharging water through the fire hose to the height provided for by the contract for fire protection; fifth, that defendant had for several years persistently and continuously failed to furnish the inhabitants of the city with water suitable for domestic purposes, and that the water furnished was polluted, unwholesome, and contaminated by disease-breeding germs. It was further alleged that under the terms of the ordinances referred to there was an attempt to rent from defendant during the life of the franchise a number of fire hydrants at a fixed price per annum per hydrant, and that this portion of the ordinance contract was illegal and void, because it attempted to create a debt without a provision, by tax levy or otherwise, for its payment, and because it was contrary to public policy for the city council to attempt to bind its successors for this period of time and prevent them from exercising their discretion and judgment in reference to the payment of hydrant rentals, which became a charge against the general revenues of the city, and which had been and was more than sufficient to exhaust the general revenues of the city, leaving it nothing with which to conduct the city government. It was further charged that appellant was insolvent, and without credit to improve the plant and put it in better condition, and it was charged that it had no intention of doing so. Other allegations were made, not necessary to refer to, and the petition, among other things prayed that the hydrant rental contract be declared void; that the franchise of the water company be forfeited; that a receiver be appointed, etc. The company answered by general and special demurrers, a general denial, and pleaded specially, among other things: First, that the city was estopped from setting up a noncompliance with the terms of the ordinance contract with reference to the character of water furnished, pipes laid, etc., and was also estopped from denying the legality of the contract providing for hydrant rentals, because of an alleged compromise judgment of the United States Court, and new agreement entered into in 1897. The trial was before the court without a jury, resulting in a judgment declaring the hydrant a review of the proceedings.

Appellant has presented, in a brief of 207 pages, 127 assignments of error. It seems manifest that we will be unable to dispose of each assignment separately. We think, however, they may be classified and disposed of in groups. Quite a number of assignments complain of the introduction of specified testimony over appellant's objection, but these, we think, should be overruled, inasmuch as the trial was before the court without a jury, and inasmuch, as will hereinafter appear, we think there is other legal evidence supporting the judgment. In such cases we understand the rule to be that a judgment will not be reversed on the ground of the admission of testimony, whatever may be the objection thereto. See 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 49, Melton v. Cobb, 21 Tex. 539, Beaty v. Whitaker, 23 Tex. 528, Lindsay v. Jaffray, 55 Tex. 626, St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Ticer, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 403, and other authorities that might be cited.

Another group consisting of numerous assignments complain of failures on the part of the court to find specified facts and specified propositions of law. In no instance, however, in the statements under such assignments, do we find that appellant requested findings, as insisted upon, or any exception, because of the court's failure, and we, therefore, think all such assignments should be overruled.

Yet another group of assignments complaining of findings of the court may be disregarded, on the ground that they become immaterial in view of the conclusions hereinafter announced. We, therefore, now address ourselves to a determination of that class of assignments presenting what we deem to be the vital questions involved in this appeal.

In 1883, and again by an amended ordinance in 1897, appellant was granted for a term of 25 years the right of installing, operating, and maintaining a water system in the city of Gainesville, in consideration of which, among other things, appellant agreed to supply the inhabitants of such city with water "suitable for domestic purposes," and that its system, when completed, should be capable of "discharging simultaneously five one-inch streams through fifty feet of two and one-half inch hose to a height of one hundred feet," and that the company or its successors and assigns should "operate and keep the said works and every part in constant repair and working order, and upon alarm of fire being given to the person in charge of the engines of said works, either by day or night, to immediately cause sufficient pressure to throw the five streams specified in this ordinance for any length of time needed for the extinguishment of any fire." The court in a for some 5 or 6 years preceding the trial appellant had extensively used water contaminated with sewage and impregnated with col- on bacilli and other disease-breeding germs, which was commingled with artesian water furnished to the inhabitants of Gainesville, and that the water so furnished was wholly unfit for domestic use; that "since the 2d day of February, 1897, the defendant has failed to maintain its system of waterworks in such state of repair and efficiency as to be able to throw five streams of water, mentioned in the fourth section of said ordinance, to the height of 100 feet as therein required, but has not been able to give more than sufficient pressure to throw said streams at a greater height than from 50 to 65 feet."

Both ordinance requirements above specified were certainly material inducements to the grant of the franchise to appellant, and it would be lamentable indeed if the inhabitants of the city of Gainesville were without remedy if the findings of the court above specified are supported by the evidence. This, however, appellant vigorously denies. But, after as careful a consideration of the evidence as we have been able to give it, we feel constrained to overrule appellant's contention. The statement of facts consists of some 415 pages, and we can only summarize. Upon the Saturday preceding the trial a test of the capacity of the waterworks was made upon the square. J. H. Adams testified to the effect that they succeeded in getting the water some 45 or 50 feet high, and that that was about like the pressure they had been getting at fires for the last 3 or 4 years. He says: "With such a pressure as we have been getting for the last 5 or 6 years we could not put out a fire in the roof of the courthouse, and we could not have put out a fire in the third story of the Lindsay House, not without a ladder to carry the water up there. I don't believe we could get water on the high school building. If we had a stream we could throw 100 feet high, we could put water up there. We could put fires out in the buildings mentioned if we could throw a stream of water 100 feet high." J. W. Puckett testified that he had been a member of the Gainesville Fire Department, with the exception of 2 years, since 1883 or 1884; that when the water- works were built he thought they could throw five streams of water at the same time over the cupola of the courthouse (shown by other testimony to be something less than 100 feet high), but that, again quoting: "They can't do that now; they haven't done it lately. I would judge they can throw five streams to a height of 50 to 65 feet now. The firemen did break through windows of houses when the waterworks were first built, and they also knocked shingles off of houses. They could do that with the pressure they burned. * * * I think the stronger the pressure the quicker you can get a fire under control. You can do more effective work with a strong stream; if you have a good pressure you can reach the fire a good deal better. With the present pressure I don't think you could reach a fire in the court- house steeple. We couldn't put out a fire on the roof of the high school building with the pressure we have had for the last few years. I don't think they could reach a fire in the roof of the Lindsay House. I was here on the square last Saturday at the time they made that test. I don't think they got the water higher than 60 feet then. I think that was as good pressure as they have been hav- ing, if anything a little over an average." Mart Gwynn testified that he was and had been a member of the Gainesville Fire De- partment, and attended fires, and that in his judgment, when there was no wind, they could get the water "50 or 60 feet high straight up. I would think that was as high, in my judgment, as we have ever been able to get it. Ordinarily I would think we could get it about 50 feet high." An operator of the telephone company in Gainesville testi- fied that the telephone company had never failed to notify the water company when an alarm of fire was turned in; that she re- membered of no instance in which there was such failure.

There was a great deal of testimony on the issue of the character of water furnish- ed the citizens. We will not undertake to quote it, but deem it only necessary to say that it tended to show that the sewage from "negro town" and other parts of the city drained in the direction of, and to a greater or less extent percolated through the soil into waters gathered in appellant's recep- tacles for water, from whence it was com- mingled with artesian water, and furnished through hydrants to the citizens; that the water furnished the citizens at times had disagreeable odor and taste, and that many of the citizens declined to use it save for sprinkling yards and like purposes; that on one occasion water had been taken from one of appellant's receptacles for water, desig- nated "Specimen No. 1," and also from pools on the surface near thereto, designated as "Specimen No. 2," and sent to Dr. Robert Zeit, professor and head of the department of pathology and bacteriology, Northwestern University Medical School, Chicago, Ill., who stated that his experience in the bacterio- logic examination of water extended over a period of 11 years, and included many thousand specimens of water. Dr. Zeit reported that the purest specimen sent (out of appellant's well) could not be safely used as a drinking water; that it would produce principally intestinal diseases—diarrhea, dys- entery, typhoid fever—that it might also tirely unfit and dangerous to use as drinking water, because it contains 21,500,000 bacteria per liter (about a quart), and is badly polluted with sewage bacteria, colon bacilli, types in large numbers; and some streptococci."

It is true that upon both issues above discussed appellant offered evidence of a contrary tendency. It offered tests of other physicians, who had made a chemical analysis of the water and found it sanitary, and that the test of Dr. Zeit was unfair, in that the water had been taken from a supply well and from the surface soon after an overflow, which had impregnated their water receptacles. It also offered evidence tending to show that at the tests made of the system they had not been given time to get up the proper pressure in order to comply with the ordinance requirements. But we think all of this constituted mere conflicts of testimony which was for the determination of the trial court, and that the evidence as a whole cannot be said to be insufficient to support his findings. The court found, and there was evidence tending to support the finding, that appellant was insolvent, and unable to carry out the purposes for which its franchise had been extended; so that, on the whole, we think the court's material findings of fact must be adopted, and the judgment affirmed. *Palestine Water Co. v. Appeal from District Court, Lamar County; T. D. Montrose, Judge.

Proceedings by J. I. Rollings and others against E. H. Buchanan and another to probate a will. From a judgment admitting the will to probate, contestants appeal. Affirmed.

Moore, Park & Birmingham, for appellants. B. B. Sturgeon, W. F. Moore, and Burdett & Connor, for appellees.

WILLSON, C. J. The case was before us at a former term on an appeal, as this one is, from a judgment of the district court of Lamar county, admitting to probate, as the last will of Hettie C. Buchanan, deceased, the contents, as testified to by witnesses, of a writing alleged to have been the will, wholly written by herself, of said Hettie C. Buchanan, and to have been lost or secreted, suppressed or destroyed, by appellants Buchanan and Mary Higdon. The statement made in the opinion disposing of that appeal is referred to as accurately stating the case as it appears from the record on this appeal, except that it did not appear from the record on the first appeal whether the decedent, Hettie C. Buchanan, at the time of her death was 45 or 60 years of age, while it appears from the record now before us that she was then 40 or 45 years of age. See 112 S. W. 785.

On the former appeal it was urged that the trial court erred in permitting witnesses, its existence, until about 10 days before her death. This court overruled the contention then made, holding such declarations to be admissible. On the trial resulting in the judgment from which this appeal is prosecuted, over appellants' objection thereto on the ground that they were hearsay, such declarations were again admitted, and the contention urged on the former appeal has been renewed and vigorously pressed on this one. The question made has long been a controverted one. The view taken of it by appellants is, we think, amply supported by the authorities they cite; among them being Throckmorton v. Holt, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1901 (180 U. S. 562, 21 Sup. Ct. 482, 45 L. Ed. 672), where it was held that declarations of a decedent, not a part of the res gestæ, were not admissible, whether made before or after the date of a will alleged to have been made by him and attacked as a forgery, to show the improbability of his having made such a disposition of his property as was claimed to have been made by him, or to show the state of his mind in order to raise an inference that acts of mutilation shown by the will were his acts, performed with the purpose of revoking such mutilated will. On the former appeal we were of the opinion that a view of the question contrary to that entertained by the Supreme Court of the United States and other courts had been taken by the Supreme Court of our own state (Tynan v. Paschal, 27 Tex. 300, 84 Am. Dec. 619; McElroy v. Phink, 97 Tex. 147, 76 S. W. 753, 77 S. W. 1025), and that, in disposing of the contention, we should follow the rule as we understood it to be established in this state. We are still of the same opinion, and therefore overrule the assignments presenting the question.

On the trial appellee Rollings testified that, on the day after the burial of Mrs. Buchanan's remains, he and appellant Buchanan, Mrs. Buchanan's surviving husband, renewed a search for a will begun by them on the day she was buried, and found "laying on the desk a red black paper," denominated by him as "an adoption paper"; that the paper so found was handed to him by Buchanan, who remarked, "Here is something, but it is torn up and is no account"; that he (Rollings) remarked, "I'll take that"; that said paper was not on the desk when the search was made on the evening before it was found, as stated; and that he had never before seen it. Buchanan testified, with reference to said paper, that the search was renewed as stated at Rollings' instance; that Rollings "came to his house the next morning after the burial of his wife, and wanted to look through her desk again"; that they looked through it, but did not find a will; that Rollings then drew some-tion paper." After having the witness to identify a paper as the one he referred to as having been drawn by Rollings from his pocket, appellants offered it as evidence. Appellee objected to the admission of the contents of the paper as evidence, on the ground that same were immaterial and irrelevant, and because appellants had not offered to prove the contents of the portions thereof torn off. The objections were sustained by the court "to the extent," it is recited in the bill of exceptions, "of excluding the contents of the remaining and undestroyed portions of said instrument, but permitted defendants to offer its physical condition and appearance only, and to show simply that it was a mutilated instrument." The action of the court as indicated is assigned as error. The original of the instrument in question is with the record on this appeal. It appears to have been a typewritten draft of a will to be executed by Mrs. Buchanan, prepared at a time not shown, but when she was the wife of M. J. Webb, who is mentioned in it as sole executor thereof. The greater portion of the first page of the document, and the concluding part thereof on the fourth page, are absent, having, apparently, been torn from the portions of the pages left, and presumably destroyed. In portions thereof remaining is a recital of the gift to her by her deceased sister, Sallie C. Rollings, and her surviving husband, J. I. Rollings, of their child, John Mitch Rollings, "to be raised and educated as her own child," followed by an appointment in blank of a guardian of the person and estate of said John Mitch Rollings, instructions to such guardian in regard to the management, etc., of property then owned by said Johnny Mitch, and as to his burial, etc., in the event he should die during his minority. Other portions of the document provide for compensation to be paid the guardian for his services, name her husband, M. J. Webb, as the sole executor of the will, exonerate him from giving bond as such, and direct that her estate be administered independently of the courts. We do not think the court erred in excluding the contents of the document as evidence in the case. So far as we see to the contrary, they were immaterial and irrelevant to any issue presented for determination.

It is insisted that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding of the jury (1) that Mrs. Buchanan executed the alleged will sought to be probated; (2) as to its contents; and (3) if executed, that it was not revoked by her.

The statute provides that a will wholly written by the testator "may be probated on proof by two witnesses of his handwriting." 1 Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1900. It further provides that "a written will which testimony shall be required to prove such will as is required to prove a written will produced in court." Id. art. 1901. The testimony indicated that Mrs. Buchanan was a self-reliant, intelligent woman, who, during her lifetime, had assisted her first husband in the management and conduct of a grocery business carried on by him, and who after his death continued the business, and alone managed and conducted it. The witness Hill testified that, acting for other parties, she had written two wills, and that one of them had been admitted to probate. The testimony referred to suggested as entirely probable that, if she desired to make a will, Mrs. Buchanan would draft it herself, and that it would be wholly in her own handwriting.

Mrs. Allen testified that she was acquainted with Mrs. Buchanan's handwriting, that in the fall of 1902 Mrs. Buchanan showed her a written instrument, which she at the time declared to be her will, and that the instrument was wholly in Mrs. Buchanan's handwriting, and had been duly signed by her. Mrs. Swalm testified that she also was acquainted with Mrs. Buchanan's handwriting; that on two different occasions—the last in December before her marriage to appellant Buchanan—Mrs. Buchanan exhibited to her a written instrument purporting to be her will, and that the instrument so exhibited was in Mrs. Buchanan's handwriting, and had been duly signed by her. Each of the witnesses named described the writing as being with black ink on white legal cap paper. A portion of the instrument exhibited to Mrs. Allen was read to her by Mrs. Buchanan, and as read it bequeathed her home place to Johnny Mitch Rollings, her personal property to appellee J. I. Rollings, a house and lot to Wooten Saufley, and a house and lot to Milt Saufley. A portion of the instrument exhibited to Mrs. Swalm also was read to her by Mrs. Buchanan, and as read it bequeathed to said Johnny Mitch her homestead and a farm, to said J. I. Rollings "her money and personal notes to keep for said Johnny Mitch in case he outlived her," to Milt Saufley a house on Jefferson street, and to Wooten Saufley a house and lot on Webb street. It will be observed that, while Mrs. Allen testified that by the terms of the will exhibited to her appellee Rollings was to take Mrs. Buchanan's personal property and hold it as his own, Mrs. Swalm testified that, by the terms of the will exhibited to her, said appellee Rollings was to take said personal property and hold same in trust for the use and benefit of said Johnny Mitch. And also it will be observed that, according to the terms of the will exhibited to Mrs. Swalm, said Johnny Mitch was to take a farm as well as the home place, while, according to the terms of the will read to Mrs. Allen, he ited to Mrs. Swalm was the one exhibited to Mrs. Allen could it be contended that the execution of the will as probated was not established as it was required to be by the statute. But such discrepancies in the testimony of the witnesses as to the contents we think would furnish no reason for saying that the finding of the jury that the instrument shown to Mrs. Allen was one and the same as the instrument shown to Mrs. Swalm was not supported by the testimony. With better reason, it seems to us, the discrepancies referred to might be urged in support of the contention that the contents of the will as probated had not been sufficiently shown by the evidence.

But on the issue as to the contents of the will as probated there was other evidence. Mrs. J. I. Rollings testified that about two weeks before Mrs. Buchanan married Buchanan she exhibited to her (the witness) an instrument she declared to be her will, and read to her a portion of it, when some one came in and interrupted her. By the terms of the will so far as read to her, Mrs. Rollings testified Mrs. Buchanan's home place and the farm were bequeathed to said Johnny Mitch, and her money and notes to J. I. Rollings in trust for said Johnny Mitch. Mrs. Vowell testified that Mrs. Buchanan read to her an instrument which she declared to be her will, and that by its terms as so read to her it gave the homestead and the farm to said Johnny Mitch, to Wooten Saufley and Milt Saufley a house and lot, and to appellee Rollings her money. And the testimony we have referred to as to the contents of the will as probated was corroborated by other testimony in the record. For instance, Mrs. Moss testified to hearing appellant Buchanan, about three weeks before the date of Mrs. Buchanan's death, complaining to her that she had given everything she had to "that boy"—meaning said Johnny Mitch. Reed heard her declare a short time before her death that she "wished Johnny Mitch to have everything." And other declarations made by Mrs. Buchanan to the same general effect were testified to by the witnesses McHam, Eubanks, Shanklin, Wynne, and Mrs. Rutherford. We clearly are of the opinion that the finding of the jury that Mrs. Buchanan executed the will with contents as probated was not without evidence to support it.

Of the questions made on this appeal the one about which we have been doubtful is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of the jury that the will as probated had not been destroyed by Mrs. Buchanan during her lifetime for the purpose of revoking it. There was no direct evidence that she had, or that she had not, destroyed the will. Circumstances were relied upon circumstances were relied upon by appellants to establish the contrary of appellees' contentions. In discussing the testimony on this issue we shall confine ourselves to such of it as in our judgment tends to support the finding of the jury; for if there is evidence in the record which, fairly construed, can be said to support the conclusion reached by them, their verdict, and the judgment based upon it, should not be set aside merely because other testimony in the record might be referred to as tending to support a contrary conclusion.

It appears from the testimony that Mrs. Buchanan was first married to M. J. Webb, and that there was no child of this marriage. Ten or more years before the date of Mrs. Buchanan's death her sister, the wife of appellee J. I. Rollings, died, leaving surviving her her son, said Johnny Mitch Rollings, then 3 or 4 years of age. At the time of her sister's death Mrs. Buchanan, then Mrs. Webb, took charge of, and during the remainder of her life cared for, her sister's child as she would have cared for him had he been her own child. The evidence indicates that the child was not strong mentally, and that Mrs. Buchanan was very solicitous about him while she lived, and equally anxious to provide for his welfare after her death. She declared to the witness Robinius, after her marriage to Buchanan, referring to Johnny Mitch: "I am going to take care of him as long as I live, and not only that, I have done provided for him." She declared to Eubanks, about three weeks before she died: "I have got a will made to give that boy, and I am going to give him enough to keep him the balance of his days." Shanklin heard her say more than once that she "had made provision for Johnny Mitch; * * * that he was not able to take care of himself, and she was going to take care of him." At various times before and after her marriage to Buchanan, she made similar declarations to Mrs. Rutherford, Mrs. J. I. Rollings, and others. Such being the state of her feelings towards Johnny Mitch, unless she had another or other relatives as near and as dear to her, and as dependent as Johnny Mitch, it reasonably was to be expected that, if she made a will, he would be its chief beneficiary. So far as the record shows to the contrary, the only other blood relative she had was her sister Mrs. Higdon, for whom it appears she entertained the kindest regard. But it also appears that she did not look upon her as a proper object of her bounty, for she declared to Mrs. J. I. Rollings that she (Mrs. Higdon) "did not need any of her property." As meeting an inference that she had revoked the will, which might be deduced from the fact that she had married again, it may be stated that determination to bequeath her property to her nephew, Johnny Mitch.

On the former appeal most, if not all, the testimony we have referred to was in the record, and it impressed us then, as it does now, as strongly tending to show a fixed determination on the part of Mrs. Buchanan to make provision for the boy after her death, and as sufficiently accounting for the fact that she made him the chief beneficiary in her will as probated. We nevertheless felt ourselves constrained to hold that the evidence, as it appeared in the record on that appeal, was not sufficient to support the finding of the jury that the will had not been revoked. Mrs. Buchanan was taken sick on Sunday, August 7, and died on Tuesday, August 18, 1904. On the former appeal the testimony tended to show that the will was in existence and in her possession on the Thursday immediately preceding the Sunday on which she became ill, but, as we construed it, did not tend to show that it was in existence at any time thereafter, and did not tend to show that, during the period intervening between the Thursday referred to and the date of her death, Mrs. Buchanan had destroyed it with the intention of thereby revoking it. Such being the state of the case as shown by the testimony in the record on that appeal, we were of the opinion that the proponents had not discharged the burden resting upon them to overcome, by evidence to the contrary, the presumption to be indulged where a will when last seen was in possession of a testator, and cannot be found after his death, to wit, that he destroyed it with the intention of revoking it. Tynan v. Paschal, 27 Tex. 286, 84 Am. Dec. 618; Graham v. Burch, 28 Am. St. Rep. note on p. 347. For that reason alone we reversed the judgment complained of on that appeal.

In the record on this appeal we find evidence tending to show that the will was in existence on the Sunday morning preceding Mrs. Buchanan's death on Tuesday, and also testimony tending to show that she may not, on said Sunday morning and to the time of her death, have been in a condition to destroy the will for the purpose of revoking it. There was evidence tending to show that the will in question was kept by Mrs. Buchanan in a cloth shot sack. Mrs. John W. Webb testified that Mrs. McDade and Mrs. Cann were with and ministered to Mrs. Buchanan during the earlier part of the Saturday night before she died, that she and Mrs. Moss attended her during the latter part of that night, and that while she was with her, Mrs. Buchanan "put her hand under the pillow, and said: 'Dearie, my will, my papers.'" The witness further testified that at that time the shot sack in which Mrs. Buchanan kept her will was under her pillow.

"kept feeling under her pillow for something—feeling like she was trying to find something." Mrs. Webb further testified that Mrs. Buchanan was never out of her bed, after she spoke as recited above about her will and papers, and, the witness added, "mortification had set in then." Mrs. McDade did not testify, but Mrs. Cann, as a witness on behalf of appellants, testified that she and Mrs. McDade sat up with Mrs. Buchanan during the greater part of Saturday or Sunday night before she died, and until about 2 o'clock in the morning, and that Mrs. John Webb and some one else sat up the remainder of the night. It is fair, therefore, to infer that it was the earlier part of said Saturday night, and not of said Sunday night, that Mrs. Cann referred to. She testified that Mrs. Buchanan was then unconscious. If the jury, as they had a right to do, believed the testimony we have just referred to, it was sufficient to justify them in finding that the will existed on the Sunday morning before Mrs. Buchanan died, and that she was then, and until she died continued to be, so incapacitated as to be unable to revoke it.

In this state of the evidence, we would not be prepared to say that the finding of the jury in the particular in question was without support, if there was an utter absence in the record of evidence to which they might refer as furnishing a basis for an inference that the will had been destroyed or suppressed by Buchanan or by Mrs. Higdon, or by both of them acting together. But it cannot be said that there is not such evidence in the record. During the period intervening between the Sunday morning, when, according to the testimony of Mrs. John W. Webb, Mrs. Buchanan was feeling under her pillow and calling for her will, and the date of her death Mrs. Higdon and Buchanan were both in the house where Mrs. Buchanan lay sick, and presumably had an opportunity to get possession of the will. Mrs. Rollings testified, and her testimony was corroborated by that of her husband, appellee J. I. Rollings, that she and her said husband and Mrs. Higdon and Buchanan attended Mrs. Buchanan's funeral, and in going to the cemetery rode together in the same carriage; that while they were on the way to the cemetery Buchanan, addressing Rollings, asked him "if he reckoned the Webbs [brothers and sisters of Mrs. Buchanan's deceased husband] would sue for any of the estate," that Rollings made no reply, but that Mrs. Higdon did, remarking: "Let them sue. We have got everything our way, and will keep it our way." While Buchanan positively denied that any such conversation occurred, in her testimony Mrs. Higdon did not destroyed or secreted it, and believed her act would render futile an effort on the part of the Webbs, if they made one, to obtain any of the property belonging to Mrs. Buchanan at the date of her death. Wooten and Milt Saufley were "Webbs," in that they were the children of a sister of Mich Webb, Mrs. Buchanan's deceased husband. It will be remembered that the will as probated by its terms bequeathed to each of the Saufeys named a house and lot.

As further bearing on this feature of the case, it may be stated that, while practically every issue made on the trial, and every phase of it, was sharply controverted, it fairly can be said that the evidence satisfactorily established that if Mrs. Buchanan had a will, she habitually kept it in a cloth shot sack. It appears from the record that the shot sack was never seen by any one after Mrs. Buchanan's death, nor during her lifetime after the Sunday morning it was seen by Mrs. John W. Webb, when Mrs. Buchanan was feeling under her pillow and calling for her will. Appellee Rollings testified that he and his wife, and Buchanan and Mrs. Higdon, returned to Mrs. Buchanan's former home, where she had died, after her funeral, and that when they got back there Buchanan suggested that they "look for a will"; that he (Rollings) then stated that, "The will is in the shot sack," when Buchanan replied that, "the shot sack was on the river," referring to the place where, it seems, before his marriage to Mrs. Buchanan, and occasionally afterwards, he resided. Rollings' testimony in the particulars stated was corroborated by the testimony of his wife. Rollings further testified that, on the day following the day the conversation just recited occurred, he heard Buchanan declare to Judge Moore that "there was no will," when he (Rollings) remarked to Buchanan, "That will is in the shot sack." The reply made by Buchanan to Rollings' assertion that the will was in the shot sack was: "Let's go to the bank and look for a will." Buchanan testified that he had never seen the shot sack, nor heard of it until he went to the county court, presumably after proceedings to probate the will had been commenced. The jury had a right to believe the testimony of Rollings and disbelieve that of Buchanan. If they believed that Buchanan declared the shot sack to be on the river, they might have made inferences from his subsequent denial of any knowledge of it tending to support appellees' contention that he had destroyed or secreted it.

We are of the opinion that the findings of the jury necessary to support their verdict were not without evidence to sustain them. The weight to be given the testimony tending Appeal from District Court, Lamar County; Ben H. Denton, Judge.

Action by B. B. Sturgeon against the City of Paris. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 110 S. W. 459.

Appellant sought to compel appellee, by mandatory injunction, to restore the pipes and the connection with its water main, and to furnish him water therefrom for use on his premises within the corporate limits of the city. The trial was to the court without a jury, and a judgment was entered against appellant denying the injunction. By his petition the appellant claims that in September, 1908, the city of Paris, a municipal corporation duly incorporated and acting as such by authority of special acts of the Legislature of 1905 (Sp. Laws 1905, p. 31, c. 6), and incorporated and acting as such prior thereto by authority of the special act of the Legislature of 1889 (Sp. Laws 1889, p. 112, c. 14), and specially authorized by each of the special acts to provide, own, and maintain a system of public waterworks, which it did, illegally and wrongfully disconnected and discontinued its water with his premises, situated in the city limits, which was previously connected by appellee to appellant's premises, and which was used by appellant on his premises and for use of himself and family, and refused to let him have any water at all from its main. By proper allegations appellant claims the right, and was entitled, to the use of the city water, and to compel the city to grant the use of the water to him, upon (1) a legal and binding contract with the city to sell and furnish him water on his premises so long as he desired to use the water and paid for the same, made on October 12, 1904, he having at all times fully complied with the contract, the city having power to make the contract under its charter of 1889 then in force; (2) independent of contract, as a citizen and resident of the city owning premises within the corporate limits and residing thereupon with his family; (3) as an owner of property within the corporate limits to the extent of the property within the corporate limits, whether he was an inhabitant of the city or not. Appellee in answer at length denied any contract with appellant to furnish him water so long as he desired and paid for same, but claimed that if the agreement it made with appellant, which was set out and relied on by him, was a contract, it was only a contract at will, and could be rescinded by either party at any time, and that it was rescinded by appellee after due notice to appellant prior to the time the premises of the city, and that his premises and his residence thereon were adjoining and outside the corporate limits of the city, except 5 feet east of his west boundary line, which was within the corporate limits, and that section 252 of the charter of 1905, set out, specially denied the city the right or power to sell the use of the water to any person living beyond the limits of the corporation.

The findings of fact by the court appear in the record, and the same are supported by the testimony, and we here adopt the same. The findings substantially show that appellant is not, and never has been, a citizen, resident, or inhabitant of the city of Paris, but lives beyond its limits, and owns, and has continuously before and since October 12, 1904, resided with his family upon, and occupied as a homestead, a tract of land of about three acres in the G. W. Cox head-right in Lamar county, which tract lies east of and adjoins the city of Paris. The tract fronts south on Lamar and west on Pacific avenues, and has improvements on it consisting of a dwelling, barn, horse lot, chicken lot, flowers, trees, and shrubbery. That a strip of the premises 5 feet in width, fronting south on Lamar, and extending north 500 feet with the east boundary line of Pacific avenue, is within the corporate limits of the city of Paris, and that the east boundary line of the corporate limits is 5 feet east of the west boundary line of appellant's premises. That this strip includes a portion of appellant's yard and chicken lot, and has on it a few shrubs and trees, but there is no house, dwelling, or other structure on it, and this strip is the only portion of his premises within the corporate limits, and that the extreme west edge of his house is 27 feet east of the east boundary line of the corporate limits of the city, and that no part of the house is within the corporate limits. The city of Paris is a municipal corporation situated in Lamar county, Tex., and incorporated by special act of the Twenty-Ninth Legislature which contains, among other things, section 252, which provides: "The city council shall not have the right or power to grant, extend or sell the use, enjoyment or benefit of any public utilities established, owned or operated by the city of Paris to any person living beyond the limits of the corporation of the city of Paris, provided that manufacturing plants are not included in the provision of this section." That on the 12th of October, 1904, the city of Paris was a municipal corporation duly incorporated by virtue of special act of the Legislature of 1889, and that, among other things, section 24 of said act provides: "Also the city council may provide, own and maintain waterworks for the use of the city and inhabitants." That on the 12th of Octo-

1904, appellant made in writing an application to the city of Paris, upon its regular blank form for such purposes, for the introduction of water into his premises, agreeing in the application to be governed by all existing rules and regulations, or any that may be established from time to time for the management of the same. This application was approved by the superintendent of appellee, who had full power to make and annul contracts for the supply of water, on October 21, 1904, and service connection made by appellee on the portion of appellant's premises within the corporate limits; and this was the only agreement appellee had with appellant. Appellant, at his own cost, caused pipes to be laid on his premises, and connected his house, yard, and lot with service, and placed fixtures in his house, bathroom, and kitchen, and has been using city water, and paying therefor the usual rental, continuously since the connection was made until September 20, 1908, when appellee, after notice to appellant, disconnected same.

J. G. Dudley, for appellant. Edgar Wright, for appellee.

LEVY, J. (after stating the facts as above). It is the contention of appellant by his first assignment of error that, to the extent of the premises owned by him as situated within the corporate limits of the city of Paris, he is entitled, as a matter of right, to the use of the city water upon paying for it, as he did, and upon complying with all reasonable regulations, which he did, whether he be an inhabitant of the city of Paris or not. In view of the finding of fact by the trial court, and which is not complained of, and which finding we think fully supported by the evidence, that appellant is not, and has never been, a citizen, resident, or inhabitant of the city of Paris, but now lives beyond and outside of its corporate limits with his family, and has continuously lived and resided outside of the corporate limits of the city since October 12, 1904, we are of the opinion that the assignment should be overruled. Appellant concedes the established rule of law to be that a municipal corporation is restricted and limited to the power and authority capable of being legally exercised under its charter, and cannot legally exercise power which is expressly denied. It is expressly provided, by section 252 of the city charter of 1905, that: "The city council shall not have the right or power to grant, extend or sell the use, enjoyment and benefit of any public utilities established, owned or operated by the city of Paris to any person living beyond the limits of the corporation of the city of Paris." It is evident from this provision of the charter that the proper exercise of the power of the city to extend and grant the benefit and use of its water service to an individual is not dependent upon the proof of the fact that the individual owns property situated within the corporate limits of the city, but upon the proof of the fact that the individual seeking the water service is himself an inhabitant of, or lives within, the city limits. Hence by the terms of the charter the individual seeking water service, in order to establish a legal right to compel the city to furnish and sell, for his use, water on premises within the corporate limits, must prove that he is an inhabitant of, or lives within, the corporate limits. The ownership of land within the city limits, where the owner at the time is a noninhabitant, and does not live within the city limits, does not establish the right of privilege of the individual to, nor the power of the city to grant the use of, water and water service. Indeed the provision of the charter expressly denies any power or authority to the city or its authorities to grant or extend the use of its water and water service for any purpose to a person living beyond the city limits, and in legal consequence has the force and effect to deny any right to the individual living beyond the corporate limits. The right of the water service to the individual is thus by the charter a privilege of special citizenship, or inhabitancy, or living within the city limits. It clearly follows in this case, we think, that appellant could not predicate any legal right to compel the city, by mandatory injunction, to furnish and sell the use to him of water from its waterworks upon the ground alone of being the owner of the specific property within the corporate limits; he at the time not living within the corporate limits of the city. Sturgeon v. City of Paris (on former appeal) 110 S. W. 459.

But appellant contends in the second assignment of error that section 252 of the charter of 1905 is contrary to section 52, art. 3, of the Constitution of Texas, because it discriminates in aid of manufacturing corporations. The section of the charter has the following proviso: "Provided that manufacturing plants are not included in the provisions of this section." We are of the opinion that conferring the right and authority to the city to sell its water and water service to a manufacturing plant located beyond its boundaries is not a grant of a thing of value to such corporation as inhibited by the Constitution. Even if it should be held, which we do not so think, that the portion of the section excepting manufacturing plants is prohibited by the Constitution, the portion of the section which remains, and which is applicable to appellant, is complete in itself, and capable of being executed in accordance with the Legislature's intent, and must be sustained. Cooley on Const. Lim. (3d Ed.)

The appellant by his third assignment contends that the court erred in the following conclusion of law: "That on the 20th day of October, and September, 1908, and since March 5, 1905, the city of Paris was being operated under a special act of the Twenty-Ninth Legislature, and that said charter expressly prohibited the city of Paris from selling the use or enjoyment of any public utility established, owned, or operated by the city to any persons living beyond the limits of the corporation, and that, even if on the 12th of October, 1904, the charter of the city of Paris had authorized the city of Paris to sell water to plaintiff, and a valid contract had been entered into between plaintiff and defendant, by reason of section 1, art. 17, of the Constitution there could be no vested right of such contract to plaintiff, and the subsequent passage of the act of Twenty-Ninth Legislature granting the city of Paris a new charter, and expressly prohibiting the city from selling the use and enjoyment of its public utilities to persons not living within its limits, would authorize the city of Paris to rescind same." Assuming that the city or its representatives had the power to make the agreement or contract, as pleaded and shown by appellant, to furnish him water, yet it must be held in this case, we think, that it conclusively appears from the pleading and findings of fact by the court that the agreement or contract, under the most favorable construction to appellant, was a contract at will, and determinable by either party at any time. The petition does not aver that the city ever contracted to furnish appellant water and water service for any definite period of time, but affirmatively alleges "that under and by the said contract, permit, and agreement, as herein set out, this defendant agreed to furnish this plaintiff water, so long as he paid for same, as its other customers." The evidence as to a contract is found in the findings of the trial court, and rests upon the following application to the city for water signed by the appellant, and which the court finds "constitutes the only agreement plaintiff had with the defendant." The application reads: "Paris Waterworks. Application for Water Connection. Paris, Texas, October 12, 1904. I hereby make application for the introduction of water into the premises of B. B. Sturgeon, No. —, Pacific avenue, for the following purposes, and agree to be governed by all existing rules and regulations or any that may be established from time to time for the management of same." This finding is supported by the evidence, because appellant in his evidence states the agreement and circumstances under which he connected his premises with the city water as: "Well, I applied, as my recollection serves me, and I think I am almost positive of it, to Mr. Hill, the mayor in October, 1904. That I wanted to do that which was necessary to get water connections. I don't remember all that was said, except Mr. Hill said he would have the connections made, and I was granted water connections by the city superintendent." On cross-examination he said, "I signed the application," meaning the application above set out. We must take the contract as alleged in the petition to be the contract on which appellant must predicate his rights, if any at all; and, looking to that, in connection with the testimony, there can be no doubt that the term of water service was indefinite and depended upon appellant's own will. The evidence does not bear out the stipulation "so long as he paid for same." By the contract appellant was not bound to take, nor the city to furnish, the water for any length of time, and appellant could have stopped taking the water the next day or the next week, if he had chosen to do so, without causing a breach of the agreement. It is laid down as a rule of contract that when the time or period of the performance is left to the discretion of either party, or is indefinite or determinable by either party, either may put an end to it at will, and do so without cause. Bradshaw v. Terrell Foundry Co., 104 S. W. 509; Railway v. Scott, 72 Tex. 70, 10 S. W. 99, 13 Am. St. Rep. 758; Coffee Co. v. Guenther (Ky.) 80 S. W. 1170; Echols v. N. O., etc., R. R. Co., 52 Miss. 610. Appellant, being a noninhabitant of the city, could not properly rest any legal contention that, by reason of the agreement to furnish him water service, there was a continuing legal duty on the part of the city to furnish him the water as long as he paid for the same. It was conclusively shown in the case that appellee rescinded the agreement, as it has the legal right to do, and upon due notice to appellant before disconnecting the water connection. It, therefore, follows that appellant could not predicate any legal right upon the contract, as pleaded and proved, to compel the city by injunction to continue to furnish him water, and that this ruling is decisive of any contention of contractual right to appellant arising in the case. This ruling further renders it unnecessary to pass upon the several propositions under the assignment.

The judgment was ordered affirmed.

On Rehearing.

That portion of the original opinion reading, "The ownership of land within the city limits, where the owner at the time is a non-inhabitant, and does not live within the city limits, does not establish the right or privilege of the individual to, nor the power of the city to grant the use of, water and water service," appears to the writer as calculated red to the particular facts and pleading of the case. It was meant to rule, and we adhere to the ruling, that the appellant has not shown himself entitled to the relief sought, because it appeared in the case that he resided, and his resident property was located, outside of the city limits, and that the use of the water would have been outside of the city limits, and that as to the strip of land owned by him within the city limits, he had not shown such occupancy or use of or about the same, or contractual right to, or legal duty owing thereto by the city for the particular kind of water service, to predicate mandatory injunction to compel the water service sought.

Appellant insists in his motion that he has shown such a case as would entitle him to the injunction against the city, upon showing that he used the city water for the purpose of watering his flowers, shrubs, and trees situated on that part of his premises within the city limits. The findings of the court were that appellant resided outside, and all his premises were outside of, the city limits, and that he used the water outside of the city limits, except that a strip of the land 5 feet in width by its length was inside the city limits, and on this strip there were a few flowers, shrubs, and trees that were watered by him out of the city's water. It could not from the petition and proof be reasonably said, we think, that appellant was seeking to enforce this particular kind of water service, but was seeking to compel a general water service to him on all his premises described in the petition. The burden was upon appellant to clearly and affirmatively show a legal right to him in the relief sought; and, under the pleading and proof, it must be held, we think, that he has not so done. That he could predicate no right to the water service upon contract with the city is determined and adhered to in the main opinion. The mere proof that he was using water in watering flowers, etc., in the city limits, and that the city had abundance of water, would not of itself be sufficient, we think, to give the right to the relief sought in this case. In the absence of allegation and proof, as in this case, that the city was under obligation, or owed some legal duty to appellant, to furnish him water to water his flowers, shrubs, and trees within the city limits, and that the regulations by the city of its water service and supply to the individual permitted and authorized the use of city water for such particular purposes named, the court would not be authorized, we think, to compel the city to furnish appellant water for the particular purposes named. Cities, in their general power to control and conserve the water supply for the common benefit of their inhabitants, have the right to dictate as to the amount of water to be supplied to the given consumer, for what purposes and the manner in which it is to be used. If it should be held that appellant has alleged an obligation to furnish the water, it is plain that he has neither alleged nor proved, in order to further predicate any right to compel the city to furnish him water, that the watering of flowers, shrubs, and trees was such use of the water as was authorized and permitted by the water regulations of the city; and the court would not be authorized to assume, we think, that the particular use of the water in watering flowers, shrubs, and trees is a proper use of the city water and authorized by the city.

The motion in all things was ordered overruled.

1. CONTRACTS (§ 247*)—MODIFICATION—EVIDENCE.

Where a contract for the construction of a road contained no provision that a member of defendant's committee having the matter in charge should set grade stakes for plaintiff, the contractor, and there was also no evidence that any member of such committee was authorized to change the contract or make such agreement, evidence that one of the members had so agreed, but had failed to set the stakes, and that the contractor had performed the work as well as he could without stakes, was inadmissible.

Appeal from Potter County Court; W. E. Gee, Special Judge.

Action by J. R. McAlister against the Palo Duro Club. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Reeder, Graham & Williams and Turner & Boyce, for appellant. J. Marvin Jones, L. C. Barrett, and J. A. Templeton, for appellee.

DUNKLIN, J. J. R. McAlister recovered a judgment for $151.25 against the Palo Duro Club in the county court of Potter county for work done on a road leading from Amarillo to defendant's property some 18 miles distant, and from this judgment the defendant has appealed.

The club appointed a committee consisting of C. O. Wolfelin, H. B. Jones, and W. Boyce to secure bids to do the work. J. R. McAlister submitted a bid which, being reported to the club, was by the club accepted, and the committee were empowered to notify McAlister of the acceptance of the bid and to supervise the work. The bid was in parol, and upon the trial there was a sharp conflict in the testimony as to the terms of the contract; the defendant contending that the road was to be of uniform grade, while the plaintiff contended that his contract was merely to build a straight road. Prior to the suit the defendant had paid McAlister $198.75. It seems to have been shown, by undisputed testimony, that the contract price for the work to be done by McAlister was $350. Over appellant's objection plaintiff was permitted to testify that Banks Jones, one of the committee, agreed with him to set the stakes on the road for the plaintiff, to guide the plaintiff in grading the same. The evidence shows beyond controversy that Jones was directed by the other members of the committee to notify McAlister that the club had accepted his bid, and that this agreement by Jones to set the stakes for the grade was made by Jones at the time he notified McAlister of the acceptance of his bid, and that the stakes were never set. In connection with the testimony admitted over defendant's objection, plaintiff and other witnesses testified that McAlister had performed the work as well as he could do so without stakes. There was no evidence in the record tending to show that McAlister's bid for the work contemplated that Jones, or any one else acting for the club, should set the stakes for the grade. The acceptance of McAlister's bid and notice to him of such acceptance closed the contract between him and the club, and there was no evidence in the record to prove that even the committee as a whole had authority from the club to change the contract by any subsequent agreement tending to excuse McAlister from a compliance with the terms of his contract, and we think the court erred in admitting the testimony complained of in the assignment above referred to, and that for such error the judgment should be reversed.

In the third subdivision of the court's charge the jury were instructed in effect that plaintiff would be entitled to recover on a quantum meruit the value of the work done by him less the amount already paid, if the minds of the parties never met as to the character of work to be done by the plaintiff. In other words, if there was a failure to make a legal contract by reason of an absence of a meeting of the minds of the comes the Eastern Texas Railroad Company, and for answer to the plaintiff's cause of action denies all and singular the charges, statements, and averments contained in plaintiff's petition or cause of action as filed against this defendant, and requires strict proof thereof. Defendant, Eastern Texas Railroad Company, further answering, comes and shows to the court that the defendant is sued for damages to a shipment of certain cattle claimed to have been caused by the Eastern Texas Railroad Company. That said cattle were shipped from Chester, Tyler county, Tex., via Corrigan, Polk county, Tex., at which point the shipment was received by the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company, and was then and there shipped from Corrigan to the town of Lufkin in Angelina county, and there delivered to the defendant, Eastern Texas Railroad Company, at Lufkin, from the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company. The damages to the cattle, as claimed by the plaintiff herein, had already accrued to said cattle, and that two head of said cattle were dead in the cars of the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company, and three head of the cattle were down in the cars of the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company at the time they were delivered to the Eastern Texas Railroad Company, and that at the time of this delivery the Eastern Texas Railroad Company's agent at Lufkin notified the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company that said cattle were in a damaged condition, in that two head of said cattle were then dead, and three head of them were down and being trampled upon by the other cattle, while they were in the cars of the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company, and before the said cattle were delivered from the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company to the Eastern Texas Railroad Company. That whatever damages or liability there is existing to said cattle at any time from the time they were received at Corrigan by the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company to the time they were delivered to the defendant in this case to be transported to Kennard was caused by the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company and not by the Eastern Texas Railroad Company. Defendant, further answering, says that if the plaintiff in this should recover against the Eastern Texas Railroad Company for the damages charged against it in this cause, the said Eastern Texas Railroad Company would have no recourse over against the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company for the damages to said cattle caused by the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company, unless such last-named company was made a party in this cause. Wherefore your defendant filed this answer, and shows to the court wherein the damages accrued to the cattle as claimed by the plaintiff herein, and prays that citation be issued to the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company, requiring them to appear and answer plaintiff's cause of action, and that upon a final hearing hereof your said defendant, Eastern Texas Railroad Company, be permitted to defend this suit against the plaintiff, and to prosecute the same against the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company, which company is alone responsible for the damages herein, and that judgment final shall be entered against the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company for such damages as plaintiff sustained to his cattle by reason of said shipment, and that the defendant go hence without day and recover its cost."

Upon the filing of this plea the cause was redocketed and numbered 177, and the following citation was issued and served upon appellant: "The State of Texas. To the Sheriff or any Constable of Houston County, Greeting: You are hereby commanded that you summon the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company to be and appear before me, at a regular term of the justice's court for precinct No. 8 in said county of Houston, to be held at my office in the town of Ratcliff in the county of Houston, on the 16th day of June, A. D. 1908, to answer the suit of H. F. Barclay, plaintiff, against the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company, defendant, being numbered No. 177 on the docket of said court, the plaintiff's demand being for the sum of $60, due upon an account duly sworn to and filed in justice court precinct No. 8, Houston county, Tex., on the 20th day of May, 1908. The plaintiff's demands being for the sum of $60 and interest at 8 per cent. from January 10, 1908, and being for the killing of three head of cattle valued at $40, and damages to three head of cattle, $20, a total of $60 and interest at 8 per cent., as above stated. Wherefore plaintiff prays for judgment for the above sum of $60, with interest at 8 per cent. from January 10, 1908, together with all costs of this suit, and for such other sums of said H. F. Barclay may be entitled to either in law or equity. Herein fail not, and of this writ make due return to the next regular term of the justice's court for precinct No. 8, in said county of Houston, to be held on the 16th day of June, A. D. 1908, next. Given under my hand this 21st day of May, A. D. 1908. A. J. McLemore, Justice of the Peace, Precinct No. 8, Houston County, Tex."

In answer to this citation the appellant appeared in the justice court, and entered a general denial to plaintiff's suit. There was a trial in the justice court of the original cause No. 176, and judgment was therein rendered in favor of the plaintiff against the appellee herein for the sum of $45, and in favor of appellant that plaintiff take nothing against it by said suit. The appellee appealed from this judgment to the county court, and upon the trial de novo in said court judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff against the appellee herein for the execution against the appellant upon said judgment, appellant applied to the district judge before named to restrain the execution of said judgment, on the ground that it was rendered without any pleading to support it, and therefore void. In refusing the application the district judge made the following indorsement thereon, showing his reasons for such refusal: "Injunction refused because it does not appear that the judgment of the county court is void. The answer of the Eastern Texas Railroad Company is sufficient to authorize the judgment over against the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company, though it must be admitted that said answer is inartistically drawn. The prayer for judgment against the Houston, East & West Texas Railroad Company is not alone in favor of plaintiff, but, in the light of the facts pleaded, and other parts of said answer, should be construed as asking for such judgment as the facts pleaded and proven will warrant."

We do not think the pleading before set out can be given the construction placed upon it by the trial judge. It does not appear from this pleading, nor otherwise from the record, that the stock killed and those injured were shipped under a through bill of lading, and the allegation of the pleading that appellee was not liable for the injury to said shipment negatives the idea that the shipment was upon a through bill. If the connecting carrier only undertook to transport the stock to the end of its line, and appellee did not receive them under a through bill of lading, article 331a of the 1895 Statute does not apply, and appellee would not be liable for damages which occurred while the stock was in possession of its connecting carrier. Ry. Co. v. Arnett, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 403, 92 S. W. 57.

It goes without saying that if appellee was not liable to the plaintiff, it would not be entitled to recover over against the appellant the sum wrongfully recovered against it by the plaintiff, notwithstanding the fact that appellant was liable to the plaintiff. If it be conceded, however, that the facts stated in the pleading would warrant a recovery by appellee against appellant of the damages recovered by plaintiff against it, the fact remains that no such recovery was asked. Appellee was not required to file a written pleading, but, having done so, it is bound by the allegations of the plea just as it would be if the case had not originated in the justice's court. There was no additional pleading, oral or written, on the part of appellee, and the judgment can only be sustained, if at all, upon the pleadings before set out. While it is true that pleading in the definite relief, without any prayer for general relief, will support a judgment granting entirely different relief from that asked. In this pleading the prayer is that no judgment be rendered against the appellee, and that judgment for the amount of the damages sustained by plaintiff be rendered against the appellant. This is, in effect, a prayer for judgment in favor of plaintiff against the appellant, and cannot be otherwise construed. That this was the intention of the pleader is shown by the citation which was issued upon said plea, and which only cites the appellant to appear and answer the suit of the plaintiff. There being no pleading to support the judgment against appellant, such judgment is void, and the trial judge erred in refusing to grant the injunction. Ry. Co. v. Skeeters, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 105, 98 S. W. 1064.

It follows that the order refusing the injunction should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the trial judge to grant the injunction upon the filing of a proper bond by appellant, and it has been so ordered.

On petition for rehearing. Dismissed.
For former opinion, see 122 S. W. 86.

BEARD, G. J. A petition for rehearing in this case has been presented, in which it is insisted the court, in the opinion handed down, has changed the meaning of section 1, c. 81, p. 117, Acts 1889, invoked in the cause, by placing, as is done, in the excerpt from the act, a comma after the words "printed hand bills," when in the original there is no such mark of punctuation. It is conceded by counsel of the petitioner that, thus punctuated, the section "is subject to the interpretation that the advertisement may be made in either one of the two manners [modes?]; that is to say, by printed hand bills, or written or printed notices, posted on the door of the courthouse."

That it should be construed so as to give effect to every part of the section, and at the same time avoid absurd conditions, is certainly true. In the effort to do this, the question raised in the petition for rehearing is: Has the court kept itself within sound canons of interpretation? While the disjunctive conjunction "or" is sometimes used in a sentence to connect synonyms, yet it is ordinarily employed in stating alternative subjects and ideas. Illustrations of these several uses are to be found in the standard works of grammarians and lexicographers. For instance, in the phrase, "The Prime Minister, or head of the British Cabinet," it evidently introduces a synonym, while in the sentence, "He may study law, or medicine or divinity, or may go into trade," it as clearly marks alternative conditions; and the section of the act under consideration equally illustrates the two distinct uses to which the particle may be applied. But, whether used in one form or the other, the best authorities recognize the comma preceding the particle as proper, if not essential, to bring out the true meaning of the sentence.

Not only have grammarians and lexicographers defined the word "or" as ordinarily indicating an alternative, but the courts in many cases have adopted and applied this definition. Kuehner v. Freeport, 143 Ill. 92, 32 N. E. 372, 17 L. R. A. 774; Caster v. McClellan, 132 Iowa, 502, 109 N. W. 1020; Whiteside v. State, 4 Cold. 175; McBride v. McBride, 111 Tenn. 616, 69 S. W. 781.

It was by giving the particle "or" its ordinary, and, as we think, its obvious, meaning, and then punctuating the clause, as approved by the best authorities, that the interpretation was reached, the soundness of which is complained of in this petition. It was assumed that, in the preparation of the act, by inadvertence or clerical omission the section was left by the draftsman to read as it is found published.

It is insisted, however, reading the section thus construed, no provision is made for the length of time before the sale that printed hand bills announcing the same should be distributed. This is true; but, when the reclaiming seller is permitted to give notice in this form, the statute implies reasonable notice, and if he should undertake to make a mockery of this provision, by resorting to a trick or device which would be the equivalent of no notice, the courts, when applied to, would see that he, rather than the unfortunate purchaser, was the victim of the wrongdoing.

As is said in the opinion, in such case reasonable notice would be essential, and, while no fixed limitations can be given for this notice, it may, possibly, be properly inferable that the notice implied in the distribution of hand bills would be the same as where notice is given in the other mode provided in the section.

Upon re-examination of the question, we are satisfied with the conclusion heretofore announced, and it is therefore adhered to.

The petition for rehearing is dismissed.

DEADERICK v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Nov. 6, 1900.)

1. TRESPASS (§ 84*)—CUTTING TIMBER—DEFENSES—TITLE.

Shannon's Code, § 6496, declares a trespass on the lands of another by cutting down or in any manner destroying valuable timber thereon exceeding 50 cents in value, with a view to convert the same to the use of the taker, is a misdemeanor. Held, that such section was intended to protect actual possession of the land held under color of title from forcible invasion; and hence it was no defense that those who authorized defendant to cut the timber had the superior title to the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

2. MALICIOUS MISCHIEF (§ 1*)—OFFENSES—DEFACING BUILDING.

In a prosecution for injury to the property of another, under Shannon's Code, § 6496, subd. 1, making it a misdemeanor to wantonly injure or deface any building, or fixture attached thereto, etc., belonging to another person, possession only need be proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Mischief, Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

3. TRESPASS (§ 20*)—RIGHT OF ACTION—POSSESSION.

A party in possession of land may recover in an action for trespass thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. §§ 32-47; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

4. TRESPASS (§ 78*)—CUTTING TIMBER—POSSESSION.

Possession, by occupation or inclosure, of part of land covered by a corporation's title papers, constituted actual possession by construction of the entire premises within the boundaries described in the papers, within Shannon's Code, § 6496, subd. 7, making it a misdemeanor to trespass on the lands of another by cutting or destroying valuable timber.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. § 168; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Cocke County; G. McHenderson, Judge.

SHIELDS, J. The plaintiff in error was convicted of the offense of malicious mischief, committed in cutting and removing timber from the lands of the Stony Mountain Land Company, in Cocke county, Tenn., under section 4652, subsec. 7, of the Code (Shannon's Code, § 6496), declaring it to be a misdemeanor "to trespass upon the lands of another by cutting down or in any other manner destroying valuable timber thereon exceeding fifty cents in value with a view to convert the same to his own use, unless the offender be traveling or moving along any road and by accident or otherwise require the same for his own immediate use."

The defenses made in the trial court, and here relied upon, are that Brown and others had the superior title to the lands upon which the timber was cut, and that plaintiff in error was employed and authorized by them to cut and remove it, or, if plaintiff in error's employers did not have the superior title, the trespass was committed under color of title and a claim of right, and in the bona fide belief that they did have such title, and the right of possession.

The case was tried much like an action of ejectment. The state introduced the title papers of the Stony Mountain Land Company, deraigning title from the state of Tennessee. The defendant introduced the title papers of Brown and others, showing title from the state of North Carolina. The state also offered evidence of possession by the Stony Mountain Land Company, and its predecessors in title, for the purpose of perfecting its title under the statutes of limitations and raising presumption of a grant; while the defendant offered proof of the coverture of his employers during that period.

The lands claimed by the parties, the Stony Mountain Land Company and Brown and others, consist of a tract of 5,000 acres, uninclosed and in timber, with the exception of two or more inclosures containing 12 or more acres, of which the Stony Mountain Land Company and those under whom it holds have had the actual possession, claiming to the extent of the boundaries defined in its title papers, for some 15 or 20 years, and perhaps longer. Brown and others, the employers of the plaintiff in error, had never had any actual possession. They were advised, and believed, they had the superior title, and employed the plaintiff in error to cut timber upon the uninclosed land, which he did in good faith, believing that his employers had the right to authorize him to do so. He and his employers knew of the adverse possession, and the timber was cut, evidently, for the purpose of compelling action on to the charge of which he was convicted. Validity of title and good faith of the trespasser are not material inquiries in cases of this character.

The object of the statute, upon which plaintiff in error was convicted, is to protect actual possession of land held under color of title from forcible invasion, and to prevent breaches of peace, violence, and bloodshed, resulting from rival claimants of lands, attempting to take forcible possession, and to compel resort to the courts for determination of the validity of titles.

In Dotson v. State, 6 Cold. 545, it is said:

"This statute is not intended to constitute our criminal courts tribunals for the trial of ejectment suits at the expense of the state. It is not intended to settle the title to real estate, but is enacted in pursuance of the policy, apparent in our statutes of forcible entry and detainer and other statutes, to protect the actual possession of real estate against unlawful and forcible invasion, and to remove occasion for acts of violence and breach of peace.

"To support an indictment under the statute above recited, there must have been, by the express term of the statute, a trespass—such wrongful invasion of the possession of another as would enable the party in possession to maintain the action of trespass for the injury. The possession invaded must be the possession of some other person than the defendant."

In a prosecution for injury to the property of another, under subsection 1 of this statute, possession only need be proved. State v. Mathes, 3 Lea, 37; Malone v. State, 11 Lea, 703.

The party in actual possession can recover in an action for trespass to land. Large v. Dennis, 5 Sneed, 597; Allen v. McCorkle, 3 Head, 182; Bailey v. Massey, 2 Swan, 169.

The Stony Mountain Land Company was in actual possession of the land from which the timber was cut. Possession, by occupation or inclosure, of part of the land covered by its title papers, was actual possession, by construction, of the entire premises within the boundaries defined in those papers. Pickens v. Delozier, 2 Humph. 400; Mansfield v. Northcut, 112 Tenn. 536, 80 S. W. 437; Lieberman v. Clarke, 114 Tenn. 117, 85 S. W. 258, 69 L. R. A. 732.

This is the way, as a rule, actual possession is held of all timber lands in this state. It is virtual possession, and effective to give notice to all persons of the occupation and adverse claim of the party so holding. It is sufficient to put in operation the statutes of limitations, make a sale champertous, sustain an action of forcible entry and detainer against a trespasser, and replevin for timber cut and removed. Lieberman v. Clarke, supra; Mansfield v. Northcut, supra; Hebard v. Scott, 95 Tenn. 467, 32 S. W. 390; Green v. Cumberland Coal & Coke Co., 110 Tenn. 33, 72 S. W. 459.

Were the law as contended for plaintiff in error, all persons, in possession of lands under valid titles, could be compelled to resort to expensive litigation to establish their title at the instance of any trespasser, who could connect himself with one of the many duplicate grants which have unfortunately been issued, covering large bodies of land in all parts of the state held under older and superior titles. The statute justly protects them from burdens of this nature.

The plaintiff in error committed the trespass alleged against him with full knowledge of the actual adverse possession of the land. The case is clearly made out, and he was properly convicted.

The case of Dotson v. State, supra, is relied upon to support the contentions of the plaintiff in error. It is there said that title in the defendant, or color of title with the bona fide belief that it is his property, is a good defense in a prosecution under this statute. This, however, is in conflict with the construction given the statute in the previous part of the opinion, which we have quoted, and was only intended for the facts of that case. There it appears the prosecutor resided upon the land, having a part of it inclosed; but it does not appear that he had a paper title covering the uninclosed part upon which the timber was cut. The defendant also resided upon the land, having an inclosure, and claimed under a grant covering the place where he cut the timber. The parties were both in possession, provided the prosecutor had color of title extending his boundaries to the portion in dispute. Upon these facts, the defendant did not invade the possession of the prosecutor, and was not guilty.

This case, Dotson v. State, so far as it may be in conflict with the construction of the statute herein declared, is erroneous, and is overruled.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

STATE ex rel. WEBB v. PARKS.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Dec. 4, 1909.)

1. PARDON (§ 9*)—EFFECT—IMPEACHMENT—RESTORATION TO OFFICE.

Under Const. art. 3, § 6, providing that the Governor shall have power to grant pardons after conviction, except in cases of impeachment, a Governor's pardon of a justice of the peace, convicted of oppression in office, carrying with it removal from office, was ineffective to restore the office.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pardon, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 10*)—IMPEACHMENT—REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.

Const. art. 5, § 4, provides for the impeachment of certain state officers by the House of Representatives in a specified manner; and section 5 declares that justices of the peace and other inferior officers, not previously mentioned, for crime or misdemeanor in office, shall be liable to indictment in such court as the Legislature may direct, and on conviction shall be removed from office by the court as if impeached, and shall be subject to such other punishment as may be prescribed by law. Shannon's Code, § 6717, provides a punishment by fine or imprisonment for official oppression; and section 6721 declares that an officer convicted shall, in addition, be removed from his office, and will be forever disqualified to hold office. Held that, where a justice of the peace was indicted and convicted of oppression in office, the judgment, in so far as it deprived him of the office, was an impeachment, and was properly rendered as part of the same proceeding; it being unnecessary, to obtain the justice's removal, that the state, after his conviction, proceed against him by quo warranto, as authorized by sections 5165-5187.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

Appeal from Chancery Court, Hamilton County; T. M. McConnell, Chancellor.

Bill by the State, on the relation of J. P. Webb, against W. M. Parks. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the bill, relator appeals. Affirmed.

Vance & Carden, for appellant. Shepherd, Fleming & Shepherd, for appellee.

NEIL, J. The present bill was filed to remove the defendant from the office of justice of the peace, claimed by him, on the ground that he was an intruder without authority of law, and that the complainant was the real incumbent of the office. The bill was met by a demurrer, which was sustained by the chancellor. Thereupon an appeal was prayed and prosecuted to this court.

The facts stated in the bill are these:

That on the 2d day of August, 1908, the relator was elected a justice of the peace for the Sixth civil district of Hamilton county for the full term of six years, and was duly commissioned by the Governor, and entered upon the discharge of his duties; that at the January term, 1909, of the criminal court of Hamilton county he was indicted, jointly with Thomas Light, a deputy sheriff, and W. G. Sears, constable for the Sixth district, on the charge of official oppression, in four cases—each indictment containing the same statement of facts—under section 6717 of Shannon's Code, and that he was convicted in all four of the cases, and in each of them was entered a judgment as follows, viz.:

"Again came the Attorney General, and defendants in person, and the same sworn jury, to wit: * * * And they, having heard all the proof, arguments of counsel, and charge of the court, do upon their oaths say the defendants are guilty of oppression, as charged in the indictment, and fix their and, in default thereof, be confined in the workhouse of Hamilton county until same is worked out, as prescribed by law. Execution shall issue against defendants for costs. It is the further order, judgment, and decree of this court that the defendant J. P. Webb be removed from his office, to wit, justice of the peace for this county, and that defendant W. G. Sears be removed from his office, to wit, constable of Hamilton county, and that defendant Thomas Light be removed from the office of deputy sheriff of Hamilton county, and all of said named defendants are forever hereafter disqualified from holding office, under the laws and Constitution of the state of Tennessee."

It is further alleged in the bill that the election commissioners of Hamilton county, on the — day of May, 1909, called an election to choose relator's successor; that on the 5th day of May, 1909, after the election commissioners had called the election as aforesaid, but before it had been held, the Governor of the state pardoned the relator, and the said Light and Sears, of said offense of official oppression; that said pardon, after fully stating the Governor's reasons for granting it, contained the following language: "Therefore I, Malcolm R. Patterson, Governor as aforesaid, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested, do hereby relieve of the fines and pardon the said J. P. Webb, Thomas Light, and W. G. Sears of the said offense; and I do further authorize and direct that said judgment be rendered null and void and of no effect, except as to costs." It is further alleged that, immediately upon receipt of this pardon, relator served written notice upon the election commissioners that the pardon had been received, and that his office had not been legally vacated, and therefore no election for said office could be legally held; that this notice, however, was disregarded by the commissioners, and they proceeded to hold an election as called on the 8th day of May, 1909, which resulted in the election of W. M. Parks, who received a commission from the Governor, and at the date of the filing of the bill was, without authority of law, undertaking to perform the duties of the office.

The demurrer which was interposed by the defendant, Parks, raised the point that, under the facts stated, there was a vacancy in the office of justice of the peace for the Sixth district of Hamilton county, created by the judgment, and that the pardon of the Governor did not restore relator to his office, and that the pardon could not render "null and void and of no effect" the whole judgment.

We think the decree of the chancellor was correct.

The pardoning power in this state does not extend to the relief of defendants from judgment contained in article 3, § 6, of the Constitution. That section reads that the Governor "shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons, after conviction, except in cases of impeachment." That the judgment which deprived relator of his office was an impeachment proceeding, in so far as it referred to that subject, is apparent from article 5, § 5, of the Constitution. In order to properly understand this latter section, it should be construed in connection with sections 1, 2, 3, and 4. Section 1 lodges the power of impeachment in the House of Representatives. Sections 2 and 3 provide the method of trial. Section 4 mentions the officers who may be impeached. That section reads as follows:

"Sec. 4. The Governor, judges of the Supreme Court, judges of the inferior courts, chancellors, attorneys for the state, Treasurer, Comptroller, and Secretary of State, shall be liable to impeachment, whenever they may, in the opinion of the House of Representatives, commit any crime in their official capacity, which may require disqualification; but judgment shall only extend to removal from office, and disqualification to fill any office thereafter. The party shall, nevertheless, be liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law. The Legislature now has, and shall continue to have, power to relieve from the penalties imposed upon any persons disqualified from holding office by the judgment of the court of impeachment.

Section 5 reads:

"Sec. 5. Justices of the peace, and other inferior officers, not hereinbefore mentioned, for crime or misdemeanor in office, shall be liable to indictment in such court as the Legislature may direct; and upon conviction shall be removed from office by said court, as if found guilty on impeachment; and shall be subject to such other punishment as may be prescribed by law."

The latter section prescribes the mode of impeachment applicable to justices of the peace and to other officers therein named. Pursuant to this section the Legislature passed sections 6717 and 6721 of the Code, under which the judgment complained of was rendered against the relator. These sections read:

"Sec. 6717. If any person by color of his office, willfully and corruptly oppress any person under pretense of acting in his official capacity, he shall be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000.00, or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year."

"Sec. 6721. If any judicial, ministerial, or executive officer in this state is prosecuted for misdemeanor in office under the provisions of this Code, and duly convicted, he shall, in addition to the punishment prescribed for such offense, be removed from his office, and shall forever thereafter be disqualified from holding office, under the laws and Constitution of the state."

It was proper, therefore, that the judgment should be framed in the manner set out in the bill. It was clearly contemplated in section 5, art. 5, of the Constitution, that in the same proceeding in which the guilt of the accused should be ascertained he should be removed from office and disqualified from ever thereafter holding office. While it was contemplated that the officers mentioned in section 4, art. 5, should be impeached when necessary before the Legislature, and also indicted and punished in the criminal court, as to justices of the peace and other inferior officers, the two proceedings were united into one by section 5. This is the clear meaning of the provisions of the Constitution. The question has not previously been adjudicated in this state, but this construction is clearly implied in Carpenter v. State, 6 Baxt. 535, and State v. Casetty, 3 Tenn. Cas. 120. We are referred to Moore v. State, 9 Yerg. 353, as an adverse authority; but upon a careful examination of that case we do not see that it has any bearing upon the question before us.

It is insisted by relator's counsel that after the conviction of the relator, under section 6717, it was necessary, in order to remove him from office, that he should be proceeded against by a bill in the nature of a quo warranto under sections 5165 to 5187 of Shannon's Code. From what has been said, it is apparent that this is a mistaken view. Certainly there could be no need of any additional proceedings after the very ground of removal had been ascertained by proceedings under an indictment. Costs and time were avoided by a judgment in that case removing the officers. No good reason can be conceived for an additional proceeding. This was evidently the view of the framers of the Constitution, when section 5 of article 5 was drawn.

We have had submitted to us, by counsel for relator, a very learned and interesting argument upon the effect of pardons in general under the common law of England and of this country. We have examined this argument with care, but do not find it necessary to write at length upon the phase of the case covered by it, because, as already stated, the pardoning power in this state does not apply to impeachment proceedings at all. The disabilities so imposed can be relieved only by the Legislature, as shown by section 4, art. 5, which is construed with section 5. It is proper to remark, also, that in our opinion section 3655 and section 6066 do not apply to such proceedings.

And, even aside from the provisions of our Constitution, it appears from the weight of authority that a pardon cannot restore to a former incumbent an office which he has forfeited. Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 380, 18 L. Ed. 366; In re Spenser, 5 Sawy. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 13,234; Cook v. Chosen Freeholders, 26 N. J. Law, 326; same controversy, 27 N. J. Law, 637; Baum v. Clause, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 199; Roberts v. State, 30 App. Div. 106, 51 N. Y. Supp. 691; same case, 160 N. Y. 217, 54 N. E. 678; In re Attorney, 86 N. Y. 563; Com. v. Fugate, 2 Leigh (Va.) 724; Edwards v. Com., 78 Va. 39, 49 Am. Rep. 377; State v. Carson, 27 Ark. 469; Nelson v. Com., 128 Ky. 779, 109 S. W. 337, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 272. Jones v. Board of Registrars, 56 Miss. 766, 31 Am. Rep. 385, is cited as an authority to the contrary; but the opinion in that case, while stating very broadly the effect of a pardon, still recognizes the distinction above mentioned, to the effect that a pardon will not restore one to an office which he has forfeited. The proposition is fully supported in the common-law authorities referred to in Ex parte Garland, viz.: 4 Blackstone, Com. 402; 6 Bacon's Abr. tit. "Pardon"; Hawk. book 2, c. 37, §§ 34, 54. And see these authorities discussed in Re Spenser, supra.

It results that there is no error in the decree of the chancellor; and it must be affirmed, with costs.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Dec. 4, 1909.)

1. INJUNCTION (§ 80*)—OFFICERS (§ 82*)—JURISDICTION—RESTRAINING PUBLIC OFFICERS.

The chancery court has no power to enjoin election officers from issuing a certificate of election, or to restrain public officers from assuming their functions, even though it be alleged that there was fraud in the election sufficient to vitiate it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 151; Dec. Dig. § 80;* Officers, Cent. Dig. § 114; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

2. COURTS (§ 154*)—CIRCUIT COURT—JURISDICTION—CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Under the Code provision that the circuit court has jurisdiction in any case left unprovided for, that court has jurisdiction of the trial of a contest over the offices of mayor and alderman; no tribunal being provided for the induction of these officers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

3. ELECTIONS (§ 273*)—CONTEST—PARTIES.

The incumbent of an office, though not a candidate, may contest on the ground that the election was void, or a contest may be raised by the court itself, upon which is devolved the duty of inducing the officer; and, where the questions raised by the litigation necessitate going behind the returns, the case is an election contest, whether the judgment to be rendered under the pleadings be that one or the other of two contesting parties has been elected, or that there has been no legal election at all.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Knox County; Hu. L. McClung, Chancellor.

Bill by T. J. Adcock and others against castle, Luckey, Fowler & Andrews, and John W. Green, for appellants. Thomas L. Carty, for appellees.

NEIL, J. The bill in the present case was filed on June 7, 1909, in the chancery court of Knox county, by the board of mayor and aldermen of the city of Lonsdale, made such by the election held the first Thursday in June, 1907, for a term of two years, against the new board elected on the first Thursday in June, 1909. The old board was composed of T. J. Adcock, mayor, J. M. Wood, recorder, and Robert Snow, Sam Mllwee, Joe Ford, Sam De Armond, Sam Johnson, and F. E. Stanford, aldermen. The new board is composed of M. M. Copenhaver, mayor, W. B. Ailor, recorder, H. E. Chrlsenberry, W. H. Davis, C. L. Householder, J. A. Bean, S. G. Sentell, and C. O. Gentry, aldermen. It is alleged in the bill that various acts of intimidation were used against nonresident property holders, who had a right to vote under the charter of the city, whereby a sufficient number of them were restrained from voting to change the result of the election, and to render the election incurably uncertain, and hence that there was no free election, such as the law contemplates and provides. It is therefore further alleged that the election was void. It was alleged that on the face of the returns the defendants were elected, and that unless restrained the election commissioners would meet at the courthouse in Knoxville, on Monday, June 7, 1909, and canvass the returns and issue certificates of election to the defendants. An injunction was prayed and granted, restraining the election commissioners from canvassing the votes and from issuing certificates to the defendants, and also restraining the defendants from entering upon the discharge of their duties as mayor and aldermen. Stated briefly, this is a bill filed by the old board of mayor and aldermen, seeking to hold over and prevent the new board from assuming office and discharging the duties thereof, on the ground that the election was void by reason of frauds committed in the progress thereof, which made the result incurably uncertain.

Several grounds of demurrer were filed, but we need only state the first, which is that the chancery court has no jurisdiction of the controversy. The chancellor sustained this ground of demurrer, and dismissed the bill. Thereupon the complainants prosecuted an appeal to this court, and have here assigned errors.

The decree of the chancellor was correct, and must be affirmed. The chancery court has no power to enjoin election officers from issuing a certificate of election, or restraining public officers from assuming their func-

It is insisted in the brief of complainants' counsel that a distinction must be taken between the jurisdiction of the court and the propriety of applying a particular remedy. This is true; but the suggestion is not apt in the present case, because the very life of the bill before us is the injunction sought, by means of which the complainants seek to retain possession of the offices, after their time has expired, and prevent the defendants, who have a prima facie title, from assuming the duties of the office.

Aside, however, from the question of the remedy, we are of the opinion that the chancery court has no jurisdiction of the controversy. The facts stated make the case one of contested election pure and simple. No tribunal being in terms designated by statute for the trial of such cases as a contest over the offices of mayor and aldermen, and no tribunal being provided for the induction of these officers, it follows that the jurisdiction devolves upon the circuit court, under the section of the Code which provides, in substance, that the court has jurisdiction in any case left unprovided for. It was so held in Baker v. Mitchell, 105 Tenn. 610, 59 S. W. 137. See, also, Conner v. Conner, 8 Baxt. 11.

It is insisted in behalf of complainants that there can be no contest, except between persons who are candidates for the office. This is a mistaken view. It was held in Marshall v. Kerns, 2 Swan, 68, that the incumbent might object to the induction of the person holding the certificate of election, and contest the matter with him on the ground that the election was void, although such incumbent had not been a candidate for election. It was held in McCraw v. Haralson, 4 Cold. 34, that such a contest might be raised, indeed, by the court itself, upon which was devolved the duty of inducing the officer; in Lewis v. Watkins, 3 Lea, 174, 181, 182, that one who had been an opposing candidate, although he received less votes than his opponent, might maintain a contest with him, on the ground that the latter was disqualified to hold office, and hence insist that the election was void. It was held, in Maloney v. Collier, 112 Tenn. 78, 91-94, 83 S. W. 667, that it is settled law in this state that the validity of an election may be determined in a contested election case. The authorities above referred to, and others, are cited and discussed in that case. Our authorities do not warrant any such distinction as is attempted in the brief of complainants' counsel, to the effect that there must be opposing candidates involved in the litigation before there can be a contest, and that where there are not such opposing candidates the jurisdiction exists in the chancery court to declare the election void on the ground of fraud. Our authorities distinctly hold that, where the questions raised by the litigation necessitate going behind the returns, the case presented is an election contest, whether the judgment to be rendered under the pleadings be that one or the other of two contesting parties has been elected, or that there has been no legal election at all. Authorities supra, and State ex rel. v. Gossett, 9 Lea, 644.

We are referred by counsel to certain cases as justifying the bill, viz.: Pucket v. Bean, 11 Heisk. 600, and Lawrence v. Ingersoll, 88 Tenn. 52, 12 S. W. 422, 6 L. R. A. 308, 17 Am. St. Rep. 870 (mandamus cases); Morris v. City of Nashville, 6 Lea, 337 (a case involving the annexation of a new territory to a city); Winston v. Railroad Co., 1 Baxt. 69, and Catlett v. Railroad, 120 Tenn. 702, 112 S. W. 559 (cases involving county subscriptions to railroads); and Lindsay v. Allen, 112 Tenn. 659, 82 S. W. 171 (involving the removal of a county seat). In Lindsay v. Allen the jurisdiction of the chancery court was objected to on the ground that it was a matter involving a contested election. The court said, upon that subject, that the case fell within the principle of Winston v. Tennessee & Pacific R. Co., supra; that the occasion of the interference of the court in that case was to declare void the subscription of a county to a railroad enterprise, because a constitutional prerequisite, the consent of the people by the required majority, had not been obtained, while in the case then before the court the jurisdiction was invoked on the same ground to prevent the removal of a county seat; that the underlying principle was the same in such case, although the special occasion that called it into being was different; that such controversies do not fall under the classification of contested election cases, but, on the contrary, under the class of cases wherein the court restrains public officers from the exercise of unconstitutional powers. 112 Tenn. 659, 660, 661, 82 S. W. 171.

It is also said in Winston v. Railroad Co. that the means by which the will of the people is ascertained and their consent obtained to the making of a contract is merely by accommodation called an "election." This is also true as to cases in which it is sought to ascertain the same thing in respect of a proposition to remove a county seat. When a question is subsequently raised as to whether the people really consented to the proposed action, it is necessary that the court having jurisdiction of the matter should investigate the operation of the means adopted in order to learn whether the consent was truly obtained. The court of chancery is, of course, the proper tribual to enjoin the acts of officers purporting to obey an alleged direction of the people, when it is charged that there was, in fact, no such direction, because of fraud practiced upon the people or the violation of some constitutional inhibition. The same is true when the question arises as to whether the people have truly directed the removal of a county seat from one part of a county to another. As to mandamus cases, when it is sought to compel an officer to do some particular thing—that is, to recognize some other person as an officer, or to obey some mandate supposed to be the mandate of the people rendered in the form of an election—it necessarily results that the officer or person so sought to be coerced must have the right to question whether the person put forward as an officer to be received is in fact an officer, or whether the assumed direction is a real direction of the people.

Affirm the decree, with costs.

SNYDER v. SUPREME RULER OF FRATERNAL MYSTIC CIRCLE.

(Supreme Court of Tennessee. Dec. 4, 1909.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 771*)—FRATERNAL BENEFIT INSURANCE — BENEFICIARIES — DIVORCE — WAIVER.

The charter of a fraternal order declared that its object was to unite fraternally persons of proper age for beneficial purposes, to provide for the payment to its members, or their families, widows, or other dependents, benefits in case of death, but did not affirmatively provide that the benefit fund should be appropriated to none others than those enumerated, and made no provision for the forfeiture of a certificate payable to the wife of a member on the wife obtaining a divorce. The order issued a certificate to a member for the benefit of his wife, who subsequently obtained a divorce, and who was thereafter induced by the highest officer of the order to continue the payment of dues with knowledge of the facts. Held, that the wife was entitled to recover on the certificate on the death of the member.

2. INSURANCE (§ 771*)—FRATERNAL BENEFIT INSURANCE — BENEFICIARIES — BY-LAWS — WAIVER.

A fraternal order issued a certificate to a member for the benefit of his wife, who obtained a divorce, and who thereafter informed the highest officer of the order of the fact, and he induced her to continue to pay dues, which she did. Held, that receipt of dues thereafter amounted to a waiver of a by-law providing that where the designated beneficiary is a wife, and she obtains a divorce, the benefit shall be payable to others.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Hamilton County; T. M. McConnell, Chancellor.

Suit by Mrs. Annie Snyder against the Supreme Ruler of the Fraternal Mystic Circle. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

D. L. Snodgrass and T. C. Latimore, for appellant. Pritchard & Sizer, for appellee.

BEARD, C. J. The defendant is a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania, with its principal office in the city of Philadelphia, in that state, and with subordinate lodges, or agencies, located in different states of the Union. The corporation is social and benevolent in character; its object, as indicated in its charter, being "to unite fraternally white persons of proper age and good social and moral character * * * for beneficial and protective purposes, collecting dues and assessments from its members, to provide for the payment to its members, or their families, widows, heirs, blood relatives, or other dependents, benefits in case of sickness, disability, or death of its members, in compliance with its constitution, laws, and regulations."

On the 23d of November, 1887, the corporation issued to Charles C. Snyder, a resident of Chattanooga, and a member of one of its lodges, a benefit fund certificate, or policy, by which it bound itself, on certain conditions therein set forth, at the death of the assured, upon the proof thereof, to pay to the present complainant, at that time and for many years thereafter his wife, or, in case of her death prior thereto, to his children, a sum not exceeding $3,000.

ant to the defendant, and payment of the certificate was demanded by her. This demand being refused, the present bill was filed.

The defenses to this claim, set up in the answer, are:

First. That it had been determined by the Supreme Medical Examiner of the defendant corporation, whose determination of the question, under the laws of the association, was final, that "the health of the assured had become impaired and his death was caused directly or indirectly by the use of narcotics," and the assured had stipulated in the application, on the faith of which the certificate was issued, that in such case the defendant should "not be responsible under the contract."

Second. That the complainant had been divorced from the assured prior to his death, and by the express terms "of the constitution and laws of the order" was ipso facto excluded from all further interest in this certificate.

The record shows that, many years after the issuance of the certificate in question, the complainant obtained a divorce from the assured, and was given the custody and control of the children born of their marriage, and afterwards, to wit, on the 25th of June, 1904, that she wrote defendant a letter, in which she advised defendant of this divorce, and that for 10 years prior thereto she had paid the assessments on this certificate, and making inquiry as to whom the money provided for therein, in the event the assessments were kept up, would be paid on the death of the assured. To this letter, under date of June 28, 1904, F. H. Duckwitt, the Supreme Mystic Ruler—the highest officer of the association, and in charge of its affairs as such—made a reply to the complainant, in which he said, in substance, that under the laws of the order Charles C. Snyder, being a member, had "the absolute right" to change the beneficiary, within certain limitations; that "as the certificate now stands" it would be payable, on his death, to the complainant, "provided, of course, that the assessments were paid up," and in case of complainant's death "to his children." This letter concludes with the following paragraph: "I assume, from what you write, that you are in possession of this certificate. If so, it might be difficult for him to secure a new certificate, unless he should take the position that the old certificate was lost, and he would make affidavit to that effect, which, under our law, would entitle him to a new certificate."

To this letter the complainant replied, under date of August 18, 1904. In this reply fore you take any action in the matter. * * *

In response to this letter the Supreme Mystic Ruler wrote complainant that he would file her letter with the petition for membership, in order that the clerks of the association might be advised of her request "to be notified of any application for change of beneficiary."

Following this correspondence, and relying on the statements of the chief officer of the corporation as to her rights in the premises, complainant, as shown by her, with much sacrifice, continued to pay all assessments, or dues, on this certificate up to the death of her former husband, on the 1st of May, 1908.

As has been stated, proofs of loss were promptly submitted by the complainant soon thereafter. In these, in answer to the question as to the cause and manner of his death, she stated it was due to suicide by "inhalation of illuminating gas." In response to a request to state the habits of the deceased "with reference to the use of spirituous or fermented liquors," she replied, "He did drink prior to leaving Chattanooga," and in answer to the question, "Did the deceased use morphine, opium, chloral, or other drugs or narcotics?" she said, "I think he used morphine."

On receipt of these proofs the Supreme Recorder of the defendant corporation wrote complainant, informing her that her claim was "not on its face a valid one," and that in accordance with the constitution and laws of the order an opportunity was given her to appear before the Supreme Executive Committee and present such evidence as she might have to establish its validity. In this letter there was set out a copy of resolutions passed by that committee, in which were recited provisions of the laws of the order to the effect that no benefit should be paid on account of the death of any member when his health had become impaired, or death had resulted, directly or indirectly, from the use of opiates, or alcoholic, vinous, or malt liquors, or when, at the time of his death, the member shall be addicted to the excessive use of alcoholic, vinous, or malt liquor. It was then stated in one of the resolutions that "from the proofs of death presented it appears that Charles C. Snyder was at the time of his death addicted to the excessive use of narcotics, or alcoholic, vinous, or malt liquors, on which account the claim presented by his beneficiary should not be approved." The resolutions then provided that the complainant "shall appear in person, or by attorney, or both, before the Supreme Executive Committee at the office of the defendant in Philadelphia, Pa., on Friday, July 17, 1908, * * * and offer liquor, or if he was accustomed to use of narcotics, she did not know it, and did not intend so to state in the proofs of death; that Snyder had been away from Chattanooga for a number of years, and she had no personal knowledge of his personal habits, but when she saw him last he showed no evidence that he used narcotics, or that his health had become impaired by the use of intoxicating liquors. She stated, further, that it was impossible for her to appear in Philadelphia, either in person or by attorney, on July 17th, but that she would send such statements as she could before that date, and requested that a copy of the proofs she had furnished be sent her.

In answer to this letter the Supreme Mystic Ruler wrote complainant: "We are unable to furnish you a copy of the proofs of death, as they are on file with the Supreme Medical Director, at Columbus." He stated that: "Upon investigation we found that Mr. Snyder was a morphine and cocaine fiend, and that after his death many vials, labeled 'Cocaine,' 'Morphine,' and 'Chloroform,' were found in his rooms. We also ascertain that he used alcoholic liquors to excess, and that he had been a heavy drinker for more than 15 years before he went to Brooklyn, N. Y. Further, that he was again married in Brooklyn, in July, 1904, and that the widow, his last wife, is living." He then calls complainant's attention to the agreements in the "Application for Beneficial Membership" made by Snyder, to the effect that "if his health should become impaired, or if he should die from the excessive use of" liquors, narcotics, etc., the defendant would not be liable on the certificate, and stated that complainant might submit such proofs as she was able to secure tending to establish the justness of her claim, by affidavits or other documentary evidence, and suggested that she also furnish a certified copy of her decree of divorce from Charles C. Snyder. In conclusion, the letter states that "any proof that you may submit will receive careful consideration by the Supreme Executive Committee."

Soon after this, and in obedience to the suggestion made, the complainant secured and sent to the defendant, at its office in Philadelphia, the affidavits of 21 different persons, who claimed to have known the deceased intimately during a portion of, or all, the years that he lived in Brooklyn, and who stated that during their acquaintance with him his habits were temperate in the use of intoxicating liquors, and that from their associations with him and to the best of their knowledge he did not use narcotics. In addition, she submitted her own affidavit, in which, among other things, she states that she had not seen or talked with Snyder, or had any correspondence with him, from the time she obtained her divorce, in June, 1901, up to the date of his death, in May, 1908, and that she knew nothing about his habits during that period; that he never drank nor used narcotics to such an extent as to impair his health during the time she knew him, and if he used either after the separation she did not know it; and that she did not intend, by anything she said in the proofs of loss, to indicate that she knew what his habits were. She also set out in detail the information that she had as to the circumstances attending his death, from which she drew the conclusion, as she says, that the assured committed suicide because of his financial troubles and disappointments over the failure of his eldest son to go to New York and live with him.

On August 10, 1908, the Supreme Recorder wrote complainant that her claim "as the alleged beneficiary" under the certificate in question had been rejected by the Supreme Executive Committee "as not being a valid one under the constitution and laws of the order and contract of membership"; and on the day following the general counsel wrote complainant at length, explaining the action which had been taken. He stated that the Supreme Executive Committee, "after careful consideration of all the proofs presented, decided that the defendant was not liable on the certificate," for the reason "that said member's [Charles C. Snyder's] death was due solely and wholly to the excessive use of morphine and other opiates." He then referred to the correspondence which had taken place between himself as Supreme Mystic Ruler and complainant, in June, 1904, already referred to, and stated, in substance, that under the laws of the order no divorced wife could be a beneficiary, and that, therefore, she could not be a beneficiary under the certificate in question, even if the claim had been a valid one.

Leaving out of view, for the time being, other matters for consideration, the first question presented is: Is the complainant, as the divorced wife of Charles C. Snyder, entitled to recover on this certificate? It is insisted by the defendant that she is not; and to sustain this insistence the charter, the constitution, and by-laws of the order, and certain authorities, are invoked.

That the complainant was rightfully a beneficiary at the time of the issuance of this certificate, and continued to be such at the date of her divorce, is beyond question. After the divorce was obtained, the beneficiary was not changed by the assured, as he had the right to do under the laws of the order, and the defendant corporation continued the certificate in her name, and with the full knowledge of the divorce she was encouraged by its chief executive officer to believe that, in the event of the death of the assured without change, if dues and assessments were paid by her, she would be entitled to receive the money provided for in the certificate upon proper proofs of loss. Accepting the assurance of the supreme officer of the corporation to be made in good faith, she continued to pay these dues and assessments up to the death of Charles C. Snyder. Certainly, on these facts, there is a strong equity in her favor, which the defendant should not be permitted to repel, unless it can interpose some legal objection which a court is without power to disregard.

It will be observed, in reading that portion of the charter which affects this question, hereinbefore set out, that only in general terms is the "object" of the corporation set out; that is, the collection of dues and assessments "from its members to provide for the payment due its members, or their families, widows, heirs, or other dependents, benefits," in case of "sickness, disability, or death."

It may be conceded that, if the charter had in express terms restricted the application of the benefit fund to the class named, or, in other words, had affirmatively provided that it should be appropriated to none others, then it might be argued that payment to complainant upon her personal claim as the divorced wife of the assured could not be enforced. In such a case we can well understand that a recognition of the claim of the divorced wife by the superior officer of the order, followed by the receipt of assessments by it, would not avail to repel the defense of ultra vires. The authorities largely relied upon by the defendant corporation announce and enforce this principle.

But there are no restrictive words in this charter. At the time of the issuance of the certificate to Charles C. Snyder the complainant was his wife, and as such had an insurable interest in his life. The defendant issued the certificate, payable to her as such wife, as unquestionably it had the power to do. Its charter made no provision for a forfeiture of her right as beneficiary in the event of her divorce from the assured. No demand was made by the defendant for a surrender of this certificate on account of the changed relations of the beneficiary to the assured, and no alteration was made in it, and no intimation ever given to her that she had, after her divorce, no claim on the order. To the contrary, in recognition of an existing interest, with full knowledge that she no longer sustained the relation of wife, its Supreme Mystic Ruler induced her to continue the payment of dues and assessments on this certificate, at the expense of much personal sacrifice, and the defendant received and appropriated the sums so paid for a term of years, and until the death of the assured. Certainly, we repeat, if there is any sound ground for an equitable estoppel upon which this claim can be rested, defendant, that in the face of even such general terms, lacking words of limitation or description, as are to be found in this charter, it would be an unauthorized diversion of a trust fund to award the money, represented by this certificate, to the complainant. The courts in which this class of cases are found have adopted a rigid rule of construction. 1 Bacon on Benefit Societies, §§ 243-245. On the other hand, other courts have adopted a "more liberal view," and, as we think, altogether a more reasonable one, and with these this court, as is said in Manley v. Manley, 107 Tenn. 191, 64 S. W. 8, has ranged itself.

That case involved a controversy between the surviving mother of a deceased member of an order, known as the "Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen," and his widow and children, as to a fund represented by a certificate issued to the member and payable to his mother. It was there insisted by the widow, for herself and children, that the fund from which the claim in question was paid was "established to provide substantial relief to members and their families, in the event of death or total disability," and that the mother of the deceased was not within the classes provided for. The provision just quoted constitutes a part of section 47 of the constitution of that order.

In reply to this insistence it was said by the court: "It will be observed that there are no restrictive words in section 47. The terms used are general, and declare the purpose for which this beneficiary department is established, without fixing or undertaking to fix beyond recall a class to which, in case of death of a member, the money provided for must of necessity go. While the clear implication is that the fund raised is for the "substantial relief of members and their families, in the event of death or total disability," yet there are no words depriving the member of the right to designate any member of his family he may see proper as a beneficiary, or which gives one member of his family a fixed right superior to that of another." It was held that the mother was entitled to the benefit of that fund.

Among the cases referred to as supporting the conclusion of the court is that of Maneely v. Knights of Birmingham, 115 Pa. 306, 9 Atl. 41, in which the same liberal construction was given to a charter clause of one of these beneficial associations, which stated that the purpose of the corporation was the maintenance of a society to benefit "the widows and orphans of deceased members." A person other than a widow or orphan of a deceased member, to whom a certificate has been issued, when demanding payment, was met by a defense that the contract was ultra vires, and it was so held the general purpose of the corporation is there stated, * * * It must be observed that this is only the statement of a general purpose. * * * There is no prohibitory or restrictive language excluding from the powers of the corporation the right to contract specially with the member for the payment of benefits to other persons than his widow or orphans." Supporting this view are to be found many cases. Among these may be cited Lane v. Lane, 99 Tenn. 639, 42 S. W. 1058; Alfson v. Crouch, 115 Tenn. 352, 89 S. W. 329; White v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen (1904) 124 Iowa, 293, 99 N. W. 1071, 66 L. R. A. 164, 104 Am. St. Rep. 323; Sheehan v. Journeymen, 142 Cal. 489, 76 Pac. 238; Benefit Society v. Blue, 120 Ill. 121, 11 N. E. 331, 60 Am. Rep. 558; Linssey v. Western Mutual Aid Society, 84 Iowa, 734, 50 N. W. 29; Story v. Williamsburg, etc., Mutual Benefit Assn., 95 N. Y. 474.

It is urged, however, that one of the laws adopted by the defendant, and in existence at the time of the issuance of the certificate to C. S. Snyder, provided that "if at the time of the death of a member, who has designated as his beneficiary a person of class second [in the present case the wife], the dependency required by the laws of the order shall have ceased, * * * or if the designated beneficiary is a husband or wife, and they should be divorced upon the application of either party, * * * then the benefits shall be payable to person, or persons, mentioned in class first (section 11, law 1), if living, * * *" and that this provision necessarily defeats the claim of complainant. We think the answer to this contention is that the order which made this law could waive it, and that by the receipt of assessments and dues by the defendant after the divorce, and with full knowledge of that fact, it was waived. It is true that Mr. Duckwitch, the Supreme Mystic Ruler, states that in a moment of forgetfulness as to this provision he wrote the letter to the complainant of date June, 1904, hereinbefore referred to. We grant that he was not able, by virtue of his position as chief executive of this order, either by direction or indirection, to set aside or suspend the operation of one of its laws. But this is not the point. His knowledge of the divorce secured by the complainant was that of the association, and its receipt of assessments and dues thereafter constituted the waiver in law insisted upon.

There is another ground, however, which we regard as conclusive on this point as against the defendant. It will be seen, from the statement hereinbefore made, that the representatives of the order did not decline to pay this claim because of the divorce of the complainant from Chas. C. Snyder, the assured, but on the other and distinct ground that his "death was due solely and wholly to the excessive use of narcotics, alcoholic, vinous, and malt liquors, and the excessive use of morphine and other opiates." Having taken this ground with knowledge of this provision in its laws, and of the fact of the divorce, it is now estopped to assert this latter fact as being a forfeiture of complainant's interest in this certificate. 3 Cooley's Insurance Briefs, p. 2680; Insurance Company v. Thornton, 97 Tenn. 1, 40 S. W. 136; Insurance Co. v. Hancock, 106 Tenn. 513, 62 S. W. 145, 52 L. R. A. 665; Smith v. German Insurance Company, 107 Mich. 270, 65 N. W. 236, 30 L. R. A. 368; McCormick v. Insurance Co. 163 Pa. 184, 29 Atl. 747.

This is but the application to insurance cases of the well-established rule "that, when a party gives a reason for his conduct and decision touching anything involved in the controversy, he is estopped, after litigation is begun, from changing his ground, and putting his conduct on another and different consideration." Ault v. Dustin, 100 Tenn. 366, 45 S. W. 981; Railway Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258, 24 L. Ed. 693.

This rule equally disposes of the contention that the determination of the medical director of the defendant against this claim was conclusive on the complainant, and also as to the effect under the by-laws of the failure of the complainant to appeal from the decision of the Executive Committee to the General Counsel.

Independent, however, of the views above expressed, we think that the present suit could be maintained by the complainant in her own name, having the legal title by virtue of this certificate in question to the fund provided for in it, and that, under section 14, her recovery would inure to the benefit of her children. It is not necessary, however, in order to save this claim in favor of complainant, that this ground should be taken, as we are satisfied that the views already presented are sound, and that she is entitled in her own right to this recovery.

This leaves open only the question as to whether the death of the assured was due to the excessive use of narcotics, and of vinous and malt liquors. That his death was the result of suicide, produced by the inhalation of illuminating gas, is beyond controversy. It is not insisted, however, that the death thus caused was within the inhibition of the policy. The laws of the order prevented the interposition of the defense of suicide, where a member had continued in good standing for a period of ten years or more, as was the case of the deceased.

An examination of the record shows that the overwhelming weight of the testimony, coming from witnesses who knew the deceased intimately for 15 or 20 years, and some of them up to the time of his death, is that he was a moderate drinker, and was not addicted to the use of narcotics in any form. His death, on this record, can be attributed to the fact that the deceased had become desperate from financial straits, and on account of his conduct, whatever it may have been, which had separated from him the present complainant and their four children, and the consciousness of the utter waste of what might otherwise have been, possibly, a brilliant life. The statement of the complainant, in the proofs of loss, with regard to his drinking and to the use of morphine, were honestly made by her. She had not seen him for about 14 years before the making of these proofs. While they lived together as man and wife, as is shown, he did drink moderately, and, knowing this, she answered, as to the habits of the deceased as to the use of spirituous or fermented liquors, that "he did drink prior to leaving Chattanooga." In response to the question as to whether he used morphine, etc., she made reply, as has been seen, "I think he used morphine." This last answer is explained by her in an affidavit submitted to the defendant, when seeking a settlement of her claim, and before the institution of the present suit, as well as in her deposition, by the statement that prior to their separation, while in the city of Chicago, upon one occasion she found a white substance in the room occupied by herself and her then husband, and, apprehensive that it might be a narcotic, she sent it by one of their children to a druggist for his opinion, and the child came back and reported that it was morphine, and that this was the incident that she had in her mind at the time she made this particular answer. She stated, further, that she knew nothing since their separation of the habits of the deceased.

We regard this explanation as entirely satisfactory, and consistent with good faith in pressing the present claim.

The chancellor not only gave the complainant a decree for the amount of the certificate and interest, but allowed her, in addition thereto, 25 per cent. thereon, under chapter 141, p. 248, Acts of 1901. It is insisted that this act, in imposing this additional liability on the defendant, is void, in that it impaired the obligation of the contract in question. This question has been presented and determined against this insistence in both published and unpublished opinions. We are entirely satisfied with the holding heretofore made. In all respects the decree of the chancellor is affirmed.

No particular acts are necessary in order that adverse possession may be actual; any visible or notorious acts clearly showing an intention to claim by adverse possession being sufficient.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 30*)—NOTORIETY—SUFFICIENCY.

Defendant, a nonresident, agreed to allow certain persons to fence the land in controversy, and graze their cattle thereon, they to look after the land for him. They inclosed it with a wire fence, and maintained it for the statutory period, except when it was occasionally broken by high water. No part of the land was cleared, and no buildings were erected thereon. Held, that defendant's possession was sufficiently notorious to be adverse.

Appeal from White Chancery Court; John E. Martineau, Chancellor.

Action by A. C. McComb against G. R. Saxe. From a decree for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. Brundidge, Jr., and Harry Weelly, for appellant. J. H. Harrod, for appellee.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. Appellant, A. C. McComb, instituted this action in the chancery court of White county against appellee, G. R. Saxe, to quiet his title to a tract of land containing 320 acres. He deraigned title from the government, and alleged that appellee was claiming title under a purchase from the administrator of the estate of one Pickett, who was one of the owners of the land in appellant's chain of title, and who conveyed the same during his lifetime to appellant's grantor. Appellee answered, claiming title to the land by adverse possession under color of title for more than seven years prior to the commencement of the action. The chancellor found from the testimony that appellee had held actual, open, and notorious possession of the land for more than seven years under color of title, and sustained his plea of the statute of limitations. Decree was rendered accordingly against appellant, and he appealed to this court.

There is practically no conflict in the testimony. The lands are wild and unculti-agreed with certain persons in White county engaged in the stock business, whereby he agreed to allow said parties to inclose the lands in controversy with a fence so that it could be used for grazing stock, and on condition that they would look after the lands for appellee and preserve the timber. They were to build the fence at their own expense. These parties inclosed the land with a wire fence stretched partly on trees and partly on posts set in the ground. It was constructed of from one to three strands of wire. The lands were used as pasture lands, and the fence has thus been maintained continuously from that time to the present, except that occasionally the fence would be broken in the spring of the year in times of high water, but would be immediately repaired as soon as the water went off, in order to hold the live stock. No part of the land was ever cleared, and no building of any kind was ever placed thereon. It is insisted that these acts were not of sufficient notoriety to give title by limitation. But we do not agree with this contention. The correct rule on this subject is stated as follows: "No particular act or series of acts are necessary to be done on the land in order that the possession may be actual. Any visible or notorious acts which clearly evidence an intention to claim ownership and possession will be sufficient to establish a claim of adverse possession." Tiedeman on Real Property (3d Ed.) § 495. It is not essential that there shall be buildings on the lands in order to claim actual adverse possession, nor that any part thereof shall be in cultivation. It is sufficient if the claimant notoriously occupies a visible relation to the land which is sufficient to put the true owner on notice that his rights are invaded. In other words, the claimant must exercise such acts of ownership and occupancy as are sufficient to "hoist his flag" over the lands, so that all may observe it. And he must continue those acts without a break, so as to keep the flag flying. In Carpenter v. Smith, 76 Ark. 447, 88 S. W. 976, we held that where a party fenced a portion of a tract of land with a three-wire fence for the purpose of penning cattle thereon at certain seasons of the year, and also for the purpose of preserving it for hay cutting, these were sufficient acts of adverse possession, which, continued during the statutory period, gave title by limitation. The occasional damage done to the fence in times of high water, where the same was repaired, was not sufficient to break the continuity of possession. Robinson v. Nordman, 75 Ark. 593, 88 S. W. 592. There is no evidence that the actual possession acquired in the manner indicated above was ever abandoned.

The decree of the chancellor is fully sustained by the evidence, and the same is therefore affirmed.

St. U. S. § 5219 (U. S. Comp. Appeal from Circuit Court, Independence County; Frederick D. Fulkerson, Judge.

Proceedings by the First National Bank of Batesville against the Board of Equalization of Independence County, to obtain a reduction of an assessment for taxation. From a judgment of the circuit court sustaining the action of the Board of Equalization rendered on appeal from a judgment of the county court sustaining such action, the bank appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest Neill and McCaleb & Reeder, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., Sam M. Casey, and Morris Cohn, for appellee.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. Appellant, a national banking corporation domiciled and doing business at Batesville, Ark., listed with the tax assessor the amount of its capital stock and undivided profits, deducting therefrom the amount of capital stock invested in real estate and in bonds of the United States. The county board of equalization struck out the deduction for said investment in bonds, and on successive appeals to the county and circuit courts the action of the board was sustained. The bank appealed to this court.

The question at issue on this appeal is whether, under the statutes of this state and the federal statutes, the capital stock of a national bank, invested in bonds of the United States, can be included in assessments for taxation. This question involves primarily a construction of our own statutes—whether they authorize an assessment against shares of stock in banks or against the capital stock of the bank itself, or against both. Let it be understood in the beginning that a state cannot levy a tax upon bonds of the United States, for such property is not subject to taxation. Neither can the state levy a tax upon the capital and assets of a national bank. This, too, is exempt from state taxation. The limit of the taxing power of a state with respect to a national bank is as to the real estate owned by the institution and the shares of stock therein. Rev. St. U. S. §§ 5214, 5219 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 3500, 3502).

Section 5214 declares that, in lieu of all existing taxation, a national bank shall semi-annually pay to the Treasurer of the United States one-half of 1 per centum upon the average amount of its notes in circulation, one-fourth of 1 per centum upon the average amount of deposits, and one-fourth of 1 per centum upon the average amount of its capital stock not invested in United States bonds. Section 5219 reads as follows: "Nothing herein shall prevent all the shares state within which the association is located; but the Legislature of each state may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within the state, subject only to the two restrictions, that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such state, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by nonresidents of any state shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not elsewhere. Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of associations from either state, county or municipal taxes, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed." The latter section is declared to be the limit of the state's power to tax national banks. "This section, then, of the Revised Statutes is the measure of the power of a state to tax national banks, their property, or their franchises. By its unambiguous provisions the power is confined to a taxation of the shares of stock in the names of the shareholders, and to an assessment of the real estate of the bank. Any tax, therefore, which is in excess of, and not in conformity to, these requirements is void." Owensboro Nat. Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 664, 19 Sup. Ct. 537, 43 L. Ed. 850; Louisville Third Nat. Bank v. Stone, 174 U. S. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. 759, 43 L. Ed. 1035; Rosenblatt v. Johnston, 104 U. S. 462, 26 L. Ed. 832.

The capital stock of a national bank is exempt from state taxation. So are United States bonds exempt from state taxation. But a state may tax shares of stock in a national bank at their actual value, without regard to the fact that a part or the whole of the capital stock of the bank may be invested in nontaxable bonds and securities; for taxation of the shares of stock is not taxation either of the capital stock of the bank nor of the nontaxable bonds in which the same may be invested. Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. 573, 18 L. Ed. 229; People v. Tax Commissioners, 4 Wall. 244, 18 L. Ed. 344; National Bank v. Commonwealth, 9 Wall. 353, 19 L. Ed. 701; Hepburn v. School Directors, 23 Wall. 480, 23 L. Ed. 112; Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 10 Sup. Ct. 324, 33 L. Ed. 772; Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 134, 16 Sup. Ct. 456, 40 L. Ed. 645; First Nat. Bank v. Chehalls County, 166 U. S. 440, 17 Sup. Ct. 629, 41 L. Ed. 1069; Merchants', etc., Bank v. Pennsylvania, 167 U. S. 461, 17 Sup. Ct. 829, 42 L. Ed. 236.

The question which arises, then, is whether the assessment in this state is for the purpose of taxing the capital stock of the bank, or for the purpose of taxing the shares stock. A section of the revenue act provides that "no person shall be required to include in his statement, as a part of the personal property, moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies or otherwise which he is required to list, any share or portion of the capital stock or property of any company or corporation which is required to list or return its capital and property for taxation in this state." Section 6902, Kirby's Dig.; Dallas County v. Banks, 87 Ark. 484, 113 S. W. 37.

The other provisions of our revenue laws relating especially to banking concerns form a part of the general revenue act of 1883 (Acts 1883, p. 199), and, as amended by subsequent acts, read as follows:

"Sec. 29. Every corporation, company, individual person or association of persons, whether authorized by law to issue notes for circulation or not, that shall keep an office, counting house, or other place for the transaction of business in this state, and shall discount, buy or sell exchange notes, bonds, stocks, certificates of public debt, or other evidences of debt, claims or demands with a view to profit, shall be deemed a bank within the meaning of this act.

"Sec. 30. Every bank shall annually on the first Monday in July in each year make out and deliver to the assessor a correct statement attested by the oath of the president and cashier of such bank, or if there be no president or cashier then by the oath of the principal manager and principal accountant of such bank, setting forth: First. The amount of capital, whether divided into shares or not, actually paid in or secured to be paid by note or otherwise, or in any manner procured or furnished, to be employed in its banking business. Second. The amount of undivided profits arising from such business belonging to the bank, whether in its possession or subject to its control, or loaned or otherwise invested for its benefit. Third. The value of moneys, credits or other personal property converted into bonds or other securities of the United States, or of this state, not taxed in the year immediately preceding the first Monday in June of the year in which the assessment is made, and which said bonds or securities on said first Monday in June were in the possession or control of such bank. Fourth. The amount loaned to or deposited with such bank for a term certain, or which by agreement or understanding between the parties is not to be withdrawn on demand, excepting the amount which may have been deposited with any bank established as a clearing house, for the redemption of the notes of banks making such deposits, and on which no interest is charged or received by the bank making such deposit. Which several amounts shall truly day in June, and shall be added together, and the gross sum so produced shall be deemed the amount of property employed in banking, for the then current year, by such bank. The shares of persons in banks taxable by law, that the holders or owners thereof are not required to list in person by the provisions of this act, shall be listed by the president or principal accounting officer or agent thereof, showing the name or names of the person owning or holding the same. The taxes assessed upon the shares of stock thus listed shall be paid by the corporation, or company respectively, and they may recover from the owner or owners of such shares the amount of taxes to be paid by them, or deduct the same from the dividend accruing on such shares, and the amount paid shall be a lien on such shares respectively, and shall be paid before a transfer of such stock or shares can be made.

"Sec. 31. The assessor shall return to the clerk of the county court the statement described in section thirty made by any bank in his county, and the amount so returned shall be placed upon the tax books of the county and taxed as other personal property in such city, town, ward or school districts as the same may be situated." Sections 6919-6924, Kirby's Digest.

It is seen that these sections apply to all banks, and of course include national banks. If the statute be held to provide for the taxation of the property of national banks, it is to that extent void, for this is beyond the taxing power of the state; and, unless the statute be held to tax the shares of stock, instead of the property of the bank itself, then the shares of stock in a national bank escape state taxation altogether. Did the Legislature intend any such result? This court has never construed the statute in a way that could have any bearing on the present question. In Hempstead County v. Hempstead County Bank, 73 Ark. 515, 84 S. W. 715, we merely held that, in summing up the valuation of the property of a bank for taxation purposes, the amount of capital stock invested in real estate should be deducted. But this is not inconsistent with the conclusion, either one way or the other, on the proposition whether the shares of stock are to be taxed.

In the state of Washington a statute (Laws 1891, p. 280, c. 140) is in force which, we think, is, so far as the present question is concerned, substantially like our statute. It reads as follows:

"Sec. 21. Every individual, firm, corporation or association of persons carrying on a general banking business in this state, whether the same has been organized under the banking laws of this state or of the United States, or conducted under the style of private bankers, shall be assessed and taxed Annually, at such times as provided for listing property for taxation, every such bank or banking association as contemplated in this section shall, by its accounting officer, furnish the county or city assessor a statement, verified by oath, giving the amount of paid-up capital stock, the amount of surplus or reserve fund and the amount of undivided profits of such bank or banking association. The aggregate amount of capital, surplus and undivided profits shall be assessed and taxed as other like property in this state is assessed and taxed: Provided, at the time of listing the capital stock, the amount and description of its legally authorized investments in real estate shall be assessed and taxed as other real estate is assessed and taxed under this act, and the assessor shall deduct the amount of such investments in real estate from the aggregate amount of such capital, surplus and undivided profits, and the remainder then taxed as above provided."

"Sec. 23. Each bank and banking association shall be liable to pay any taxes assessed against them as the agent of each of its shareholders, owners or owner, under the provisions of this act, and may pay the same out of their undivided profit account, or charge the same to their expense account, or to the accounts of such shareholders, owners or owner, in proportion to their ownership."

The Supreme Court of that state, in the case of Paul v. McGraw, 3 Wash. St. 296, 28 Pac. 532, construed the statute to authorize the taxation of shares of stock of all banks, including national banks, the same to be assessed in the name of the bank and charged against shareholders. The court in its opinion summed up the reasons for that conclusion as follows: "We know that the Legislature must have had in mind: (1) That the capital of national banks could not be taxed at all; (2) that the shares of such banks could be taxed, provided that the shares of state banks were taxed, and at the same rates as state bank shares and other moneyed capital; (3) that the shares of nonresidents of the state could only be taxed at the place where the bank is located; (4) that while all the property in the state is required to be taxed, it can only be taxed once; (5) that the very easiest and simplest way to collect the tax on property of this kind is by the garnishment method, approved in National Bank v. Commonwealth, supra, and actually in operation in the state and territory for many years."

In the later case of First National Bank v. Chehalis County, 6 Wash. 64, 32 Pac. 1051, the court held that (quoting from the syllabus): "The assessment of the capital stock of a national bank, made to the bank in solido, is valid." The latter case went to the court was sustained. Mr. Justice Shiras, in delivering the opinion of the court in that case, said: "If this section [referring to section 21 above quoted] stood alone, there might be ground for the contention that it contemplates taxation of the capital of the bank. But section 23 of the statute provides that 'each bank and banking association shall be liable to pay any taxes assessed against them as the agent of each of its shareholders, owners or owner under the provisions of this act, and may pay the same out of their individual profit account or charge the same to their expense account, or to the accounts of such shareholders, owners or owner in proportion to their ownership.' The Supreme Court of Washington held in this case that these two sections are to be read together, and that, so read, their provisions are not inconsistent with those of the federal statute. That the two sections of the state law should be read together is obviously proper; and, at any rate, we are bound by the judgment of the Supreme Court of the state in the mere matter of the construction of that law."

These decisions are precisely in point, for they construe statutes which are substantially like our own, and their persuasive force cannot be escaped. The reasoning upon which they are based goes to sustain the contention that our statutes are intended to tax the shares of stock in banks, and not to tax the capital of the bank itself, and that this taxation and the method in which it is enforced neither offend against the federal statutes, nor transcend the taxing powers of the state. The federal statutes do not restrict the state's form or method of levying and collecting the tax. If the tax is levied on the shares of stock, the cases already cited establish the principle that the tax may be collected by assessment in solido against the bank as the agent of its shareholders.

Mr. Justice Miller, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in National Bank v. Commonwealth, 9 Wall. 353, 19 L. Ed. 701, said: "It is strongly urged that it is to be deemed a tax on the capital of the bank, because the law requires the officers of the bank to pay this tax on the shares of its stockholders. Whether the state has the right to do this we will presently consider, but the fact that it has attempted to do it does not prove that the tax is anything else than a tax on these shares." It is true the Supreme Court of the United States, in Owensboro National Bank v. Owensboro, supra, said that a tax on a franchise and property of a national bank was not equivalent to a tax on the shares of stock therein, or vice versa; for it said that that rule would render illegal a state tax on shares of stock. But that was said in a case which involved the va-an intention to overrule former opinions in which it was held that an assessment in solido against the bank, paid by the bank and collected from its shareholders, is valid. We are therefore of the opinion that the revenue statutes of this state now under consideration provide for the taxation of shares of stock, and not the capital stock of the bank itself, and that the method of assessment prescribed by this statute, in requiring the bank to file a schedule setting forth the things enumerated, is merely intended as a method of arriving at the valuation of the shares of stock. The statute contemplates the assessment of the tax in solido against the bank, as trustee for, or agent of, its stockholders, the same to be paid by the bank and collected from its stockholders. The statute meets every requirement of the federal statute. It applies to all banking concerns alike, either state or national, without discrimination, and provides that the shares of stock "be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located." Under any other construction of the statute shares of stock in national banks would escape taxation altogether. This construction does no violence, as contended, to the language of the statute. The third subdivision of the section, hereinbefore quoted, does not, as claimed, exempt "the value of moneys, credits, or other personal property converted into bonds or other securities of the United States, or of this state" during the preceding year; for it expressly requires banks to list such items. Nor does the fact that the statute requires the listing of time deposits show that this construction was not intended. Such items constitute the working capital of the bank, and may well be considered in arriving at a correct estimate of the value of the assets of the bank or of its shares of stock.

It is contended that the assessment in this case discriminated against the shares of stock in this bank; and in support of this contention it is shown that the assessor and board of equalization had failed to assess the shares of stock of three state banks in the same county. This appears from an agreed statement of facts in the record. But we do not understand from this that the shares of stock escaped taxation altogether. What we understand the stipulation to mean is that the shares of stock in the state banks named were not separately assessed against the individual shareholders. There is no showing here that there was any discrimination against this bank in failing to assess the shares of stock therein in the same manner in which shares of stock in other like institutions were assessed.

We are of the opinion that the judgment of the circuit court is correct, and the same is affirmed.

Appeal from Sebastian Chancery Court, Ft. Smith District; J. Virgil Bourland, Chancellor.

Action by the First National Bank of Ft.

Smith against Daisy B. Latham. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions to enter decree for defendant and dismiss complaint.

On December 15, 1906, appellee loaned to W. F. Latham $1,000, for which Latham executed his note, due 60 days after date. The note was not paid, and appellee brought this suit to recover the amount of the note. The complaint alleged that W. F. Latham, to secure the note, assigned to the bank a lease on a certain lot in the city of Ft. Smith; that Mrs. Latham claimed the lease, that the tenants would pay the rents to W. F. Latham or Mrs. Latham unless restrained. The prayer was for judgment on the note, for sale of the lease, and that the rents and the proceeds of the sale of the lease be subjected to the payment of the amount found due the bank, for which judgment was asked. A temporary restraining order was issued restraining the tenants under the lease from paying the rents to W. F. Latham or Mrs. Latham. Mrs. Latham answered the complaint, setting up, among other things, that she was the owner of the lot and of the lease mentioned in the complaint; that the lot was deeded to her by warranty deed from W. F. Latham, her husband, on the 5th day of October 1905; that if the lease was assigned to appellee as collateral security for the note, such assignment was without her knowledge or consent. She prayed that her rights to the rents under the lease be recognized; that the proceeds of the lease and the rents paid into the registry of the court be turned over to her; that the restraining order be dissolved etc.

The proof showed that W. F. Latham deeded the lot in Ft. Smith to his wife October 5, 1905. The consideration for the deed was several thousand dollars. There is no question as to the bona fides of the sale from Latham to his wife. He had used between $4,000 and $5,000 of her money, and the lot was deeded to her in consideration of this money. The deed was placed on record October 7, 1905. At the time the deed was executed there was a lease on the lot which would not expire until December 31, 1909. The deed did not contain any reservation in the grantor of the right to collect the rents under the existing lease. The deed, on the contrary, in the usual form, conveyed the lot "with all the privileges, appurtenances and improvements thereupon situate, appertaining and thereunto belonging." After the deed was executed and recorded, W. F. Latham February 20, 1906, borrowed of appellee $1,500, for which he executed his note, and deposited with appellee the contract of lease on the lot as collateral security for the loan. This note was paid before the note in suit was executed. On December 12, 1906, W. F. Latham made application by letter for the loan in suit. He inclosed the note, and in his letter asking for the loan he says "You 15, 1907, the deed was made to Mrs. Latham, and after the note in suit was executed. As the rents accrued, W. F. Latham drew drafts on the tenants in favor of the Commercial Bank of Alexandria, La., for the amounts. The Commercial Bank sent the drafts to the American National Bank at Ft. Smith for collection, and credited W. F. Latham's account with the amount collected. One witness stated the drafts were given to secure a debt due the Commercial Bank. W. F. Latham collected the rents in this way until, and including, the month of July, 1907, when the payment to him was enjoined. In a letter to appellee after suit was brought Latham, complaining of the temporary order restraining him from collecting the rents, says: "Mrs. Latham has loaned me this money to help me along." It was alleged and not denied that W. F. Latham was a nonresident of the state of Arkansas, and that he owned no property in the state out of which the note in suit could be collected. Latham was in good financial condition when the deed to Mrs. Latham was executed, but has become insolvent since. Mrs. Latham testified that the rental was collected monthly by W. F. Latham, and that the money was used for living purposes for the family. She authorized Mr. Latham to collect it. She did not know that the lease contract was assigned by Mr. Latham to secure his note to appellee. If it was so assigned, it was without her knowledge or consent. If her husband assigned the rents to the Commercial Bank of Louisiana, to secure or pay money borrowed of that bank, she knew nothing of it. She did not know that her husband drew drafts on the tenants of the lot for the monthly rents, payable to the Commercial Bank of Alexandria, La.

The court rendered a decree in favor of appellee for the amount of the note and interest. The court found that to secure the payment of said note the said W. F. Latham placed in the hands of the said plaintiff a lease on the building No. 502 Garrison avenue, Ft. Smith, Ark.; that said W. F. Latham, on the 4th day of October, 1905, conveyed to said Daisy Latham, who was then and still is his wife, the said building and the ground on which it stands, but he retained the lease on said building and the rights to collect the rents therefrom and appropriated them to his own uses, and the said Daisy Latham gave to the W. F. Latham the rents arising from said building for his own use, and he collected the said rents and appropriated them to his own use with her consent; that the said W. F. Latham was the owner of said rents, and he had the right to pledge the same plaintiff for the payment of said note; that under an order made in vacation by the chancellor the said defendants, Dave court directed the amount of the decree to be paid out of the funds collected as rents, and the balance, after "paying the amount of the interest and costs, to be paid to Winchester and Martin, the attorneys for Mrs. Latham." Mrs. Latham appeals.

Winchester & Martin, for appellant. Youmans & Youmans, for appellee.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). There is no evidence in the record to support the finding of the chancellor that, when W. F. Latham sold the lot in Ft. Smith to his wife, "he retained the lease on said building and the right to collect the rents therefrom." The deed contains no such reservation. On the contrary, Mrs. Latham, by the express terms of the grant, acquired the land mentioned and "all the privileges thereunto appertaining." That the fee simple title to the land carries with it the right to its absolute dominion is axiomatic; and, where the property is rented at the time it is conveyed, unless the deed reserves the right in the grantor to collect and use the rents, these pass, as a necessary incident, with the land, to the grantee. "Rent which does not become due till after a conveyance by the landlord goes to the grantee entire." Jones, Landlord and Tenant, § 658; Gibbons v. Dillingham, 10 Ark. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 233.

Mrs. Latham testifies that: "The rental was collected monthly by Mr. Latham. It was used for living purposes for our family." There is no evidence that she knew that Latham had assigned the lease contract to the appellee for any purpose. The evidence shows that Latham had authority as her agent to collect the rents and to use same for household purposes. But it does not show that he had authority to use the rents for some other purpose. His declarations were not competent to show that he had authority to use them for some other purpose. The fact that Latham assigned the lease contract as collateral to the appellee for the note in suit does not warrant the conclusion that Mrs. Latham knew of such assignment and consented thereto. Mrs. Latham testified that she did not know of such assignment. There is no evidence, direct or circumstantial, that she did know of it. Latham had no authority over the rents except as the agent of appellee. An inspection of the records of Sebastian county would have discovered that fact. The authority of an agent cannot be established by his own declarations. Carter v. Burnham, 31 Ark. 212; Holland v. Rogers, 33 Ark. 251; Chrisman v. Carney, 33 Ark. 316; Howcott v. Kilbourn, 44 Ark. 213. A principal is thority. No one has the right to trust to the mere presumption of authority, nor to the mere assumption of authority by the agent. City Elec. St. Ry. Co. v. First Nat. Exch. Bank, 62 Ark. 33, 40, 34 S. W. 89, 31 L. R. A. 535, 54 Am. St. Rep. 282. These well-settled principles must determine this controversy in favor of appellant.

The declarations of Latham, the agent of appellant, that he owned the lease contract, and that appellee could have same as security, were wholly incompetent, as against appellee, to establish the authority of Latham to use the rents belonging to Mrs. Latham for the purpose stated, or to show that he owned the lease. Likewise was his declaration in the letter to appellee that Mrs. Latham had loaned him this money to help him along. The fact that W. F. Latham gave drafts for the rent to the Commercial Bank to pay or to secure the payment of his account with that bank does not prove that he was not using the rent money for other than household purposes. Latham's account with the Commercial Bank may have been for money that was used by him to pay his household expenses, and, if so, the drafts to pay that account were for the purpose designated by Mrs. Latham in the payment of household expenses. But even if these drafts were given to pay Latham's account for money used by him for some other purpose, there is no evidence that Mrs. Latham knew that the drafts were being so used. It has been often held that where a married woman permits her husband to use her separate estate as his own, and to obtain credit on the faith that the estate so used is his own, she will not be allowed afterwards to assert her claim to the property as against her husband's creditors. Buck v. Lee, 36 Ark. 525; Driggs v. Norwood, 50 Ark. 42, 6 S. W. 323, 7 Am. St. Rep. 78; Davis v. Yonge, 74 Ark. 161, 85 S. W. 90; Roberts v. Bodman-Pettit Lumber Co., 84 Ark. 227, 105 S. W. 258; Mitchell v. State, 86 Ark. 486, 111 S. W. 806. But the case at bar is differentiated sharply from the above cases by the facts. Here there is no direct evidence that Mrs. Latham assented to the use of her rents for the payment of her husband's debts, nor are there any circumstances from which such assent should be implied. The competent evidence is to the contrary. When a cause in chancery reaches this court, it must be decided on the competent evidence. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Born, 76 Ark. 156, 88 S. W. 915.

The decree is reversed, with direction to enter a decree for Mrs. Latham for the amount of the rents, and to dismiss appellee's complaint for want of equity.

1. INSURANCE (§ 435*)—CASUALTY INSURANCE—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION.

A casualty policy issued to a company engaged in furnishing electric light and power, which maintained no power house, but purchased its current, which policy provides that it shall cover all operations in connection with the business, including maintenance and ordinary extension of lines, including drivers, helpers, and stablemen, does not include employes in the engine and boiler rooms of an electric power house.

3. INSURANCE (§ 198*)—CASUALTY INSURANCE—EXTENSION OF TERMS OF POLICY.

The payment of an additional premium for a casualty policy, made on account of a report of wages of a class of employes not covered by the policy, does not broaden the terms of the policy.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County, Second Division; Edward W. Winfield, Judge.

Action by the Maryland Casualty Company against the Little Rock Railway & Electric Company, in which defendant filed a counterclaim. From a judgment granting insufficient relief, both parties appeal. Affirmed.

Murphy, Coleman & Lewis and Downie, Rouse & Streepey, for appellant. Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell & Loughborough, for appellee.

HART, J. The plaintiff, Maryland Casualty Company, brought this suit against the defendant, Little Rock Railway & Electric Company, to recover an additional premium alleged to be due on a policy of casualty insurance. On the 28th day of December, 1902, plaintiff entered into a contract with the Little Rock Edison Electric Light & Power Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Arkansas, whereby it agreed to indemnify said Edison Company against loss from liability for damages on account of bodily injuries accidentally suffered by its employes while on duty in any operation in connection with its business as an electric light and power company for a term of one year from the date of the policy. The provisions of the policy with which we have to contend are as follows: Exhibit A: The schedule attached to the policy provides that it shall cover "all operations in connection with our business as Electric Light & Power Company, Little Rock and elsewhere in the service of the assured, including maintenance and ordinary extension of lines, including drivers, helpers and stablemen." The estimated pay roll is shown to be $3,900. The indorsement attached to the policy is as follows: "Boston, Mass., Sept. 1, 1903. It is hereby understood and agreed that, all the interest of the Little Rock Edison Electric Light & Power Company having been acquired by the Little Rock Railway & Electric Company, this policy shall, on and after the above date, attach and cover in the name of said Little Rock Railway & Electric Company, ceasing to cover as originally written. Attached to and forms a part of policy No. 62-926 of the Maryland Casualty Company, of Baltimore, Md., issued to Little Rock Edison Electric Light & Power Company." Two of the material provisions of the policy are set forth verbatim, as follows:

"(6) No assignment of interest under this policy shall bind the company unless the written consent of the company is indorsed hereon by one of its officers."

"(C) The premium is based on the compensation to employes to be expended by the assured during the period of this policy. If the compensation actually paid exceeds the sum stated in the schedule attached hereto, the assured shall pay the additional premium earned; if less than the sum stated, the company will return to the assured the unearned premium pro rata."

The business of the Edison Company was furnishing electricity for light and power to the inhabitants of Little Rock and vicinity. It had no power plant and purchased whatever current it needed from a corporation engaged in operating a line of electric street railway in the city of Little Rock. In March, 1903, the Edison Company and the street railway company were purchased by the Little Rock Railway & Electric Company, the defendant in this action. After the sale, the Edison Company ceased to do business, and ceased to exist after March 3, 1903. The defendant continued the business of both companies. A report of the pay roll was made by defendant to plaintiff, which included all of the employes of the old lighting company for the entire year, and later an amended report was furnished, which included, in addition thereto, a certain proportion of the power house and boiler room employes from March 3 to December 28, 1903. It is the contention of the plaintiff that the policy after March 3, 1903, covered all the employes of the old lighting company and, in addition, all the boiler and engine room employes of the defendant company. As above stated, this suit was brought to recover such additional premium. The defendant filed an answer and counterclaim, in which it denied liability and asked judgment for the amount of premium accruing between the 3d of March, 1903, when the lighting company ceased to do business, and the 1st day of September, 1903, when the indorsement of the transfer of the policy was written on it. The case was tried before the court sitting as a jury, and the court found: "That said policy of indemnity only covered, when transferred, that department that had been the Edison Electric Light & Power Company the same as was covered by it before the transfer, and that the wages of the men in the boiler and engine rooms were not covered by said policy; but, as the payment of the premiums on them had been voluntary after knowledge of the facts, they could not be recovered." Judgment was rendered in accordance with the findings of the court, and both parties have appealed.

We think the decision of the court was correct. The policy provides that it shall cover "all operations in connection with our business as Electric Light & Power Company, Little Rock and elsewhere in the service of the assured, including maintenance and ordinary extension of lines, including drivers, helpers and stablemen." That the conditions existing at the time the policy is written may be looked to in determining the extent of the risk covered is illustrated in the case of Home Insurance Co. v. North Little Rock Ice & Electric Co., 86 Ark. 538, 111 S. W. 994. When the policy was issued, the lighting company was purchasing its current from the Electric Street Railway Company, and had no power house, and consequently no employes in the engine and boiler rooms. Hence it was not contemplated by the parties that employes engaged in such occupation should be covered by the policy. It follows that a transfer of the policy did not extend its terms, but only continued in existence the policy as it was originally written. In other words, the transfer of the policy did not extend its terms to cover a class of employes that were not included in the policy at the time of its execution. After the contract had expired, a payment of an additional premium was made on account of the report of the wages of a class of employes not covered by the terms of the policy. This act did not extend the terms of the policy. It was a voluntary payment made under a mistake of law, and as such cannot be recovered. Ritchie v. Bluff City Lbr. Co., 86 Ark. 175, 110 S. W. 591.

The same may be said of the payment between March 3 and September 1, 1903. Mr. Trawick was the manager of both the Edison Company and the defendant company, and made the payments.

The judgment will be affirmed.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 83*)—DISCHARGE—UNPAID WAGES—TENDER—PENALTY.

Kirby's Dig. § 6649, amended by Acts 1905, p. 537, requires payment of wages to discharged railroad employes within seven days from demand, and on nonpayment, the wages shall continue from the date of the discharge until paid. Held that, where a railroad company has incurred a penalty under such section, a tender of the wages with interest, without a tender of accrued penalty, was effective to terminate the accumulation of penalty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 78; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 83*)—WAGES—NONPAYMENT—PENALTY—TENDER.

A tender of wages and interest due discharged employes of a railroad company which had incurred a penalty for failure to pay within seven days, as required by Kirby's Dig. § 6649, amended by Acts 1905, p. 537, though effective to stop further accumulation of penalty, without tender of accrued penalty, did not preclude the employes from recovering the penalty so accrued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 78; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 83*)—WAGES—PENALTY—SUFFICIENCY OF TENDER.

Where discharged railroad employes had sued for their wages and penalty before a justice of the peace, a tender of the wages to the justice the day before the trial, in the absence of plaintiffs and their attorney, and without their knowledge, during an adjournment of court, was not a sufficient tender to stop the penalty imposed by Kirby's Dig. § 6649, amended by Acts 1905, p. 537.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 78; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

4. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 174*)—APPEAL—AMENDMENT.

After an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, plaintiff may amend by adding claims against defendant not included in the original demand before the justice, not, however, amounting to new causes of action.

5. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 162*)—JUDGMENT—EFFECT OF APPEAL—MERGER.

A justice's judgment after appeal is not final, nor is the cause of action merged therein; the cause being triable anew as if originally brought in the circuit court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 603; Dec. Dig. § 162.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 83*)—DISCHARGE OF SERVANT—WAGES—DELAY OF PAYMENT—"FURTHER EMPLOY."

Kirby's Dig. § 6649, amended by Acts 1905, p. 537, requires that railroads pay wages due discharged employes within seven days after demand, and on nonpayment the wages shall continue from the date of the discharge or refusal to "further employ" at the same rate until paid. Held, that the words "further employ" meant employment of the same class and kind and in the same locality in which the wages were earned, and hence, in an action for a penalty, evidence that defendant offered plaintiffs Appeal from Circuit Court, Ouachita County; George W. Hays, Judge.

Action by W. M. Bryant and others against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Kinsworthy & Rhoton, James H. Stevenson, and Robert Martin, for appellant. H. S. Powell and Daniel Taylor, for appellees.

FRAUENTHAL, J. The appellees, who were the plaintiffs below, were in the employ of the defendant, a railroad corporation, and they severally instituted suits in the court of a justice of the peace for the recovery of wages and penalties for the failure of the defendant to pay them their wages when they were discharged. Judgments were recovered in each of the several cases in favor of each of the plaintiffs, and the defendant appealed from all the judgments to the circuit court. In the circuit court all of the cases were consolidated. In its answer in the circuit court the defendant denied that it had discharged either or any of the plaintiffs, or that it had refused to further employ either or any of them; but alleged that defendant took the plaintiffs off the particular work they were doing, and offered them work of another kind, and at another point on its line of railroad. It further alleged that on December 18, 1907, it offered and tendered to each of the plaintiffs the full amount of the wages with interest then due to each of them, but that the tender was refused because the amount of the penalty to that date was not also tendered. It did not deny that it owed to the various plaintiffs the several amounts of the wages, and it tendered those amounts in court; but it denied that the plaintiffs were entitled to any penalty.

The evidence on the part of the plaintiffs established the following facts: The plaintiffs worked for defendant during the month of October, 1907, and up to November 5, 1907, when they were discharged by their foreman. They requested of their foreman to have the money due them sent to the station, Camden, where a regular agent was kept, and thereafter they applied to said agent for the payment of their wages within seven days from the date of the request and also thereafter, and that the wages were not paid to them. Thereafter they severally instituted suits in the justice of the peace court for the recovery of the wages and also of penalty, and recovered judgments in that court in November, 1907. From these judgamount of his wages, with interest to that date, and also all costs of the court to that date. The tender was refused because the penalty was not also tendered. In the trial of the cause in the circuit court, the foreman under whom the plaintiffs had been working was asked by the defendant the following question, which the court refused to permit the witness to answer: "Q. At the time you discharged these men or pulled them off, did you offer them employment at any other place for the Iron Mountain Railroad Company?" It was agreed that a finding and judgment should be made in favor of each of the plaintiffs for the several amounts of their several wages, which amounts were also agreed on. The sole question then submitted to the jury was relative to the recovery of the penalty; and on that issue the court gave to the jury the following peremptory instruction: "The court instructs the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiffs for their wages at rate paid at time of discharge, November 5, 1907, to May 14, 1908, as penalty for nonpayment of wages within seven days after discharge." A verdict was returned in favor of the plaintiffs for the amounts of the penalties, which aggregated $3,323. From the judgment entered on said verdict for penalties the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The sole question presented by this appeal is whether or not the plaintiffs are entitled to recover penalties herein; and, if so, the extent of such recoveries. The right to the recovery of the penalty asked in this suit is founded upon the act of April 24, 1905, which is amendatory of section 6649 of Kirby's Digest. Acts 1905, p. 538. That act provides that, whenever any railroad corporation "shall discharge with or without cause or refuse to further employ any servant or employé thereof, the unpaid wages of any such servant or employé then earned at the contract rate, without abatement or deduction, shall be and become due and payable on the day of such discharge or refusal to longer employ; and such servant or employé may request of his foreman or the keeper of his time to have the money due him, or a valid check therefor, sent to any station where a regular agent is kept and if the money aforesaid, or a valid check therefor does not reach such station within seven days from the date it is so requested, then as a penalty for such nonpayment the wages of such servant or employé shall continue from the date of the discharge or refusal to further employ at the same rate until paid." The plain object and purpose of this statute is to secure for the employé the prompt payment of the wages due by visiting upon the railroad company a penalty until the same are paid. The primary intent of this statute is not to secure the payment of a penalty, but the payment the wages are paid, therefore, the penalty ceases. But the only way that the railroad company can make the payment of the wages is to make the offer or tender thereof. It cannot force its acceptance. If the tender is accepted, it then becomes a payment of the wages, and would cause the penalty to stop. When the railroad has, therefore, done all that it can to make the payment, it becomes in law equivalent to a payment, and so stops the continuance of the penalty. The statute provides that "as a penalty for such nonpayment the wages of such servant or employé shall continue * * * at the same rate until paid." The payment here referred to clearly only refers to the payment of the wages, and not to any penalty; and so, if that which is done which is equivalent to a payment, to wit, a tender of the amount of wages, then all is done that is required by the statute to stop the further running of the penalty. The acceptance of the wages would not be a payment of the penalty which had accrued to the date of such payment; and, as is held in the case of St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Ry. Co. v. Pickett, 70 Ark. 226, 67 S. W. 870, after the payment of the wages, suit can be brought for the amount of the penalty which had then accrued. But this question is ruled upon and settled in the case of St. L., I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Paul, 64 Ark. 83, 40 S. W. 705, 37 L. R. A. 504, 62 Am. St. Rep. 154, wherein Mr. Justice Battle says in regard to this statute: "To enforce the performance of this duty, exemplary or punitive damages are imposed upon them for the failure to do so; that is, the liability to pay the wages at the contract rate until the wages earned on the day of the discharge or refusal to longer employ are paid. They are not necessarily more unreasonable than, or as much so as, those allowed by the Iowa statute. The railroad company can stop them by the payment or tender of payment of the amount due the employé for wages actually earned. No other amount need be tendered for that purpose." We are therefore of the opinion that the amount of the penalty ceased to run on the 18th day of December, 1907, when the defendant tendered to the plaintiffs the full amount of their wages, with interest; and that it did not also have to tender the amount of the penalty which had accrued to that day to stop the continuance of the accumulation of the penalty. The plaintiffs, upon said tender being made or upon the acceptance of that amount for the wages only, had still the right to recover the amount of the penalty which had accrued to that date and now have that right; but not to recover any further amount for penalty.

It is urged by the defendant that it offered to the justice of the peace before the day of trial the amount of the wages, and that this

We do not think this amounted to a tender so as to stop the penalty. It is also urged by the defendant that, when judgments were recovered by plaintiffs in the court of the justice of the peace, their causes of action were merged in the judgments, and that thereby the amount of the penalty was fixed to that date, and ceased running so as to make no larger amount of penalty. But the defendant took appeals from these judgments to the circuit court, and the actions were then transferred to that court. In that court the trials were de novo, and the causes were tried in the circuit court upon the whole case as if brought in the circuit court in the first instance. After this appeal, the plaintiff could amend by adding claims against defendant which were not included in the original demand before the justice, only keeping out new causes of action. The judgment of the justice of the peace after an appeal is taken, therefore, is not final, nor is the cause of action merged therein because the cause is tried anew in the circuit court as if brought in that court originally. Hall v. Doyle, 35 Ark. 445; Tex. & St. L. Ry. v. Hall, 44 Ark. 375; Birmingham v. Rogers, 46 Ark. 254; L. R. & Hot Springs W. Rd. v. Castle, 74 Ark. 539, 86 S. W. 838.

It is urged by the defendant that the plaintiffs could not recover any penalty herein in event there was at the time of the discharge of plaintiffs offered to them employment by defendant of any kind and at any point. We think that the object and purpose of the statute was to secure to the employe the prompt payment of his wages, or a continuance of his employment, so that he would have a livelihood and a means of maintenance. To secure that object, it would be necessary to give him that employment in which he was competent to perform the duties thereof and at a place where he could reasonably be in order to perform those duties of such employment. The employe by earning his wages shows under the contract of employment that he was competent and able to perform the duties of the employment in which the wages were earned; and, therefore, we are of the opinion that the "further employment" meant by the statute is employment of the same class and kind and in the same locality in which his wages were earned under the contract of employment. Otherwise the railroad company might offer to the servant employment, the duties of which he might be incompetent to perform, or at a point so remote or inconvenient to the servant that he could not reasonably accept it; and thus the railroad company could escape the penalty named in this statute. We are therefore of the opinion that it offered further to employ them in the same kind of work and in the same locality.

For the error of the court in charging the jury that the plaintiffs could recover penalties accruing after the tender of the amount of wages made on December 13, 1907, the judgment is reversed, and this cause is remanded for a new trial.

W. T. ADAMS MACH. CO. v. CASTLEBERRY.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 22, 1909.)

1. SALES (§ 442*)—WARRANTIES—ACTIONS FOR BREACH—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

While a representation is only an inducement to the contract of sale, a warranty is a part of the contract, and hence an action for breach of an express warranty is on the contract, and the measure of damages for false representations would not apply.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1284-1301; Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

2. SALES (§ 442*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—ACTIONS—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In an action for a seller's breach of warranty that the machine sold for the operation of a sawmill would do as good work as similar machinery, the buyer could recover the part of the price paid, the freight and expenses of setting up the machinery, the expense of trying to run it as necessarily incurred because of the defect, as well as the value of an appliance purchased in attempting to operate the machine, which the seller sold with the machine upon retaking possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1281-1304; Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

3. SALES (§ 442*)—REMEDIES OF BUYER—BREACH OF WARRANTY—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—CONSEQUENTIAL DAMAGES.

As a rule, the damages recoverable for a manufacturer's breach of warranty of machinery sold for a known purpose are not limited to the difference between the value of the machinery as warranted and as it was, but include such consequential damages as are the direct and probable result of the breach, including the reasonable expense caused by the defect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1284-1301; Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 728*)—ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR—GENERAL ASSIGNMENTS.

An assignment of error in admitting any and all evidence offered by plaintiff over objection is too general and indefinite to be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3010-3012; Dec. Dig. § 728.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Scott County; James B. McDonough, Special Judge.

Action by R. A. Castleberry against the W. T. Adams Machine Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 84 Ark. 573, 106 S. W. 940.

T. B. Pryor, for appellant. A. G. Leming and Youmans & Youmans, for appellee.

HART, J. This is an appeal by the W. T. Adams Machine Company from a judgment of $587.50 rendered against it in the Scott circuit court in favor of R. A. Castleberry for damages on account of a breach of warranty in the sale of machinery for a sawmill. Appellee purchased the machinery in question for the purpose of running a sawmill, and made that fact known to appellant at the time of the purchase. Appellee paid a part of the purchase price, and also the freight and expenses of putting up the machinery. When the machinery was set up, appellee could not do anything with it, and wrote to appellant, notifying it of the defect in the machinery. Quite a number of letters passed between them in regard to the matter, and appellant kept promising to make it all right, but never did. Appellee purchased a Curtis feed rig, and put it on in the place of the one on the machinery, and says that he could do pretty good work then, but that it would never do nearly as good work as other machinery of the same class and size. Afterwards appellant's agent took charge of said machinery, including the Curtis feed rig purchased by appellee, and sold the same. Appellee adduced evidence tending to show that the machinery was properly set and adjusted, but that it failed to do the work it was warranted to do because the machinery was defective; and on that account would not do as good work as machinery of the same class and size.

That part of the contract which contains the warranty reads as follows: "Warranty. The above-described machinery is warranted to be made, or that it will be made, of good material, and when correctly and properly set and adjusted that it will do as good work as machinery of the same class and size."

The principal contention of appellant is that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "(2) If the plaintiff is entitled to recover, and if the machinery was returned by the plaintiff, or if taken back by the defendant without fault of the plaintiff, the plaintiff is entitled to recover any sums plaintiff may have paid on the purchase price, and all expenses necessarily incurred in setting up said machinery in any efforts made to give the machinery a fair trial." Counsel for appellant rely upon the case of Matlock v. Repy, 47 Ark. 148, 14 S. W. 546, to sustain their contention. We do not think the case in point. That case was an action for damages for false representations, and the present one is for breach of an express warranty. A warranty is part of the contract of sale; but a representation is only inducement to it. Inderman's Common Law Cases, p. 20. Appellee's testimony shows that the part purchase price, the freight, the expenses of setting up the machinery and of trying to make it run, the cost of the Curtis feed rig, and the expense of taking off the feed rig of appellant, and of putting on the new feed rig amounted to $597. Appellant, when it took possession of the machinery it sold to appellee, also took the Curtis feed rig, and sold it, and appellee was entitled to recover its value.

Appellant having taken possession of the machinery sold to appellee, and the jury having found that there was a breach of warranty, appellee was entitled to recover that part of the purchase price paid by him, the freight and the expenses of setting up the machinery. He was also entitled to recover the expense of trying to make the machinery run after it was set up as expenses necessarily incurred in consequence of the defect in it. The amount of these items is not disputed, and we think were proper elements of damage under the facts of this case. The general rule in such cases is as follows: "The damages recoverable by a manufacturer or dealer for the breach of warranty of machinery which he contracts to furnish or place in operation for a known purpose are not confined to the difference between the machinery as warranted and as it appears to be, but includes such consequential damages as are the direct, immediate, and probable result of the breach." 30 Am. and Eng. (2d Ed.) 217, and authorities there cited. That reasonable expenses incurred in consequence of the defect in the machinery are recoverable. See Murry v. Meredith, 25 Ark. 164; Tatum v. Mohr, 21 Ark. 349.

It is also insisted by counsel for appellant that the judgment should be reversed "because the court erred in admitting any and all of the evidence offered by plaintiff, over objections of the defendant." This assignment of error points to nothing. It is too general and indefinite. Edmonds v. State, 34 Ark. 720. See, also, Central Coal & Coke Co. v. Niemeyer Lumber Co., 65 Ark. 107, 44 S. W. 1122, 53 S. W. 570.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment will be affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Saline County; W. H. Evans, Judge.

Action by W. J. Lawhon against S. F. Crow. There was a directed verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The suit at bar was first instituted by the appellant before a justice of the peace of Saline county to recover from the appellee a mule and two bales of cotton, which he had mortgaged to appellant to secure an open account for supplies advanced to him with which to make his crop. At each time appellee bought supplies of appellant, he was furnished with an itemized list of each purchase and its price. Before suit was instituted under the mortgage given by appellee to appellant, the appellee was served at three different times with a sworn statement of his account, showing the total balance due appellant. It is now admitted that these statements were not itemized, and it is further agreed that there were no credits due appellee, and that the amount of the account, so sworn to, was correct. The case was taken from the jury because of the appellant's failure to itemize his account, as required by section 5415 of Kirby's Digest.

Downie, Rouse & Streepey, for appellant. J. S. Abercrombie and W. R. Donham, for appellee.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). Section 5415 of Kirby's Digest is as follows: "Before any mortgagee, trustee or other person shall proceed to foreclose any mortgage, deed of trust, or to replevy under such mortgage, deed of trust, or other instrument, any personal property, such mortgagee, trustee, or other person shall make and deliver to the mortgagor a verified statement of his account, showing each item, debit and credit, and the balance due." The statute is mandatory. Compliance with its terms is a prerequisite to the maintenance of a suit to replevin mortgaged property. This has already been practically decided by this court in Atkinson v. Burt, 65 Ark. 316, 53 S. W. 404, where we held that failing to furnish a verified statement might have been pleaded to a suit to foreclose or to replevin the property. Where a failure to comply with the statute may be pleaded as a defense, necessarily the statute is mandatory.

and to settle any controversy over any items that might be in dispute without "going to law." The Legislature did not have in view the matter merely of saving the mortgagor the costs that might be incident to a lawsuit. Its purpose was not only to prevent that, but also any annoyance and inconvenience he might suffer by having his property taken from him by process of law before giving him an opportunity to adjust any differences with the mortgagee and to settle his account, if possible, without a lawsuit. The burden was therefore placed on the mortgagee, as a condition precedent to the maintenance of a suit to foreclose or for possession, that he comply with the statute. But the mortgagee does not forfeit his debt by failing to comply with the statute. Atkinson v. Burt, supra. He still has the right to his debt, and to any other remedies provided by law for the enforcement of its payment. He may still have his remedy of foreclosure by complying with the statute. It is a reasonable provision, and subserves a useful purpose. It is not a compliance with the law to furnish statements as the items are bought from time to time, nor to furnish a sworn statement of the account without the items that compose it.

Compliance with the statute is not waived, where the mortgagor sets up the noncompliance in defense, which was done in this case by his motion to dismiss. The ruling of the court was correct.

Affirmed.

WELCH STAVE & MERCANTILE CO. v. STEVENSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 15, 1900.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 9*)—REPORTS AS TO FINANCES—FAILURE TO FILE—INDEBTEDNESS—LIABILITY OF OFFICERS.

Kirby's Dig. § 848, provides that the president and secretary of every business corporation organized under the act shall annually deposit with the clerk of the county in which it transacts its business a certificate showing the condition of such corporation. Section 859 makes such officers, on failing to comply with section 848, liable for the debts of the corporation contracted during the period of any such failure. Held, that the president and secretary of a mutual insurance company organized under the general incorporation act are liable under section 859, although section 4349 provides that all domestic mutual insurance companies shall annually file with the State Auditor a statement of its financial condition on the 31st day of December next preceding.

2. INSURANCE (§ 4*)—MUTUAL COMPANIES—FINANCIAL STATEMENT—STATUTE—REPEAL BY IMPLICATION.

Kirby's Dig. § 848, provides that the president and secretary of every corporation organized under the general incorporation act shall annually deposit with the clerk of the county in which it transacts its business a certificate showing its financial condition. Section 4349 provides that all domestic mutual insurance companies shall annually file with the State Auditor a statement of its financial condition on the 31st day of December next preceding. Held, that section 4349 does not repeal by implication section 848, as the two sections are not repugnant; section 848 being passed for the information and benefit of creditors of the corporation, while section 4349 was to give information to the auditor to enable him to determine whether agents of such organizations are entitled to a certificate of authority to solicit business.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sebastian County, Ft. Smith District; Daniel Hon, Judge.

Action by the Welch Stave & Mercantile Company against E. H. Stevenson and another. A demurrer was sustained to the complaint, and plaintiff electing to stand on its complaint, the case was dismissed, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

Appellant (plaintiff below) alleged: That on and since February 26, 1906, the Ozark Insurance Company had been a corporation of this state organized under the provisions of section 837 and the following sections of Kirby's Digest, authorizing the organization of corporations "for the purpose of engaging in or carrying on any kind of manufacturing, mechanical, mining or other lawful business"; that defendant Stevenson was president, and defendant Klummons was secretary, of said corporation from and after said day of February; that said corporation was organized as a mutual insurance company for the purpose of insuring property against fire, and on February 26, 1906, issued to plaintiff its policy insuring certain property against loss by fire for 12 months from that date; that on August 3, 1906, the property so insured was destroyed by fire, and on April 4, 1908, plaintiff recovered judgment against said corporation in that court on account of said loss for $500, with interest, which judgment remained wholly unpaid; that the defendant president and secretary did not, nor did either of them, file the certificates required by section 848 of Kirby's Digest during the years 1905 or 1906, and, by reason of the neglect to do so, had become liable to plaintiff for the amount of said judgment; and it prayed judgment accordingly. Defendant filed a general demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court sustained said demurrer, and, the plaintiff electing to stand upon its complaint, the court dismissed the case at the costs of the plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed.

Mechem & Mechem, for appellant. Chas. E. & Harry P. Warner and T. W. M. Boone, for appellees.

WOOD, J. (after stating the facts as above). Section 848 of Kirby's Digest provides as follows: "The president and secretary of every corporation organized under the provisions of this act shall annually make a certificate showing the condition of the affairs of such corporation, as nearly as the same can be ascertained, on the first day of January or of July next preceding the time of making such certificate, in the following particulars, viz.: The amount of capital actually paid in; the cash value of its real estate; the cash value of its personal estate; the cash value of its credits; the amount of its debts; the name and number of shares of each stockholder; which certificate shall be deposited on or before the fifteenth day of February or of August with the county clerk of the county in which said corporation transacts its business who shall record the same in a book to be kept by him for that purpose." Section 858 requires the certificate to be made under oath, or affirmation by the person subscribing same. Section 859 makes the president or secretary who shall neglect or refuse to comply with the provisions of 848 jointly and severally liable to an action founded on the above statute for all debts of such corporation contracted during the period of any such neglect or refusal.

Appellees contend that, inasmuch as the complaint shows that the corporation was organized as a mutual insurance company for the purpose of insuring property against fire, therefore the requirements of section 848 supra do not apply, and that, instead thereof, the provisions of section 4349 are applicable. It is alleged in the complaint, and admitted by the demurrer, that the insurance corporation named in the complaint was organized under the provisions of chapter 31 of the general incorporation act (subdivision 2, Kirby's Dig.), for "manufacturing and other business corporations." The Legislature in express terms having made it the duty of the "president and secretary of every corporation organized under the provisions" of that act to file the certificate specified in section 848 supra, it is not within the province of the courts to say that they did not intend what they have expressed in such plain terms. In such case there is no room for construction.

Nothing remains but to give effect to the law, unless it has been repealed by some subsequent enactment. Section 4349 of Kirby's Digest, supra (act of May 23, 1901 [Acts 1901, p. 303, c. 159]), provides: "All mutual insurance companies of life, fire, etc., or other kind of mutual insurance organizations, organized under the laws of this state, shall annually file with the Auditor of State during the month of February, a full and complete sworn statement of its financial condition on the 31st day of December next preceding. Such statement shall plainly exhibit all real and contingent assets and liabilities repealed. There is in the above no express repeal of section 848, and, applying the familiar rules that obtain, and that have been often announced by this court, with reference to repeals by implication, we are of the opinion that section 4349 does not repeal section 848. The two sections are not in irreconcilable conflict, nor can it be said that the provisions of section 4349 (the latter act) cover the whole subject of section 848 (the former act), and that the last enactment embraces new provisions in addition to the subject covered by the first, showing plainly an intention that the last should be a substitute for the first. Mr. Sutherland expresses the rule for repeals by implication as follows: "There must be such a manifest and total repugnance that the two enactments cannot stand. The earliest statute continues in force unless the two are clearly inconsistent with, and repugnant to, each other, or unless in the later statute some express notice is taken of the former, plainly indicating an intention to repeal it; and, when two acts are seemingly repugnant, they should, if possible, be so construed that the latter may not operate as a repeal by implication of the former." Sutherland, Statutory Const. (2d Ed.) p. 465. To the same effect, see: English v. Oliver, 28 Ark. 325; Coats v. Hill, 41 Ark. 151; Chamberlain v. State, 50 Ark. 137, 6 S. W. 524; State v. Kirk, 53 Ark. 337, 13 S. W. 925.

We deem it unnecessary to parallel the two sections in comment to show that they are not repugnant. They are set forth in the opinion, and the mere reading of them will discover that they may be readily harmonized. Section 848 was passed for the information and benefit of creditors of the corporation. Section 4349 was for the purpose of giving, primarily, information to the Auditor, and to enable him to determine whether the agents of such organizations are entitled to solicit business for same, and as to whether such agents are entitled to a certificate showing that they have authority to solicit business. See McKee v. Rudd (Mo.) 121 S. W. 312. In so far as the statements required by section 4349 may be of benefit to creditors, it is in this respect not repugnant, but supplemental, to section 848. The two sections were passed for a different purpose, as will be readily seen, and there is nothing to indicate that the last enactment was intended as a substitute for the first. As repeals by implication are not favored, it is for the Legislature, and not for the courts, to say that section 848 has no application to mutual insurance companies. Thus far the Legislature has not so declared.

The trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint.

LEVY et al. v. McDONNELL.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. Nov. 22, 1909.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 27*)—EQUITABLE MORTGAGES.

Where a deed, which provided that it should be void on the grantee's failure to pay the purchase-money notes, after which the grantee should hold as tenant of the grantor and pay rent, did not expressly provide for a lien on the crop raised by the tenant, it was not an equitable mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 9*)—RELATION.

Where land was absolutely conveyed, a subsequent provision of the deed that, if the purchase-money notes were not paid, the conveyance should be void, and the grantee should be entitled to hold as tenant, paying a rent which should be credited to him as purchase money, did not create the relation of landlord and tenant upon nonpayment of a note, as it would have done in case of an executory contract of sale; that relation being inconsistent with the fee-simple ownership conveyed to the grantee, as merely calling the debt "rent" after default did not make it such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 147*)—CONDITIONS—CONDITIONS REPUGNANT TO GRANT.

A condition in a deed which is repugnant to the grant is void.

Appeal from Jefferson Chancery Court; John M. Elliott, Chancellor.

Action by Minnie B. Levy and another against J. S. McDonnell. From a decree for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Taylor & Jones, for appellants. Crawford & Hooker, for appellee.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. Minnie B. Levy and her husband, W. J. Levy, two of the appellants herein, by their deed duly executed and delivered, containing covenants of general warranty of title, conveyed in fee simple to one Davis a tract of land in Jefferson county for the sum of $5,000, payable in eight equal annual installments, as evidenced by the promissory notes of said Davis duly executed to them and recited in said deed. After the habendum and the warranty clauses of the deed, there follows this stipulation: "And when all of said notes are paid according to the tenor and effect thereof, then this instrument is to become absolute, and if the said Davis shall fail to pay said indebtedness for any year according to the tenor and effect of said notes, then in that event this conveyance shall be void and the grantors shall be entitled to possession and said grantee is to be held as a tenant of the said Minnie B. and W. J. Levy for any year he be paid for each year to the amount as set out in said notes, then he is to have the same placed to his credit as purchase money." Davis failed to pay the second note, which fell due on November 1, 1905. He had mortgaged his crop on the land to appellee for supplies, and during the fall of the year he gathered the crop and delivered it to appellee, and the latter sold it and applied the proceeds in satisfaction of his mortgage debt. This action against appellee was subsequently instituted in chancery to recover from him the proceeds of said crop, and a lien on said crop is asserted under the above-quoted stipulation in the deed.

It will be noticed, in the first place, that the stipulation does not expressly purport to declare a lien on the crop. Therefore it cannot be held to constitute an equitable mortgage. If any lien exists at all, it is by virtue of the relation of landlord and tenant, which is declared to arise in the event that said Davis shall fail to pay either of said notes. Appellants rely upon the principle stated in the following quotation, approved by this court in Thomas v. Johnston, 78 Ark. 574, 95 S. W. 468: "The parties to an agreement for the sale of land may also contract with the right, at the election of either party in the future, upon the performance or non-performance of certain conditions, to treat the transaction either as a purchase and sale contract, or a lease; and, if the election is made to treat it as a tenancy, it relates to the time of making the contract, and the relation of landlord and tenant, with all the incidents and liabilities, will be regarded as having begun at that time." 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) pp. 168, 169. This principle applies, however, only to executory contracts for the sale of land, and not to contracts fully executed by delivery of deeds conveying the title to the purchaser. The two relations of vendor and vendee and of landlord and tenant are inconsistent and cannot exist at the same time; but the parties to an executory contract may establish either one or the other of these relations, and provide when the one shall end and the other shall begin. This is the controlling principle in Thomas v. Johnston, supra, and the cases which precede it; but when the fixed relation of vendor and vendee is created by the conveyance of the title, which is an executed contract, the other inconsistent relation cannot be created, for, the title being in the vendee, the relation of landlord and tenant cannot exist. Merely denominating the debt as "rent" in certain contingencies would not make it rent, where the relation of landlord and tenant does not in fact exist. Walters v. Meyer, 39 Ark. 560; Watson v. Pugh, 51 Ark. 218, 10 S. W. 493; Quer-

The deed exhibited in this case conveyed the title in fee simple to Davis, and the grantor could not burden the conveyance with a condition which defeated it. The condition is repugnant to the grant, and is void. Carl Lee v. Ellsberry, 62 Ark. 209, 101 S. W. 407, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 956, 118 Am. St. Rep. 60; Whetstone v. Hunt, 78 Ark. 230, 93 S. W. 979.

Other questions are raised which it is unnecessary to decide.

Decree affirmed.

J. L. Short and C. E. Elmore, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

FRAUENTHAL, J. The defendant, Walter Nichols, was convicted of the crime of seduction, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment of conviction.

The evidence on the part of the state established the following facts: Dulcie Boydston was a young girl 18 years old and living with her parents. In December, 1906, the defendant began keeping company with her and to show her marked attention. He continued his attentions and visits to her for a number of months. Dulcie Boydston testified that in February, 1907, he asked her to marry him, and she promised to do so; but no definite date was set for the marriage. He continued to pay his suit to her, and then some time after their engagement he began to seek sexual intercourse with her by promising marriage in two months thereafter. Finally he overpersuaded her, and in March, 1907, succeeded in obtaining sexual intercourse by promising to marry her, and by telling her that all people who intended to get married "did that way." Pregnancy was the result of the intercourse. In August, 1907, the circuit court convened at the county seat of Fulton county, and at that time a brother of defendant was to be placed on trial for grand larceny, and the defendant was a witness in his brother's behalf and attended that court. The father of Dulcie Boydston met the defendant there, and accosted him and told him that he had ruined his daughter. The defendant told him that he would make it right in two or three weeks. The father told him that then was the time to make it right. The defendant desired to talk to the young girl privately, and, upon the father's refusal to permit him to do so, the defendant ran across the square and at once left the town, without attending the trial of his brother or awaiting to see its outcome. The testimony tends to prove that the defendant fled the country and went to Texas. After remaining away for some time, he returned and began seeking testimony in his behalf upon this charge. He saw a young man, Robt. Hightower, who had formerly waited on Dulcie Boydston. He asked this young man if he knew anything about the prosecutrix that would benefit him. Hightower told him that he did not, and said to him that if he were in the defendant's place, and had promised to marry her, he would do it. The defendant dropped his head, and thus remained for a short time without making reply, and then said he would not marry her; but in the conversation he with Dulcie Boydston, but denied that he had promised to marry her.

It is provided by section 2043 of Kirby's Digest that no person shall be convicted of the crime of seduction upon the testimony of the female "unless the same be corroborated by other evidence." On a charge of obtaining carnal knowledge of a female by virtue of a false promise of marriage, the corroboration of the female is required both as to the promise of marriage and the fact of sexual intercourse. Polk v. State, 40 Ark. 482, 48 Am. Rep. 17; Keaton v. State, 73 Ark. 285, 83 S. W. 911; Carrens v. State, 77 Ark. 16, 91 S. W. 30; Lasater v. State, 77 Ark. 468, 94 S. W. 59. In this case it is contended that there is not sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury, for the reason that there is no corroboration of the testimony of the female as to the promise of marriage. In considering the character and sufficiency of the testimony necessary to corroborate the female in this particular, Mr. Justice Riddick, in the case of Lasater v. State, 77 Ark. 468, 94 S. W. 59, quotes with approval the following from Mr. Justice Folger of the Court of Appeals of New York: "It is settled that the supporting evidence is required as to two matters named in the act, and as to them only. They are the promise of marriage and the carnal connection. It is settled by the same authorities that the supporting evidence need be such only as the character of these matters admit of being furnished. The promise of marriage is not an agreement usually made in the presence or with the knowledge of third persons. Hence the supporting evidence possible in most cases is the subsequent admission or declaration of the party making it, or the circumstances which usually accompany the existence of the engagement, such as exclusive attention to the female on the part of the male, the seeking and keeping her society in preference to that of others of her own sex, and all those facts of behavior toward her which before parties to an action were admitted as witnesses in it, were given to the jury as proper matter for their consideration on that issue." And in the case of Cooper v. State, 86 Ark. 30, 109 S. W. 1023, it was held that the corroboration can be sufficiently made by circumstances showing the relation and conduct of the parties to each other. In the case at bar the defendant paid court to the young lady for a number of months and showed to her marked attention. During all that time she kept the society of no other young man. When the father charged him with the offense, he promised to right it in a few weeks, presumably by carrying out his promise of marriage, and then, although he was in attend-to marry the young lady if he promised to do so. He did not deny that he had so promised, but hung his head as if convicted by the truth of the statement. These were all circumstances which it was proper for the jury to consider. Before them appeared all these witnesses, and they noted their manner and demeanor. They were peculiarly the judges of the weight of this evidence, and we cannot say that there is not sufficient evidence to support their verdict.

It is urged by counsel for the defendant that the court erred in permitting evidence showing that the brother of the defendant and one of his witnesses had been indicted for grand larceny; but this was not admitted for the purpose of impeaching this witness. The same testimony proceeded further, and showed that the case on said charge against the brother had been set for trial on a definite day, that the defendant had been subpoenaed in his brother's case as a witness, that on that day the defendant attended said court wherein said trial was to be had, and evidence in that regard and for that purpose was competent. In this case a general objection was made to the introduction of this evidence. Part of it was clearly competent. A motion to exclude all of the testimony of a witness is properly overruled if a part of it is competent. Central Coal & Coke Co. v. Niemeyer Lumber Co., 65 Ark. 106, 44 S. W. 1122, 53 S. W. 570; Mallory v. Brademyer, 76 Ark. 538, 89 S. W. 551; St. L., I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 87 Ark. 331, 112 S. W. 745. Being competent for one purpose, it was not error to admit it, although a part of the testimony might have been incompetent. The defendant could, if he had so requested, have had the court to specifically instruct the jury for what purpose this evidence was competent, and that it was not competent for the purpose of impeachment.

We have examined the instructions that were given by the court and those that were refused, and we find no prejudicial error in any of the rulings thereon.

The judgment is affirmed.

Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1024*)—APPEAL—APPEAL BY STATE—RIGHT.

As a rule, the state cannot appeal from a judgment for accused, whether it is upon a verdict of acquittal or upon the determination of a question of law, unless a right of appeal is unequivocally conferred by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2599-2611; Dec. Dig. § 1024.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1024*)—APPEAL—RIGHT OF STATE TO APPEAL.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2708 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1592), allowing the state to appeal in criminal prosecutions only in the cases mentioned in the next section, and section 2709, permitting the trial court, in its discretion, to grant to the state an appeal, if the prosecuting attorney prays it, where any indictment is quashed or adjudged insufficient on demurrer, or where the judgment thereon is arrested, the state cannot appeal from a judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement of the indictment, based upon matters dehors the face of the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2599-2611; Dec. Dig. § 1024.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jasper County; Henry L. Bright, Judge.

Ivis Craig was indicted for setting up and keeping a poker table in violation of statute, and from a judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement of the indictment, and sustaining the plea, and discharging accused, the State appeals. Appeal dismissed.

E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and John M. Atkinson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State. M. R. Lively, for respondent.

GANTT, P. J. On November 2, 1908, an indictment was returned by the special grand jury for Jasper county to division No. 1 of the circuit thereof, then presided over by Hon. Haywood Scott, charging defendant with the crime of setting up and keeping "one poker table," in violation of the statutes of this state. The indictment is in regular form, and is duly signed by the prosecuting attorney of Jasper county, and the foreman of the grand jury returned the same. On January 9th, thereafter, defendant filed his plea in abatement to said indictment, giving as a reason, among others, that said indictment was not returned into open court, but was returned to Judge Scott after the circuit court room had been by his orders closed and all persons excluded from the room, except the prosecuting attorney and a deputy clerk, and because persons not authorized by law were permitted in the grand jury room. On January 15th, thereafter, the prosecuting attorney of said county filed a demurrer to said plea in abatement. On January 23, 1909, said plea in abatement and demurrer thereto came on for hearing in said division

Bright. The court overruled the demurrer to the plea in abatement, and sustained the plea to the indictment, and discharged defendant. The state, through its prosecuting attorney, refused to plead further, duly saved an exception to the ruling of the court in overruling the demurrer to the plea, and in sustaining the plea in abatement to the indictment, and appeals to this court for a review as to the correctness of the ruling of the trial court in overruling the demurrer to the plea and sustaining the plea to the indictment. The indictment, plea in abatement, and demurrer to the plea are all set out at length in the record.

This is one of a number of appeals from the Jasper circuit, in all of which the right of the state to appeal from a judgment overruling a demurrer by the state to a plea in abatement of an indictment based upon matter dehors the face of the indictment itself is challenged, and of course the first proposition is whether this court can entertain the appeal. As a general rule, the state has no right to a writ of error or appeal in a criminal prosecution from a judgment in favor of a defendant whether upon a verdict of acquittal or upon the determination by the court of a question of law; unless it be expressly conferred by statute in the plainest and most unequivocal terms. 12 Cyc. p. 804; State v. Wear, 145 Mo. 162, 46 S. W. 1099. As early as State v. Rowe, 22 Mo. 328 (1855), this identical proposition was before this court for decision. In that case the defendant was indicted for taking unlawful toll. He appeared and filed his special plea. The state demurred to this plea, and the circuit court overruled the demurrer and rendered judgment thereon for defendant, discharging him from said indictment, and the state appealed. The only question was: Would an appeal be sustained on the part of the state upon that state of facts? Judge Ryland, speaking for the whole court, said:

"The statute concerning practice and proceedings in criminal cases must determine this question. Sections 9 and 10 of the eighth article of this act are as follows:

"Sec. 9. The state in any criminal prosecution shall be allowed an appeal only in the cases and under the circumstances mentioned in the next succeeding section.

"Sec. 10. When any indictment is quashed or adjudged insufficient upon demurrer, or judgment is arrested, the circuit court, either from its own knowledge or from information given by the prosecuting attorney, may cause the defendant to be committed or recognized to answer another indictment; or, if the prosecuting attorney prays an appeal to the Supreme Court, the circuit court may in its discretion, grant an appeal."

"Now this case is not within either of the classes mentioned in this tenth section. There is no indictment quashed, nor is there any arrest of judgment, nor has this indictment been held insufficient on demurrer. Then by the express words of the ninth section an appeal will not be allowed. It is accordingly dismissed."

Sections 2708 and 2709, Rev. St. 1899 (pages 1592, 1593, Ann. St. 1906), are to-day to all intents and purposes reproductions and continuations of sections 9 and 10 of article 8 of the Code of Criminal Practice and Proceedings in Rev. St. 1845, p. 889. The decision in State v. Rowe, supra, has been uniformly followed since its promulgation. State v. Bollinger, 69 Mo. 577; State v. Heisserer, 83 Mo. 692; State v. Ross, 119 Mo. App. 401, 94 S. W. 842; State v. Risley, 72 Mo. 609. The adjudications of other states, with statutory provisions like ours just quoted, are to the same effect. State v. Minnick, 33 Or. 158, 54 Pac. 223; People v. Snyder, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 193; People v. Dempsey et al., 66 How. Prac. 371.

It being obvious in this case that the indictment was not quashed on a motion to quash, nor was a demurrer thereto sustained, nor has the indictment been adjudged insufficient on a motion in arrest, and as an appeal is only permitted the state in these cases, the motion to dismiss the appeal must be sustained; and it is so ordered.

STATE v. SMITH.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jasper County; Henry L. Bright, Judge.

Bull York Smith was indicted for an offense, and from a judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement of the indictment, and sustaining the plea, and discharging accused, the State appeals. Appeal dismissed.

E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Jas. T. Blair and Chas. G. Revelle, Asst. Attys. Gen., for the State.

FOX, J. The record in this cause is substantially the same as that in State v. Craig (decided at the present sitting of this court) 122 S. W. 1006. At least, it presents the same legal proposition. We deem it unnecessary to repeat what was said in the Craig Case as to the right of the state to prosecute an appeal; but it is sufficient to say that, adopting the conclusions as reached by this court in that case, it follows that the appeal in the case at bar should be dismissed; and it is so ordered. All concur.

STATE v. BALLARD.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jasper County; Henry L. Bright, Judge.

Al Ballard was indicted for keeping gaming tables in violation of statute, and from a judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement of the indictment, and sustaining the plea, and discharging accused, the State appeals. Appeal dismissed.

E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and John M. Atkinson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BURGESS, J. On November 2, 1908, an indictment was returned by the special grand jury of Jasper county to division No. 1 of the circuit court of said county, charging the defendant with a crime of setting up and keeping one crap table and two poker tables, in violation of the laws of the state. The indictment is regular in form; but on January 9, 1908, the defendant filed his plea in abatement of said indictment upon the same grounds as set forth in the case of State v. Ivis Craig (the opinion in which case is handed down at this delivery) 122 S. W. 1006.

As the two records are in all respects similar, for the reasons given in that case, the motion of the defendant to dismiss the appeal is sustained, because the state has no right of appeal from the judgment of the circuit court sustaining said plea in abatement. All concur.

STATE v. GEIER.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jasper County; Henry L. Bright, Judge.

Spooley Geier was indicted for an offense, and from a judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement of the indictment, and sustaining the plea, and dismissing accused, the State appeals. Appeal dismissed.

E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Jas. T. Blair and Chas. G. Revelle, Asst. Attys. Gen., for the State. R. M. Sheppard, for respondent.

FOX, J. The record in this cause is substantially the same as that in State v. Craig (decided at the present sitting of this court) 122 S. W. 1006. At least it presents the same legal proposition. STATE v. FIREY.

Nov. 23, 1909.)

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 278*)—"PLEA IN ABATEMENT"—MATTERS DEHORS THE RECORD.

only raised by plea in abatement.
[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 641; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jasper County; Henry L. Bright, Judge.

Fred Firey was indicted for keeping gaming devices and permitting persons to bet thereat, and from a judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement of the indictment, and sustaining the plea, and discharging accused, the State appeals. Appeal dismissed.

E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Jas. T. Blair and Chas. G. Revelle, Asst. Attys. Gen., for the State. R. M. Sheppard, for respondent.

GANTT, P. J. This is an appeal by the state from a judgment of the circuit court of Jasper county overruling a demurrer filed by the state to a plea in abatement filed by the defendant to an indictment against him for setting up and keeping certain gaming tables and devices and with enticing and permitting certain persons to bet and play for money at and upon said tables.

The indictment and plea in abatement are in all respects the same as that in State v. Ivis Craig (handed down at this delivery), 122 S. W. 1006. For the reasons assigned in that case, the appeal of the state must be dismissed, unless the contention of the state in this case that the plea was not in fact and in law a plea in abatement is sound. Pleas in abatement are founded on some defect apparent on the face of the accusation, or on some matter outside the record proceeding to the insufficiency of the accusation. "The rule is that all matters extraneous to the record must be taken advantage of by this plea; while such matters as appear by the accusation, errors apparent, are usually brought to notice by motion to quash, or demurrer, or left for motion in arrest in the event of conviction." Bassett's Crim. Pl. § 178; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, § 445; 1 Bishop's New Crim. Proc. 738; 12 Cyc. p. 718; Sampson v. State, 124 Ga., loc. cit. 779, 53 S. E. 332; State v. Salmon, 216 Mo., loc. cit. 503, 115 S. W. 1106; State v. Sullivan, 110 Mo. App., loc. cit. 80, 84 S. W. 105; State v. Bordeaux, 93 N. C., loc. cit. 563.

That the plea alleged facts dehors the record for which the indictment should be quashed in the estimation of the defendant is apparent, and the matters alleged were properly brought to the attention of the court in a plea in abatement. Wharton's Crim. Pl. & Prac. § 350, 3, b. Having reached the conclusion that these matters were correctly incorporated in the plea in abatement, and the circuit court having sustained the plea and abated the indictment, and the state not being entitled to an appeal in such a case, the correctness of the ruling in sustaining the plea upon the grounds therein set forth is the reason that we have no jurisdiction of the appeal.

The appeal is dismissed.

E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and John M. Atkinson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State. Walden & Andrews, for respondent.

BURGESS, J. This is an appeal by the state from a judgment of the circuit court of Jasper county setting aside the indictment on a plea in abatement thereto by the defendant.

ACTIONS (§ 184*)—PROPOSITIONS SUBMITTED TO PEOPLE.

By analogy to Const. art. 4, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 185), providing that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, a proposition submitted to a vote of the people for their adoption must be "single" as that word is defined in the law; the vote of the people on such a proposition being in the nature of a legislative act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 105*)—TITLES—SINGLE OBJECT—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Const. art. 4, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 185), providing that no bill shall contain more than one subject which shall be clearly expressed in its title, should be liberally interpreted, so as not to unnecessarily limit legislative enactments, and, if the matters embraced in the bill are not incongruous, but have legitimate connection with each other, the generality of the title will not make the bill objectionable; the mode in which the subject is treated and the reasons which influence the Legislature not making the bill bad, if there is but one subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 117; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 107*)—TITLES—SINGLE SUBJECT.

In applying the constitutional provision against doubleness, each case is singular to itself, and will stand or fall on its own facts.

5. ELECTIONS (§ 184*)—PROPOSITION TO BORROW MONEY—SUBMISSION TO PEOPLE.

Where a proposition to borrow money is submitted to the people, the object to which the borrowed money is to be appropriated is an integral part of the proposition, being necessary to make the proposition intelligible and to carry information to the voter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

6. ELECTIONS (§ 184*)—MATTERS SUBMITTED TO VOTE—DOUBLENES.

An entire subject of a statute, within Const. art. 4, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 185), providing that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and by analogy the entire subject of a proposition to be submitted to a vote of the people, may be composed of parts, and any part, by further refinement, may be composed of other parts.

7. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 97*)—BORROWING MONEY—SUBMISSION OF PROPOSITION—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Rev. St. 1890, § 9752 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4472), provides that for the purpose of erecting schoolhouses and furnishing them in school districts, the board of directors shall be authorized to borrow money and issue bonds for the payment thereof, the question of loan to be decided at a special election for that purpose, and that the qualified voters voting in favor of the loan shall have written or printed on their tickets "For the loan" and those voting against the loan, the words "Against the loan"; and, if two-thirds of the votes cast shall be "For the loan," the district board shall have power to borrow money in the name of the district to the amount and for the purpose specified in the notice of election. Section 9752a as added by Laws 1903, p. 266 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4473), provides that the purposes for which such an election may be called may, in the judgment of the school directors include the purchasing of schoolhouse sites. Held, that the statutes contemplate that the liberty of choice of the voter shall be exercised on the concrete whole encompassed by the statute if, in the judgment of the school board, the plan as a whole is a proper improvement to challenge a vote of the district.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 226; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

8. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 97*)—BORROWING MONEY—SUBMISSION OF PROPOSITION—SINGLE SUBJECT.

A proposition, submitting to the people, under the statute, the question of incurring an indebtedness for the school district in a specified sum, part of it to be used in building and furnishing a schoolhouse in one ward of the district, and the remainder to be used in the building of an addition to and improving the schoolhouse in another ward of the district, embraces a single general subject, and is not violative, by analogy, of Const. art. 4, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 185), providing that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.

Graves, Burgess, and Fox, JJ., dissenting.

In banc. Mandamus by the State, on the relation of the School District of Memphis, against John P. Gordon, State Auditor. Absolute writ granted.

J. M. Jayne, for relator. El. W. Major, Atty. Gen., Chas. G. Revelle, Asst. Atty. Gen., Jas. T. Blair, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

LAMM, J. The State Auditor refuses to register and visé, under section 5167, Rev. St. (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2700), 45 school bonds, 5-20's, each of the denomination of $500, dated May 1, 1906, interest at 5 per cent. payable semiannually, evidenced by coupons attached, payable at the Mercantile Trust Company in the city of St. Louis, and issued by the school district of Memphis, Mo., for building purposes. The Memphis school district sues out an alternative writ of mandamus. The Auditor enters his appearance through Mr. Attorney General and, waiving the alternative writ, demurs. In this condition of things the petition stands as and for such writ.

The cause being finally submitted on demurrer, we are called upon to determine but a single question, indicated by the second specification of the demurrer, viz.: "Because the petition upon its face discloses that two separate and distinct propositions were submitted and voted on jointly." The petition shows that the proceedings of the school board, the calling and notice of the election, the appointment of judges and clerks, the election itself, the canvass and formulation of the returns, showing the submitted proposition carried by a vote of 349 "For the loan" to 60 "Against the loan," and the execution of the bonds and coupons, were in due form; further, that the proposed indebtedness ($22,500), with all other, does not ex-the district, as shown by the last assessment.

The allegations relied upon to show the doubleness of the proposition are: First. An order by the school board, reciting that it was necessary for the welfare of the inhabitants of the district that a schoolhouse be erected in the First school ward, and an addition and improvements be made to the schoolhouse in the Second school ward. Second. An order that an election be called at a specified date and place, reciting, among other things, as follows: "For the purpose of submitting to the qualified voters thereof a proposition to incur an indebtedness for said school district in the sum of $22,500 for the purpose of using $20,000 of said amount in building a schoolhouse in the First school ward of said school district, and furnishing the same, and $2,500 of said amount to be used in building an addition to, and improving, the schoolhouse in the Second school ward of said district," etc. Third. A similar recital in the election notice. Relator's counsel argue that the proposition is single, and within the purview of pertinent statutes relating to issuing school district bonds. Mr. Attorney General, contra.

Relator is organized under article 2, c. 154, Rev. St. (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2699-2701), as a town school district, with the special privileges enumerated therein. Section 9865, Rev. St. (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4323), ordains that the school board, when sufficient funds have been provided, shall establish an adequate number of primary or "ward schools," and for this purpose shall divide the district into "school wards," and fix the boundaries thereof. Such board is authorized to select and procure a site in each newly formed ward and erect a suitable school building therein and furnish the same. If the money to build and furnish the schoolhouses be not on hand, it may be raised by direct taxation, under the provisions of section 9778 (page 4488), provided such is the judgment of the school board, and provided the voters of the district authorize the increased tax under that section. However, if the money be not on hand, the school board may borrow money under section 9752 (page 4472), first submitting the proposition to the voters. That is the section under which relator acted. It provides as follows (omitting matter not material): "For the purpose of erecting schoolhouses and furnishing the same in cities, towns and school districts, the board of directors shall be authorized to borrow money, and issue bonds for the payment thereof, in the manner herein provided. The question of loan shall be decided at * * * a special election to be held for that purpose. * * * The qualified voters at said election shall vote by ballot. Those voting in favor of the loan shall have written or printed on their tickets, 'For the loan;' those voting against the loan, the words 'Against the loan;' and if two-thirds of the votes cast shall be 'For the loan,' the er to borrow money in the name of the district, to the amount and for the purpose specified in the notices aforesaid. * * * When bonds are voted under this section for the erection of one or more schoolhouses, to be erected on the same or different sites," etc.

In Richardson v. McReynolds, 114 Mo. 641, 21 S. W. 901, it was held that under the foregoing section there was no authority to issue bonds to purchase a schoolhouse site, and that funds for such purchase could be accumulated only on direct taxation and by the taxgatherer. To remedy this condition in 1903 the General Assembly enacted a new section, strictly in pari materia, numbered 9752a (Laws 1903, p. 286 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 4473]), reading: "The purpose for which an election may be called to borrow money and to issue bonds therefor under section 9752 of this chapter may, in the judgment of the school directors, include that of purchasing schoolhouse sites, and the purpose of which the annual rate of taxation may be increased under and in the manner provided for by section 9778 of this chapter may, in the judgment of said school directors, include that of purchasing school building sites and furnishing said buildings." The foregoing sections (9752 and 9752a) grant the statutory power to borrow money for the purpose of building schoolhouses and furnishing the same, and purchasing school sites. They are a code unto themselves.

The right determination of the case calls for: (a) An examination of the reasons supporting the proposition that questions submitted to voters should be single and not double; (b) a construction of sections 9752 and 9752a, supra, not hitherto under interpretation on the point now up; and (c) to those may be added whatever aid may be borrowed by parity of reasoning from adjudicated cases in this and other jurisdictions. Attending to the foregoing, we conclude the proposition submitted to the voters of the Memphis school district was well enough. This because:

1. The rule of law that a proposition submitted to a vote of the people for their adoption must be single (as "single" is defined in the law) finds voice in our constitutional provision (article 4, § 28 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 185]), providing that: "No bill * * * shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title." And the reasons underlying that constitutional interdiction are precisely the reasons supporting the proposition asserted by our learned Attorney General in the case at bar. Heretofore the principle has not been frequently before this court as applied to propositions voted by the people, yet the constitutional provision has been under exposition many times, and the correct interpretation of that provision is not only well established, but is germane to the case in hand, since it is permissible for courts to reason from similars to similars.

At the threshold of the case, then, lies an investigation of the interpretation put upon said constitutional provision. In State v. Miller, 45 Mo., loc. cit. 497, in defining and illuminating the purpose, tenor, and scope of that provision, it was well said: "The courts in all the states where a like or similar provision exists have given it a very liberal interpretation, and have endeavored to construe it so as not to limit or cripple legislative enactments any further than what was necessary by the absolute requirements of the law. An exact and strict compliance with the letter would render legislation almost impracticable, and would lead to a multiplicity of bills which would make our statutes ridiculous. The principle is a correct one, and the intention was good; it was designed to strike down a most vicious and corrupt system which prevailed in our legislative bodies, and which operated as a surprise, and was productive of fraud and plunder. It was intended to kill 'logrolling' and prevent unscrupulous, designing men and interested parties from dexterously inserting matters in the body of a bill of which the title gave no intimation of the true character, or of comprising subjects diverse and antagonistic in their nature, in order to combine in its support members who were in favor of a particular measure, but who could not carry their object without an agreement to go for some other measure, when neither, on its merits, could command the requisite majority." Following these general observations, it was said in that case that, if the matters embraced in the bill were congruous, and had legitimate connection or relation to each other, the generality of the title would not make the bill objectionable, that if there was but one subject, the mode in which the subject is treated, and the reasons which influence the Legislature, do not make the bill bad, and that the provision does not call for a too vigorous and technical construction. This, because the application of rules of nice and fastidious verbal criticism would often frustrate the action of the Legislature without fulfilling the intention of the framers of the Constitution. Accordingly it was held that an act, entitled, "An act to prevent the issue of false receipts or bills of lading, and to punish fraudulent transfers of property by warehousemen, wharfingers and others," could include, under the designation of "others," all persons obtaining the possession of goods and having the indicia of ownership from transferring, hypothecating, or pledging them in fraud of the rights of the seller or vendor; the act being meritorious, and being intended to promote honesty and prevent fraud, and the subjects having a natural connection with one another.

Running through a long line of cases, the reasoning adopted and propositions ruled in State v. Miller, 45 Mo. 495, have been steadily approved and followed. For example, in State ex rel. v. Miller, 100 Mo. 489, 13 S. W. 677, it was ruled that, where all the provisions of a statute fairly relate to the same subject, having a natural connection with it, and are the incidents or means of accomplishing it, then the subject is single. Accordingly it was held that an act entitled "An act fixing the number of directors in public school boards in certain cities, and providing for election of such directors and for districting said cities therefor" meets the requirements of the provision. To the same effect are Ewing v. Hoblitzelle, 85 Mo. 64; State v. Morgan, 112 Mo. 202, 20 S. W. 456; Lynch v. Murphy, 119 Mo. 163, 24 S. W. 774; State ex rel. v. Heege, 135 Mo. 112, 36 S. W. 614; State v. Bixman, 162 Mo. 1, 62 S. W. 828; Elting v. Hickman, 172 Mo. 237, 72 S. W. 700. In other cases we have resolved that the object of the constitutional provision was to prevent incongruous matters being voted on together; that if the title is not misleading, and is not designed as a cover to vicious or incongruous legislation, it will do, although it does not descend to details. And in other cases we have resolved that matter germane to the subject does not constitute doubleness, but that matters having no material relation to each other are double in the sense interdicted. See a learned note under section 28, art. 4, Const. (1 Ann. St. 1906, p. 186) where many authorities are collated.

Recurring now to what has been already said, to wit, that the constitutional inhibition against doubleness in a bill to be voted by the lawmaker is one and the same in principle with the rule of law against doubleness in a proposition to be voted by the people, it is self-evident that the mischiefs struck at by that rule against doubleness, invoked by respondent to invalidate the bonds of the Memphis school district, are of kith and kin to the mischiefs struck at by the constitutional provision we have been considering; and courts deem them one and the same. Thus in Hubbard v. Woodsum, 87 Me., loc. cit. 95, 32 Atl. 804, a proposition alleged to be double was put to a vote of the people, and Peters, C. J., says: "The idea on which this contention of the complainants is grounded is found in the construction which courts have given to constitutional provisions existing in some of the states prohibiting their Legislatures from embodying two distinct and independent, private or local, subjects in one act. In such states two or more schemes of private legislation cannot be grouped together. The object is to prevent a combination of different interests where each one may help the other; 'to prevent,' as Folger, J., expressed it in a New York case, 'the joining one local subject with another or others of the same kind so that each subject should gather votes for all.'"

The vote of the people on a proposition stands as in the nature of a legislative act. A successful vote on a proposition is in the nature of the adoption of a law. The proposition when adopted becomes, in a sense, law—a local act. Therefore, as already pointed out, the method of its adoption is within the principle of the constitutional provision controlling legislation. McMillan v. Lee County and Boyles, 3 Iowa, 311. Cases may be found whose facts called for judicial denunciation, where odious were united to good propositions in order to pull the former through, and where it has been ruled that such conduct amounted to "jockeying" and "logrolling" and unjust and unfair "maneuvering"—in short, a fraud upon the people. Supervisors Fulton County v. Railroad, 21 Ill., loc. cit. 373 et seq. In another case (Gray v. Mount, 45 Iowa, loc. cit. 595) the facts denounced were characterized as "the common device of an auctioneer, in disposing of worthless goods, whereby a good article is mingled with them and made to draw bids, or the cunning tricks of gamblers to induce wagers of the unwary." But all those similes, metaphors, and comparisons justify themselves in connection with the concrete facts discussed in the particular case, and I have seen no case, that discusses on principle the doubleness of a proposition submitted to a vote, which attempts to apply any different reasoning or principle than is applied to the constitutional provision limiting a legislative act to one subject. We are free then to borrow and apply the doctrines announced in the one to the other. It has been decided that in applying the constitutional provision against doubleness each case is singular to itself and must stand or fall on its own facts. Says Burgess, J., in Witzmann v. Railroad, 131 Mo., loc. cit. 618, 33 S. W. 182: "Adjudicated cases do not, as a general rule, afford us much assistance in passing upon questions of this character, other than in a general way, as each case must be adjudged according to its own peculiar facts and the directness or remoteness, as the case may be, of its provisions to matters in consonance with its title."

2. Recurring now to section 9752, to cognate sections and provisions in the Constitution, it will be seen that the controlling thought is the increase of taxation beyond the even, modest level of conventional and prescribed statutory rates. Bonds at end mean taxation. Taxation is a tender and jealous point. Therefore the school law has preserved to the people a right to a direct vote (not on any tax, but) on an increase over the statutory level implied by the issue of bonds; that is, the people vote the bonds, and under the Constitution and law the school board and the taxing officers must correspondingly increase the taxing rate. Under our statutory scheme it is apparent that the division of a town district into school wards (thus necessitating more than one schoolhouse) is not deemed a matter of such quick and personal concern to the individual voter as is the increase in tax rates. The same may be said of the improvements of this or that schoolhouse, and of the number of schoolhouses built in a school district. The law contemplates that (absent an increase of taxation) the school patron and the taxpayer exercise only a representative voice in such matters, and must rest upon the informed judgment of the school board in that behalf. Of necessity this must be so. The members of such boards are charged with that discretion. They are selected and elected by the voters personally because of their stability and wisdom of judgment in that behalf, and because, presumably, they have a live and abiding affection for the common schools. Accordingly if no increase of taxation be necessary, and if the district has accumulated by gift, by sale of other school property, or otherwise through routine of taxation, a surplus sufficient to buy sites, build schoolhouses, and furnish the same in the school wards of a town school district, the statutes do not contemplate that the voter should be called upon for a direct vote on building one or more ward schoolhouses, on furnishing the same, or in buying schoolhouse sites. The board of directors may move and act on their own initiative—contra when money is to be borrowed or an extra tax levied. Nothing we say is to be construed as meaning that the object to which the borrowed money is to be appropriated is not an integral part of the proposition to be submitted to a vote. Necessarily it becomes an integral element in order to make the proposition intelligible and carry information to the voter. City of Denver v. Hayes, 28 Colo. 110, 63 Pac. 311; Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. City of Newton (C. C.) 42 Fed. 726, 727.

Manifestly the natural place a lamp should be hung out to guide school boards and courts to the right goal of interpretation is in the very statute itself. These statutes are not charts to those learned and skilled in subtle refinements and dialectics, but charts to guide plain, matter-of-fact, everyday folk. That fact, I think, is the master key to unlock the door of correct interpretation. Attending to the statutes, one would naturally expect that if the Legislature intended the proposition of building a schoolhouse in each of two wards should be split in twain, it would have said so; and if the matter of furnishing the schoolhouses when built was a separate and distinct proposition from building them, it should have said so, and if the proposition of buying schoolhouse sites on which to erect the houses was a distinct and independent proposition from building and furnishing, it would have said so. But sections 9752 and 9752a say requisite) and the furnishing of schoolhouses, conjointly, in the plural, not as detached, independent, and incongruous propositions, but as related parts of one subject, not as a double subject, but as a single subject. Accordingly we should hesitate long before we split that subject by driving a wedge of interpretation between its elemental parts, on the theory the parts are incongruous, detached, and independent propositions, not to be joined within the principle interdicting doubleness. We doubt not many bonds of Missouri school districts are outstanding, voted on the theory that building two or more schoolhouses, buying two or more sites, and furnishing houses built on those sites, was a single statutory subject-matter, properly put to be voted up or down as one proposition. To place a bar sinister across such bonds is a matter of so much gravity to the commercial honor of the state that courts should approach that result allowing every reasonable intendment in favor of validity, and with something of the same hesitancy they approach the determination of the unconstitutionality of a statute; for, as said, the vote of the people stands in just relation to the enactment of a statute, and the proposition carried stands in just relation to a local law—they stand or fall on the same character of reasoning.

3. Any whole or entire subject or proposition may be composed of parts, and any part, by further refinement, may be found to be composed of other parts. To illustrate: Let us suppose that any use of school funds in the improvement of a school building could be made only on a vote of the people. The school board concludes that two windows are necessary in a schoolhouse. Are two windows a single or a double subject or proposition? If double, then is one window a double or a single proposition? Mark, a window necessitates a hole in the schoolhouse wall. It means sash, glass, a window frame, casing, weights, pulleys, catches, etc. It is not insupposable that the voter might have his own ideas about the number of panes of glass to go into the window, and his own idea on each of the elements making up a window, including the hole in the wall. Is each of these elements to be submitted to the voter as a separate proposition? It is obvious that such refinement produces ridiculous results, and is analysis run mad, precisely as pointed out in the Miller Case in 45 Mo. 495, supra. See, in this connection, the reasoning of Peters, C. J., in Hubbard v. Woodsum, supra.

If the law be as contended by the learned Attorney General, then a town school district, having no site in either of two wards, and no schoolhouse and no plumbing, furnace, or ought else to furnish the same, sue bonds to buy a site in ward 2? (c) Shall it issue bonds to build a schoolhouse in ward 1? (d) Shall it issue bonds to build a schoolhouse in ward 2? (e) Shall it issue bonds to furnish the schoolhouse in ward 1 when built? (f) Shall it issue bonds to furnish the schoolhouse in ward 2 when built? Now it is obvious to my mind that no such absurd excess of detail was within the legislative intent; nor is it "logrolling," or "jockeying," or "maneuvering," or using the arts of the "auctioneer," or "gamester," to unite those parts into one sensible, congruous whole, and to put that whole to the people as one subject. No part of that general subject can be said to be odious or unworthy. Every part is germane and related. Every patron in the Memphis school district is interested in the uplift of the schools of the entire district; the high school being the capstone of the system, and the ward schools feeding into that. The board has determined, as it had the right to do, that the general improvement of school facilities was necessary; and sites, houses, and furnishing are but correlated and connected parts (incidents, and details) of the rounded improvement. Of course in the proposition submitted there was no element touching the purchase of schoolhouse sites, but what is said is applicable to a proposition absent that element.

Stress is laid by way of argument on preserving the liberty of choice of the voter. As to that we say: Liberty of choice is excellent, and quite worthy of the law's protection. But, observe, the prime thing in sections 9752 and 9752a is schools, schoolhouses, and liberty of choice is directed to providing the wherewithal to increase such school facilities as are determined necessary by the school board—not otherwise. Those acts relate to the business administration of school laws, and that central idea must not be obscured by side issues. We make no manner of doubt that the liberty of choice to the individual voter may be gently and reasonably restricted to a rounded proposition as distinguished from the elements of that proposition. No other course is feasible, or likely to result practically and sensibly. To illustrate: The slips and inadvertences of individual voters are proverbial. Let us suppose that propositions "a," "b," "c," "d," "e," and "f" are printed on a ballot, with the words "For the loan" and "Against the loan" after each proposition. The collection of those phrases on one ballot is confusing to the voter. So a failure to erase is fatal to the vote. Now, suppose "c" be voted and "a" fail, how stands the matter? Or that "a" and "c" are voted and "e" fail, what then? Or that "a" and "e" are voted and "c" fail? Other hypotheses of the same sort, and leading to the same abortive end, might be put. Or suppose the group of propositions relating to ward 1 succeed, and the group relating to ward 2 fail. In that event there would not be sufficient school facilities for the district, and the school board might better build a larger and more expensive schoolhouse in ward 1 to supply the school wants, so that the proposition as to ward 1 is no longer sensible; vice versa, the same might be true if the proposition as to ward 1 fail, and that as to ward 2 carry. We are of the opinion that the statutes in hand contemplate that the liberty of the voter should be exercised on the concrete whole encompassed by the words of the statute, if in the judgment of the school board the plan as a whole was a proper improvement to challenge a vote of the district. There can be no doubt that if the proposition we are considering was an act of the Legislature, instead of a proposition voted by the people, the act would stand as against the criticism leveled at it in the case at bar. May we deal more coldly and fastidiously with the people acting as sovereigns than we do with the lawmaker moving in his orbit? If so, why?

4. The ruling announced is well within precedents. Thus:

In State ex rel. Columbia v. Allen, Auditor, 183 Mo. 283,¹ it was ruled that a proposition to purchase an existing waterworks and light plant, and to provide for their extension so as to meet the increased needs of the inhabitants, was a single subject, and might be voted on as such. It can be readily seen that by superfine analysis that proposition could have been split into parts, and that voters might well entertain a diversity of views on one or another part.

In State ex rel. Canton v. Allen, Auditor, 178 Mo. 555, 77 S. W. 868, it was ruled that an order to test the sense of the voters on the subject of issuing bonds for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating or purchasing an electric light plant to supply the town and all persons and parties therein with light was a single proposition as singleness is defined and contemplated by the law. It can readily be seen that one of the parts of the foregoing proposition was whether the city of Canton would go into the manufacture and sale of electricity to consumers. Another was whether they should purchase a plant outright. Another was whether they should construct a plant from the ground up. All these parts were held to constitute one subject and one proposition, and that holding cannot be justified, unless we apply the test that the parts are related, congruous, and germane to one general municipal subject, to wit, light and bonds to pay therefor.

In State ex rel. Bethany v. Allen, Auditor, 178 Mo. 555, 77 S. W. 868, it was ruled that a proposition to issue bonds for the construction of a city hall, and for the improvement of a waterworks and light plant, was double.

Obviously the parts of that proposition were not germane or related, and were incapable of becoming one single municipal subject. There was no natural connection between a city hall and a municipal water and light plant. It was an omnibus bill pure and simple.

In State ex rel. Chillicothe v. Wilder, Auditor, 200 Mo. 97, 98 S. W. 465, a proposition to issue bonds for a waterworks and electric light plant was held single. The bonds being invalidated for other reasons, it was recommended that in the next vote the form of the proposition be changed so as to call for "a combined waterworks and electric light plant." While the waterworks and electric light plant might be run by the use of the same fuel, and in part the same machinery, and under the same management, and thus unified, yet it is manifest that building a schoolhouse in one ward, and improving one in another, has more elements of unity. In the Chillicothe case water and light were supplied. In the Memphis proposition the purpose is to furnish increased school facilities. If in the Chillicothe proposition water and light, by consumption of the same fuel under the supervision of one department and of the same agents of the city, become single, so much the more does the improvement of the school facilities in an entire district, though the houses may be in separate wards, become a single proposition.

In State ex rel. Joplin v. Wilder, Auditor, 217 Mo. 261, 116 S. W. 1087, the proposition submitted was for a "sanitary sewer" in one district and a "storm sewer" in another. The scheme involved two different systems of sewers, and it was ruled a double proposition. The Joplin Case may be distinguished from the case at bar, and therefore is not controlling.

In People ex rel. Mariposa County v. Counts, 89 Cal. 15, 26 Pac. 612, it was ruled that the proposition to issue bonds for the construction of two public wagon roads, one from Coulterville to Bear Valley, and the other from Mariposa to Yosemite, was composed of parts that were germane and related, and therefore not bad for doubleness; the said roads intersecting with an existing road.

In People v. Dunn, 80 Cal. 211, 22 Pac. 140, 13 Am. St. Rep. 118, it was ruled that providing a permanent site for the California Home for the Care and Training of Feeble Minded Children, and the erection of suitable buildings, was a single purpose.

In Rock v. Rhinehart, 88 Iowa, 37, 55 N. W. 21, Iowa county had salable swamp lands. Marengo was the county seat. There was no courthouse. A proposition was submitted to the voters to erect a courthouse in Marengo not to exceed the sum of $50,000, and to pay for the same out of the sale of swamp land. It was held a single proposition. Obviously that ruling could only be sustained on the theory that the two parts of the proposition were germane, and were so related as to

In Truelsen v. Duluth, 61 Minn. 48, 83 N. W. 714, the proposition put to the voters was to erect or purchase a water and light plant, and issue bonds to pay for the same, and it was held not double. In that case the election was held invalid because other incongruous and self-destructive propositions were submitted.

In Hubbard v. Woodsum, 87 Me. 88, 32 Atl. 802, supra, it was ruled that a proposition "to erect new county buildings, including court-rooms, offices for the several county officers, jury rooms, library rooms, and fireproof vaults for the records of the probate office, register of deeds, clerk of the courts, and county treasurer, also jail and jailor's house, at a cost of not to exceed $30,000," on a described lot, and to hire money to build all said buildings by issuing the notes and obligations of the county, was but a single proposition, and comprised but one subject.

In People ex rel. Attorney General v. Caruthers School District, 102 Cal. 184, 36 Pac. 396, it was ruled that a proposition to purchase a lot and build a schoolhouse by issuing bonds covered but one subject.

The identical proposition was resolved in the same way in People v. Sisson, 98 Ill. 335.

In Wimberly v. County of Twiggs, 116 Ga. 50, 42 S. E. 478, it was ruled that a proposition to build and furnish a courthouse, coupled with one to build and furnish a jail, setting apart a certain sum for one and a certain sum for the other, all to be paid by one issue of bonds, comprised but a single subject, and was not bad for doubleness.

In Kemp v. Town of Hazlehurst, 80 Miss. 443, 31 South. 906, it was ruled that a proposition was not double the purpose of which was to erect a waterworks and electric light plant.

We deem the cases cited persuasive authority for the conclusion announced, although cases may be found ruling the other way.

The premises considered, our order for an alternative writ of mandamus should stand, and an absolute writ should issue. It is so ordered.

VALLIANT, C. J., and GANTT and WOODSON JJ., concur. BURGESS and FOX, JJ., concur in the result. GRAVES, J., dissents.

On Motion for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

GRAVES, J. (dissenting). Being the original dissenter in this cause, and by our rules having 10 days after final disposition to express my reasons for such dissent, I feel that the importance of the public question involved in the case justifies a trespass both upon time and space for an expression there-that, when a question has been settled in one case by a majority of the court, dissenters should not persist in repeating their views in a subsequent case involving the same question. But in my humble judgment that proposition is not in this case. To my mind we have departed from the beaten paths heretofore marked out by this court, and launched out upon an unknown sea, and this, too, without rudder or compass. Vacillating opinions have been the bane of every court, and to the end that such should not be charged to the door of this court, we should not change our own holdings without saying to the bench, and the bar, and the public state officials of the state, that we have so done. Viewing this case as I do, it occurs to me that we have departed from the previous well-considered causes, and that, too, without saying so in plain and explicit terms. That a court has the right to change its views goes without question, and that it has a right to overrule previous holdings is equally unquestioned. Courts are not infallible any more than individuals are infallible, because, after all, courts are made up of individuals, and oftentimes with individuals having varying minds. Not only do I think we have departed from precedent in this cause, but I am impressed that a properly pleaded and urged contention, made by the state and the State Auditor through the learned Attorney General, has been entirely unconsidered by the opinion of my learned Brother who wrote it, and by my learned Brothers who assented thereto. This necessitates a statement of the issues, as such issues appear from the record, rather than as such issues may appear from mere conclusions. I would not feel called upon to write, except for the fact that the opinion of the majority opens up the floodgates to fraud, and in addition compels a state officer to certify to things which a conscientious man should not be compelled to state in an official certificate. But sufficient by way of preamble. Let us now get to the facts of this case.

The school district of Memphis in Scotland county, Mo., presented 45 school bonds of $500 each to the State Auditor for registration under the law. These bonds were all of the same character so far as the tenor and wording thereof were concerned. The Auditor refused to register them, and this action in mandamus was brought in this court to compel him so to do. The petition sets out in detail the acts of the school district and its officers, up to and including its application for the registration of said bonds. Inasmuch as my Brothers in the majority have not seen fit to fully cover the allegations of the petition for mandamus, and the demurrer thereto filed by the Attorney General, I deem it proper to take from the record the actual facts therein contained.

The petition of relator is fully set out in the abstract of record furnished to this court by the learned Attorney General. Such petition charges the corporate capacity of relator. It then charges the official position of respondent and his duties as State Auditor, in so far as they relate to the registration of bonds such as are involved in this case. The petition of relator then charges that on December 22, 1908, the school board made an order "in the matter of calling an election for the purpose of submitting to the qualified voters of said school district a proposition to incur indebtedness to the amount of $22,500 and to issue bonds therefor for the purpose of erecting a schoolhouse in the First ward of said school district, furnishing the same, and to erect an addition to and improve the schoolhouse in the Second school ward of said school district." The petition of relator then charges that it appeared to the board of said school district that it was desirable to erect this new schoolhouse, and to erect an addition to the other. This board likewise determined that the costs thereof would not be less than $22,500. Afterwards the school board of said district made an order as follows: "That a special election be held in said school district under and pursuant to the provisions of said section 9752 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1899, on Tuesday, January 26, 1909, in the men's waiting room of the basement of the courthouse in the city of Memphis, Mo., for the purpose of submitting to the qualified voters thereof a proposition to incur an indebtedness for said school district in the sum of $22,500, for the purpose of using $20,000 of said amount in building a schoolhouse in the First school ward of said school district and furnishing the same, and $2,500 of said amount to be used in building an addition to and improving the schoolhouse in the Second school ward of said district, and issue bonds therefor; said bonds to become payable in 20 years, with privilege of payment at the end of 5 years and bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually."

The petition of relator further says that the notice given of such election was in the following form: "Notice is hereby given to the qualified voters of the independent school district of Memphis, Mo., that by order of the school board of said independent school district of Memphis, Mo., made on the 22d day of December, 1908, it was ordered that a special election of the qualified voters of said school district be held in the men's waiting room of the basement of the courthouse in the city of Memphis, Mo., on Tuesday the 26th day of January, 1909, for the purpose of authorizing the said board of directors to borrow money to the amount of $22,500 and issue bonds for the payment thereof, for the purpose of using $20,000 of said amount in building a new schoolhouse in the First ward of said district, and $2,500 of said amount to be used in building an addition to and improving the schoolhouse of the Second ward of said district; said bonds to run 20 years, with the privilege of payment at the end of 5 years, and to draw 5 per cent. semiannual interest from the date of their issue. The qualified voters voting at said election shall vote by ballot. Those voting in favor of the loan shall have written or printed on their ticket 'For the loan.' Those voting against the loan the words 'Against the loan.'"

It is further charged in the petition of relator that upon a return of the vote the propositions heretofore submitted as specified in the order, and the notice hereinabove quoted, received the necessary vote for adoption. It then appears that said school district by and through its directors entered the following order:

"Whereas, at an election duly called and held in school district of Memphis, Missouri, after notice thereof had been duly given for the time and in the manner required by law, there were authorized to be issued the school building bonds of said district to the amount of twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars ($22,500.00).

"Therefore, be it resolved that under the authority aforesaid, there are hereby directed to be issued forty-five (45) school building bonds of five hundred dollars ($500.00) each of school district of Memphis, Missouri, dated May 1, 1909, and becoming due twenty (20) years thereafter, which said bonds shall bear interest evidenced by coupons at the rate of five per cent. per annum, payable semiannually. Both principal and interest of said bonds shall be made payable at the Mercantile Trust Company in the city of St. Louis, Missouri.

"Be it further resolved that the bonds hereby authorized shall be in substantially the following form:

"No. ———. $500.00

"United States of America, State of Missouri, School District of Memphis, School Building Bond.

"Know all men by these presents that school district of Memphis, in the state of Missouri, acknowledges to owe and for value received hereby promises to pay to bearer five hundred dollars lawful money of the United States of America on the first day of May, 1929, with interest thereon from the date thereof at the rate of five (5) per centum per annum, payable semiannually on presentation and surrender of the annexed interest coupons as they severally become due. Both principal and interest of this bond are hereby made payable at the office of the Mercantile Trust Company in the city of St. Louis, Missouri.

"This bond is redeemable at the option of the school board of Memphis at any time after May 1st, 1914.

"This bond is one of a series of like tenor issued for the purpose of providing funds for the erection of a school building in and for said school district of Memphis under the authority of chapter 154 of the Revised Statutes of 1899 of the state of Missouri (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 4459-4568), and of an election duly called and held in said district; and it is hereby certified and recited that all acts, conditions and things required to be done precedent to and in the issuing of the bond have been done, happened and been performed in regular and due form as required by law; that a direct annual tax has been duly levied upon all of the taxable property in said school district of Memphis for the payment of the principal and interest of this bond at their respective maturities, and that the total debt of said district, including this bond, does not exceed the statutory or constitutional limitations.

"In testimony whereof, the board of school directors of Memphis, Missouri, has caused this bond to be signed by its president and attested by its secretary, and has caused the annexed interest coupons to be executed with the fac simile signatures of said officers this first day of May, 1909.

"Attest: W. T. Reddish, Secretary, G. E. Leslie, President."

It should be stated here that the bond set out in relator's petition, duly copied from the petition as above set out, is the bond that was presented to the Auditor for registration, and none other. In other words, the entire bond issue is in the form set out in relator's petition.

Upon the filing of relator's petition in this court, which said petition was duly verified by oath, and contained the bond hereinabove set out, the Attorney General, when called upon to plead thereto for and in behalf of the respondent, the State Auditor, filed the following demurrer: "Now comes the respondent, John P. Gordon, State Auditor of the state of Missouri, and, waiving the issue of an alternative writ in the above-entitled cause, demurs to the petition of the relator herein, and assigns the following as his grounds of demurrer, to wit: First, said petition fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, because the petition upon its face discloses that two separate and distinct propositions were submitted and voted upon jointly; third, said petition and the matters and things therein as stated and set forth are not sufficient in law nor in equity to entitle the relator to the relief asked for in said petition, nor to authorize the issuing of the writ of mandamus therein prayed for. Respondent further says that by reason of the demurrer hereinabove set forth, he should be dismissed with his reasonable costs."

The case came on to hearing upon the petition of relator fairly abstracted as aforesaid, and the demurrer as aforesaid. Questions of law will be noted during the course of the opinion.

1. The foundation of the majority opinion is to the effect that we must determine whether or not a proposition as submitted to voters is double by the same rule that we determine a doubleness of a proposition in a title to a bill before the Legislature, under article 4, § 28, of the Constitution. This rule of construction we do not concede, nor do the cases in this state proceed upon any such theory, except the present opinion, in which we transplant the ideas of the Supreme Court of Maine to Missouri. In a way the two questions may be akin in that the prevention of fraud is a purpose to be attained in each. But the difference lies in the fact that in determining doubleness in legislative acts the courts do it under constitutional edict, whilst such is not true in determining doubleness of a proposition to be voted upon by the people. For a proper conception of the difference we must consider the duties of a court under the Constitution, and the duties of a court in the course of administering justice according to a proper understanding of the law. The people made the Constitution, and when in their sovereign power they have said that a thing must be done in a certain manner, it does not lie within the power of the courts, or any other creature of the Constitution, to gainsay such expressed will. Not so, however, where the court in dealing with a question not specifically provided for by the fundamental law, to wit, the Constitution.

The sovereign power which prescribes the things which might be and might not be done, likewise created the courts and other departments of government. If the voice of the constitutional making power—i. e., the people—said that under certain circumstances specific things must be done, it is not for the courts, the creatures of the same Constitution, to gainsay such constitutional mandate. If the Constitution (the express voice of the people) says an instrument must be framed in certain language, it is not for the courts, the mere creatures of the Constitution, to say that it shall not be done. For these reasons we have held, and rightfully held, that indictments must conform to what the sovereign power of the state has said must be done. State v. Warner (not yet officially reported) 119 S. W. 399; State v. Campbell, 210 Mo. 202, 109 S. W. 706; State v. Skillman, 209 Mo. 408, 107 S. W. 1071. In other words, the people who make and unmake Constitutions have spoken. In so speaking they not only prescribe a certain course of conduct, but likewise create the courts, and give to them the only powers which they possess. It is not the province of the creature to tear down and rebuild the structure of the creator. What the creator said as to how certain things could and should be done, if clearly expressed, is not a matter for the courts, the mere creatures of the same power. Of course, if the language is dubious and doubtful, the courts can consider it and interpret it, but not otherwise. So that we say that the basis of the construction fixed by the majority opinion is improper, in that there is no analogy between things which must be done under constitutional mandates and things which may be done under the judgment of the courts in the administration of justice. Mandates of a Constitution may, and often do, appear to be unreasonable, yet if couched in plain language, and in no way dubious or uncertain, the courts, the creatures of the same instrument, must bow in humble submission to the constitutional mandate. We know that in some instances modern practices have been to hold as naught constitutional provisions, and for courts and other governmental agencies to write anew these venerable instruments. To this modern doctrine we have never adhered, and as long as constitutional government is to be ours, will never lend our assent.

But to the rule of construction adopted by the majority opinion in this case, let us now revert. Constitutional mandates, whether reasonable or unreasonable, must be followed by the courts, because the courts (the stream) can never rise higher than the source. There may be one or two expressions from the courts, now seized upon by the majority opinion, to place the construction of what is a double proposition upon the basis of a constitutional mandate concerning double propositions, but these cases are so few and far between that serious discussion of them can well be omitted. Doubtless of propositions in questions to be voted upon by the people did not have its origin in constitutional mandates, and, with one or two exceptions up to the present case, has never been reckoned along that line. Be it further said that such exceptions do not come from Missouri. It is true that we have studiously avoided in this state intrenchment upon the Constitution, and we have likewise through our courts as studiously undertaken to prevent and avoid frauds in all kinds of elections. We have denounced double propositions which were calculated to secure votes which could not otherwise be secured. We have done this in Missouri prior to the present opinion, on the theory that the courts would and could suppress frauds, and could and would see that there was a fair expression upon each and every question relating to taxation, but not on the theory that there was any special analogy between the performance of this duty and certain constitutional mandates. The difference lies in this: That constitutional mandates must be obeyed whether reasonable or unreasonable, but the fact as to whether or not the courts should permit a double proposition, which upon its face indicates that there was a purpose to obtain votes for the proposition which could not otherwise be obtained, rests upon an entirely different theory. The latter question rests upon the sound discretion of the courts in the administration of justice to prevent a fraudulent exercise of the taxing power of the state, a power closely scrutinized by the courts.

So to our mind the discussion of what can and cannot be placed in the title clause of a bill pending before a Legislature has no special significance here. Not only so, but the construction given to said titles are and would be repugnant to what a court would say as to the exercise of the taxing power of the state. The title to a bill is only expected to be a fair index to the context of the bill. On the other hand, propositions relative to the taxing power of the state, and propositions to be voted upon by the plain people, must be plainly stated, and in single and substantial form. Not only so, but they must be so stated as to avoid what has been denominated by the courts as "logrolling" in the interest of a combined proposition, which would not occur in the interest of a single proposition. The courts in the administration of justice, and without any reference to constitutional mandates, have discovered that doubleness of propositions to be voted upon by the public was inductive of fraud, and that it was uncertain whether either of two or more propositions could have been carried by vote had they been submitted singly. To obviate this fraud upon the taxing power of the state this court, up to the present time, and excepting the present case, has consistently turned its face against doubleness of propositions and the frauds which are the necessary outgrowth thereof. However, before going to the holding of the courts of this state, it might be well to submit the general proposition of law resulting from the examination of all cases bearing upon the question.

In 21 American and English Encyclopedia of Law (2d Ed.) it is said: "Two propositions cannot be united in the submission so as to have one expression of the vote answer both propositions, as voters might be thereby induced to vote for both propositions who would not have done so if the questions had been submitted singly." This announcement of the general doctrine is not only in full accord with the cases in Missouri, but with all of the jurisdictions to which our attention has been called. And if we be called upon to assign a reason for this salutary rule, that reason would be that the taxing power of the state should be exercised with the utmost openness and fairness, and without opportunity for "jockeying" and "logrolling." In other words, the courts of the country generally, in matters which go to the exercise of the taxing power of the state, have been exceedingly cautious to see that such power was exercised by a fair expression at the election held for such purpose. The question is not whether a constitutional mandate has been followed, but whether the proposition submitted is one which tended within itself and upon its face to induce "jockeying" and "logrolling" in order to carry a combined proposition. That extremely anxious to have voted a large sum for buildings in that ward, it would be easy to have a proposition submitted to make nominal improvements in the other four wards in order, by "jockeying" and "logrolling," to secure the necessary votes. Against this proposition the courts of this state, and in my judgment in most other states, have turned a deaf ear. Yet that is the proposition that confronts us in the present case.

As expressive of the latest views on this proposition, this court, in the case of State ex rel. v. Wilder, 217 Mo. 281, 116 S. W. 1087, said: "But there is another reason why a peremptory writ should not be awarded in this case, and that is that the proposition submitted to the voters embraced two separate and distinct propositions; one for the construction of a public sanitary sewer in district No. 7, in West Joplin, and another for the construction of a storm sewer in Willow Branch district, in said city. In the way this was submitted to the voters they had no alternative than to vote, if they voted at all, for or against both propositions. They could not vote for one and against the other, however much they might have desired to do so. In State ex rel. v. Allen, 186 Mo. 673, 85 S. W. 531, the proposition voted upon at the election was 'for said city to become indebted in the sum of twelve thousand dollars in excess of its annual revenue for the following purposes, to wit: Forty-five hundred dollars to be used for the purpose of purchasing a site and the erection and construction of a public building thereon or the purchase of a site and building to be used as a city hall, city prison and hose house and for furnishing the same, and the further sum of seventy-five hundred dollars to be used in making repairs and improvements in waterworks and electric light plant and extension of water mains and electric lines belonging to said city.' This was all submitted as a single proposition. It was held that this submission contained at least two separate and distinct propositions, one for an increase of municipal indebtedness to a certain amount for one purpose, and one for an increase of municipal indebtedness for another and different purpose, and 'that two propositions cannot be united in the submission so as to have one expression of the vote answer both propositions, as voters thereby might be induced to vote for both propositions who would not have done so if the questions had been submitted singly' (21 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law [2d Ed.] 47), a principle recognized by this court in the recent case of State ex rel. v. Allen, 178 Mo. 555, 77 S. W. 868. The voters should have been given the opportunity to vote for and against each object. As submitted, the voters could vote for or against both, but not are not contiguous, nor do they lie in the same part of the city, nor in the same natural drainage area, and the proposed sanitary sewer in district No. 7 would not in any manner connect with, or have any relation to, said storm sewer; nor would the citizens of Willow Branch district have any interest in the proposed sanitary sewer for district No. 7, nor would the people of the city of Joplin, outside of said proposed sewer districts, be served or benefited by either of them."

And in the case of State ex rel. v. Allen, 186 Mo., loc. cit. 675, 85 S. W. 532, cited supra, written by our Chief Justice Brace, the following was said: "That this submission contained at least two separate and distinct propositions, one for an increase of municipal indebtedness to a certain amount for one purpose, and another for an increase of municipal indebtedness to another and different amount for another and different purpose, is beyond question. And it being manifest that such a submission was in the teeth of the well-recognized principle of law 'that two propositions cannot be united in the submission so as to have one expression of the vote answer both propositions, as voters thereby might be induced to vote for both propositions who would not have done so if the questions had been submitted singly' (21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law [2d Ed.] 47), a principle recognized by this court in the recent case of State ex rel. v. Allen, 178 Mo. 555, 77 S. W. 868, the motion to quash the alternative writ was unanimously sustained, orally, by the court en banc, on the submission of the case on the 24th of December, 1904, by which it was, in effect, held that the bonds issued in pursuance of such election were invalid, and the Auditor under no obligation to register them. This opinion is written simply to make that ruling more explicit." Of course it does appear in the opinion last quoted that the writer of the majority opinion in this case did not sit, possibly for the reason that he was not present at the time of the argument, although that reason does not appear.

These, however, like the case in 217 Mo. 281, 116 S. W. 1087, above cited, were opinions by this court en banc. Not only so, but the opinion in each case was unanimous, with the exception aforesaid.

It will be noted that Chief Justice Brace quoted with approval 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 47, and in our humble judgment in so doing he gathered to his case the summarized views of the vast majority of the courts.

From the cases above mentioned, and from all other Missouri cases, it will be observed that we have adhered to the doctrine that doubleness of a proposition to be submitted theory that the voter has not had the privilege of casting a separate and distinct vote upon each proposition, and not on the theory that any constitutional mandate as to the title of a bill has been violated.

To hold that doubleness should be determined by the construction which the courts placed on constitutional mandates can easily be shown to be erroneous. In the first place, courts generally hold under such constitutional mandates that, if the title is a fair index to the bill, and the questioned subject-matter is germane to the subject expressly provided for in the title, then the title meets the constitutional mandate. Yet, whilst this is true, and our courts have so held, who for a moment would say that where the taxing power of the state was to be called into question, the proposition, the purpose of which was to carry the tax, should not be specifically and plainly stated? In other words, in cases of that character the question as to whether or not the subject-matter is germane to the proposition is not a matter of consideration. There can be no such a thing as a germane matter to the proposition to be voted upon in the exercise of the taxing power of the state, however true this may be as to the doubleness of propositions in legislative matters. It occurs to us therefore that the very foundation of all the reasoning expressed by the majority opinion absolutely falls with a consideration of the difference between propositions which involve the taxing power of the state and propositions relative to what may not be germane subject-matters in the title to a bill. At most be it said that up to this opinion nowhere in the annals of the state has such a comparison been made. The rule of construction is wrong. What might be doubleness of propositions in the title to a bill is determined by many considerations which could not be applied to what is meant by doubleness of propositions as applied to questions involving the taxing power. The two questions are akin only to the end that they both tend to suppress fraud. If we were to apply the rule "germane to the subject," as we do in construing the constitutionality of laws, to the propositions submitted in exercising the taxing powers of the state, where would be the end? In our judgment the Missouri cases cited above, together with several others, should be overruled, in the present opinion, if it be correct, so as to no longer be stumbling blocks to public officials in the discharge of their duties.

2. Not only does the Supreme Court of Missouri place this doubleness of proposition on the basis of violating the right of a full and fair public expression upon matters pertaining to taxation, but other courts have been equally expressive.

In Leavenworth v. Wilson, 69 Kan., loc. cit. 78, 76 Pac. 401, that court says: "The subject of purchasing a particular water-diverse from that of building a new one. It needs neither argument nor illustration to make this plain truth apparent to any mind of ordinary capacity. The judgment of the mayor and council upon one of these subjects might well be approved by the people through a majority vote in favor of bonds, although the judgment of the same officials upon the other subject-matter would be overwhelmingly repudiated at a bond election. The ballot required to be used at the election in question obliged the voter to approve bonds for both purposes, or to reject bonds for both purposes. If he favored one plan and disapproved the other, he was allowed no opportunity to indicate his view. Because of the dual ballot persons adverse to purchase may have voted with persons adverse to building, for bonds which, thus supported, carried, although both propositions would have failed ignominiously had they been separately submitted. Therefore the election was not a fair one to the people of the city of Leavenworth."

Likewise, in the case of Gas and Water Co. v. City of Elyria, 57 Ohio St. 374, 49 N. E. 335, the court, among other things, said: "And it is the policy of the statute that the proposition for each separate improvement shall stand on its own merits, unaided by combination with any other measure, and be so acted upon by the council in the first instance, and then, if adopted, be so submitted for approval by the electors that each may be voted upon as a separate measure uninfluenced by combination with others. The reason is that the requisite majority of the council, and of the electors, may be in favor of one measure, and against the others, or against each, while, by uniting them as one, and submitting them to be acted upon in that form, the members of the council, and the electors, are required to vote for or against both propositions combined, or abstain from voting at all, and thus denied the right to express their will with respect to each."

In Truelson v. City of Duluth, 61 Minn. 48, 63 N. W. 714, it was said: "If the city council desired to place a proposition to erect a water and light plant fairly and reasonably before the voters, as against a proposition to purchase the existing plant, the propositions should have been submitted so as to allow a free and full expression on the real merits of each."

A very similarly worded proposition comes from the state of Washington. We say similarly worded because, in this proposition, the first statement made is in reference to a proposition to borrow $25,000, which was followed by a subdivision of the $25,000 into particular parts, as in the case at bar. That court, speaking of such proposition, said: "By ordinance 178 the city council ordered the submission of a proposition to borrow $25,000 upon time bonds, under the act of March 7, 1891 (Acts 1891, p. 261, c. 128). The purposes for which this money was to be borrowed were set forth in the ordinance as: (1) To pay outstanding indebtedness, $20,000; (2) for the purchase of fire apparatus, $1,500; (3) for the purchase of a lot of land, and the erection of a city hall and jail thereon, $3,500. But one ballot was used, 'Bonds, yes,' and 'Bonds, no,' and appellant contends that this was irregular, inasmuch as there were two propositions, involved, viz., a proposition to fund $20,000 of old debts, and a proposition to borrow $5,000 for future purposes. We agree with him in this, notwithstanding the argument of the respondent that the statute is broad in its permission to borrow money for municipal purposes, and that the acquisition of money to pay debts is a strictly municipal purpose." McBryde v. Montesano, 7 Wash. 69, 72, 34 Pac. 559, 560. See, also, 20 A. & E. Encl. of L. (2d Ed.) 1111; 21 A. & E. Encl. of L. 47.

In Lewis v. Commissioners of Bourbon County, 12 Kan. 186, even stronger language than we have used was employed by the court to express its disapproval of doubleness of propositions under the taxing power. "It may be conceded that two or more questions may be submitted at a single election, provided each question may be voted on separately, so that each may stand or fall upon its own merits. But that is a very different matter from tacking two questions together, to stand or fall upon a single vote. It needs no argument to show the rank injustice of such a mode of submission. By it several interests may be combined and the real will of the people overslaughed. By this combination an unpopular measure may be tacked onto one that is popular, and carried through on the strength of the latter. A necessary matter may be made to carry with it some private speculation for the benefit of a few. Things odious and wrong in themselves may receive the popular approval because linked with propositions whose immediate consummation is deemed essential. It is against the very spirit of popular elections."

In the case of Keane v. Ft. Scott, 14 Fed. Cas., loc. cit. 162, the proposition under which bonds were issued thus read: "$75,000.00 to the capital stock of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, and $25,000.00 for the purpose of procuring the right of way for the road of said company through the corporate limits of this city, and the purchase of grounds for depot and machine shops to be donated to the company." The city attempted to defend in the suit upon the bonds in the hands of a bona fide purchaser. In discussing this contention Judge Dillon uses this language: "The objection to the submission would probably have been well taken in a suit to prevent the issue of bonds, but it comes too late now."

3. By petition in this case relator has pleaded and fully set out the different steps taken. Relator has further furnished in said pleadings a copy of the bond, and copy of the questions voted upon, and all other things necessary to show the exact proceedings had by the school district. From that petition it will be noticed from our statement that the school board directed that there be submitted to the qualified voters a proposition to incur indebtedness and issue bonds therefor in the sum of $22,500; this sum to be used for a schoolhouse in the First ward, and furnishing the same, and to erect an addition to and improve the schoolhouse in the Second ward. It will further be noticed from the record, which we have purposely set out at length, that the notice which was caused to be published said nothing about furnishing the new schoolhouse in the First ward, and in that manner departs from the order of the school board. Lastly, when we go to the order for the issuance of the bonds and the bonds themselves, we find that the order shows nothing as to dividing the funds for two separate purposes, but the bonds themselves say on their face: "This bond is one of a series of like tenor issued for the purpose of providing funds for the erection of a school building in and for said school district of Memphis."

It will be observed that, whilst the proceedings show that two schoolhouses were to be built, yet they issue 45 bonds of $500 each, being the full amount of $22,500, and recite that these bonds are to build "a school building," but do not recite that they are for the double purpose of building one new building and remodeling or rebuilding an old one. Under section 5167, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2700) the Auditor of State is required, when bonds are presented to him, to make a certificate to this effect: "And who shall certify by indorsement on such bond that all the conditions of the law have been complied with in its issue, if that be the case, and also that the conditions of the contract under which they were ordered to be issued have also been complied with, and the evidence of that fact shall be filed and preserved by the Auditor." Notwithstanding this provision of the statute, this court by its majority opinion has sought to compel the Auditor to certify that he had evidence on file in his office showing that, by proper and legal proceedings, these bonds, 45 in number, and of the value of $500 each, had been duly authorized for "a school building."

It was the duty of the relator by his petition to aver facts to show that he was entitled to the relief sought. That relief is prescribed by section 5167. When relator set out all the proceedings, as was done in this case, and the respondent by the first terms of his demurrer, set out in full in our statement, challenges the sufficiency of that petition in every respect, then it be-on this demurrer, to see that all proceedings to entitle the registration of the bonds fully appear. Nor will it do to say that this question was not pressed upon the court. The first brief filed by the learned Attorney General suggested to this court that the recitation of the bonds were at variance with the proceedings in the case, and in the motion for rehearing it is most strenuously urged, and in my humble judgment we have handed down an opinion which directs the registration of any bond which may hereafter be tendered. Throughout the entire school proceedings part of these bonds were to be for one schoolhouse and part for another and yet we say, by the opinion of our Brothers in the majority, that the state official, charged with scrutinizing the proceedings, shall register a bond which recites upon its face that it is one of the number which covers the entire appropriation, and is for "a school building," and not for two buildings.

We have lengthened this dissenting opinion, in the way of elucidating facts, more perhaps than ought to have been done. We thought it due, at least to the public and to public officials, that a full statement of the proceedings which authorized the registration of these bonds should appear.

We are clearly of the opinion, for at least two reasons, that these bonds should not have been registered: First, because of the doubleness of the proposition; and, second, because the bonds tendered for registration are not in conformity, by way of their recitations, with the other proceedings had by the school district.

BURGESS and FOX, JJ., concur in these views, and are of the opinion that the motion for rehearing should have been sustained.

MEEK v. HURST.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1. Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 19*)— GROUNDS—MUTUAL MISTAKE.

To justify the reformation of an instrument on the ground of mistake, the mistake must have been mutual, which may arise from a mistake made by a scrivener, who was acting as mutual agent of both parties in drafting the instrument.

2. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 36*)— GROUNDS—PLEADING.

Though a contract may be reformed and subsequently enforced in the same suit, a reformation will not be granted, unless the elements necessary to justify it are pleaded as grounds for relief.

MENT OF PART OF CONTRACT.

A purchaser may, at his option, have specific performance of that part of the contract susceptible of specific performance whenever a decree will, in the sound discretion of the court, result in equity between the parties.

4. PLEADING (§ 214*)—DEMURRER—ADMISSIONS.

A demurrer admits substantive facts well pleaded, but mere conclusions of law, such as the pleader's construction of a written instrument forming the basis of the action, are not admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 523, 527; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

5. CONTRACTS (§ 176*)—CONSTRUCTION—QUESTION FOR COURT.

The construction of an unambiguous and entire contract, pleaded as the basis of the action, is for the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 767-770; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 3*)—SALE OR AGENCY—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

A contract by an owner of land, authorizing an agent to sell the land on terms specified, and which binds the owner to execute conveyances, and declares that the authority is irrevocable for a specified time, does not give the agent an option to purchase, but is a power of attorney irrevocable for the specified time, and imposes on the recipient of the power the duties of an agent.

7. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 69*)—DUTIES OF AGENT TO PRINCIPAL—PURCHASE OF PRINCIPAL'S PROPERTY.

The doctrine which forbids an agent to buy from or sell to himself is based on the idea of preventing the commission of fraud.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Livingston County.

Action by B. J. Meek against John B. Hurst. From a judgment of dismissal rendered on sustaining a demurrer to the plea, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Davis & Son and Kitt & Taylor, for appellant. L. A. Chapman, for respondent.

LAMM, P. J. Plaintiff claims to have purchased defendant's land in Livingston county by written contract, and sues for reformation and specific performance. Cast nisl on a general demurrer to his first-amended bill, he refused to plead over, suffered judgment, and appealed.

The reformation sought relates to the contract description of the real estate, which is: "S. W. ¼, sec. 14, and 6½ acres out of S. E. ¼ sec. 14. All in Twp. 59, R. 24, containing in all 165½ acres." Referring to the "6½ acres," plaintiff's bill charges said contract description is not the true one, but related to an agreement to sell two small parcels of land, viz., an acre off the south end of the S. W. ¼ N. E. ¼ of section 14, and 4½ acres, more or less, described by given metes and bounds, in the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section. In that regard the bill charges "that by a mistake of the scrivener in drawing said contract" the said two small parcels were described as "6 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres out of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, sec. 14, instead of the true description" as set forth. It is not alleged in the bill that the scrivener in drafting the contract was the mutual agent of plaintiff and defendant; nor is it alleged that the mistake was a mutual mistake of the parties to the contract. It is charged that plaintiff is a real estate agent, plying his vocation at Chillicothe as a dealer in buying and selling land. The record shows the contract was partly in print and partly in writing. Presumably it is a blank form used by plaintiff in his business. While not material to any question to be determined, it is fair to presume, from the usual course of business, that the "scrivener" was the plaintiff himself, who filled out his own blank.

Referring to the phase of the bill anent specific performance, it will not be necessary to set forth the entire bill. In brief, it alleges the contract consisted of two parts, both in writing, bearing different dates, but relating to each other, and both pleaded in hæc verba: the first part reading: "Authority to Sell. No. ——. I, John B. Hurst, of Chula, P. O., Livingston county, state of Missouri, hereby authorize B. J. Meek, of Chillicothe, Mo., to sell the following described real estate, situate in the county of Livingston, state of Mo., to wit: S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ sec. 14, and 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres out of S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, sec. 14. All in Twp. 59, R. 24, containing in all 165 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and to make contract therefor in my name, subject to the condition herein-after named. I agree to accept in full payment of said farm the sum of \$3900.00 net to me, and cure title. In payment of the above-mentioned sum net to me, I agree to accept \$——. All (or not less than \$—— All) cash. I would want \$500.00 to bind sale, balance March 1, 1906. I agree to give possession of said premises Mar. 1—1906. I agree in case of sale to give purchaser a general warranty deed to the above-described premises, and to furnish him a complete abstract, which shall show a fee-simple title in me. This authority is irrevocable for a period of 30 days from its date, after which it can be terminated by giving notice in writing of the intention to withdraw. Witness my hand at Wagon Road date April 25, 1905. [Signed] J. B. Hurst, Owner." The second part reads: "May 9, 1905. Received of B. J. Meek \$500.00, in part payment of my land situated in Livingston county, Missouri, consisting of 165 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, in compliance with a contract entered into by me on the 25th day of April, 1905. [Signed] J. B. Hurst." For convenience, that part of the contract headed "Authority to Sell," of date April 25, 1905, will be called "A," and the receipt of date, May 9, 1905, "B."

The bill is not drawn on the theory there was an oral contract between plaintiff and defendant relating to the purchase of real estate, followed by such possession in (or performance by) the vendee, or payment in whole or in part, or valuable improvements made as would operate to take the case out of the statute of frauds and perjuries. Nor is it drawn on the theory that the written contracts were modified by an after oral agreement, accompanied by such possession and performance, etc., as would take the case out of the statute of frauds and perjuries. Contra, the bill is drawn on the theory that the whole contract was in writing, and consisted of "A" and "B." The pleader's construction of the written contract is set forth in the bill to be that plaintiff had an option to buy the land for a period of 30 days from April 25, 1905, and that defendant desired "to sell the land to plaintiff, or to place the same in his hands for sale," and to that end executed "A"; that on May 9, 1905, it was agreed that plaintiff should buy, and to that end defendant executed "B"; that plaintiff thereby made his choice under "A" to buy in his own proper person. The pleader next assumed that his pleaded construction of "A" and "B" was correct, and, on that assumption, charges in his bill that defendant, under the terms of "A" and "B," was bound to make him a good and sufficient warranty deed on making full payment. He then avers a tender of the full contract price on March 1, 1906; also that prior to that time, to wit, 4 days after the receipt of the cash payment, defendant repudiated the contract, refused to make a deed and tendered back to him (plaintiff) the cash payment, whereupon plaintiff then and there tendered the balance of the purchase price, and demanded a deed, which demand and tender defendant refused. That we have put the right construction on plaintiff's bill is evidenced by the following excerpt from his counsels' brief, viz.: "Defendant is the owner of the 165 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres situate in section 14, township 59, range 24, in Livingston county, Mo. On April 25, 1905, he entered into a contract with plaintiff for the sale of said land for the sum of \$3,900; \$500 to be paid in cash, and the remainder, \$3,400, to be paid on March 1, 1906, and on May 9, 1905, plaintiff, in compliance with the terms of said original contract, paid defendant the \$500 which was to be paid in cash, and defendant executed his written receipt therefor, which receipt shows, in connection with said original contract, that defendant is the seller of said land, that plaintiff is the purchaser thereof, and that said \$500 was paid on said land in compliance with said original contract, made April 25, 1905." The foregoing is enough of the record to pass upon the demurrer.

1. Absent any express averment of surprise, misrepresentation, or other form of fraud, or that the mistake was a mistake of or an averment from which mutuality could be fairly inferred, the bill did not state a cause of action in equity for the reformation of a contract on the ground of mistake; for it is the general doctrine of equity that a mistake common to both is an indispensable element to the reformation of a contract. 1 Story Eq. Juris. (13th Ed.) § 155; Castleman v. Castleman, 184 Mo. 432, 83 S. W. 737; Benn v. Pritchett, 163 Mo. 560, 63 S. W. 1103; Williamson v. Brown, 195 Mo. 313, 93 S. W. 791. Mutuality might arise from the fact that the mistake was the mistake of a scrivener, who acted as mutual agent of both parties in drafting the contract, but plaintiff's bill is dark on that score. It may be conceded to appellant that by the same suit in equity a contract may be reformed and also specifically enforced, but reformation will not go, and the bill will be bad in that regard, unless elements necessary to the application of that equitable doctrine are pleaded as grounds for the relief.

2. But the question of reformation is not decisive of the case; for we take it as accepted doctrine that a vendee (at his option) may have specific performance of that part of the contract susceptible of specific performance whenever a decree can go which, in the sound discretion of the chancellor, will do rounded equity between parties litigant. Attending to the sufficiency of the bill in stating a cause of action for specific performance, we conclude the demurrer was well taken. This, because:

(a) For the purposes of a demurrer, all allegations (not absurd or impossible) of substantive fact well pleaded are taken as true. But this doctrine goes hand in hand with another, viz., that for the purposes of a demurrer these allegations of the bill announcing mere conclusions of law are not admitted; and, akin to the last proposition, there is another, viz., that the pleader's construction and interpretation of a written instrument lying at the root of his cause of action and set forth in the bill are not taken as true on demurrer. To the contrary, it is for the court, not the pleader, to put a construction upon an unambiguous and entire contract pleaded as the basis of recovery or relief, as here. We have so lately and fully ruled this question in Donovan v. Boeck, 217 Mo., loc. cit. 83, 116 S. W. 543 et seq. (q. v.), that further exposition is out of place. This is a typical case calling for the application of that doctrine.

(b) Applying it, we deem the interpretation put upon "A" by the pleader is a strained one. Construed by its terms and plain intendment, it is bare of any element giving plaintiff an option to buy defendant's land. There is no word in it showing their minds met on that proposition. "A" is obviously power of attorney, irrevocable for 30 days, authorizing plaintiff, as defendant's agent, to sell the land, and to contract for such defendant, binding defendant to accept a partial cash payment of $500 as earnest money, or all cash, furnish an abstract showing a fee-simple title, and make a general warranty deed on payment of the balance of the agreed net price by March 1, 1908. In other words, the confidential relation of principal and agent was created between plaintiff and defendant; and, since no man can contract with himself, that relation forbade the use of the authority to sell, to consummate a purchase in his own person. Unquestionably that fiduciary relation could be brought to an end and, in that event, Hurst and his sometime agent could deal in relation to the subject-matter at arm's length, and make any new valid contract they saw fit to make, but there is no allegation of that sort in plaintiff's bill. It does not allege that the relation of principal and agent, once existing, had come to an end; nor does it allege a new contract in that the agent made all disclosures to his principal by giving him the benefit of full information, and that the principal elected to deal with the agent as purchaser under a valid contract then entered into. To the contrary, this plaintiff alleges (and plants himself upon the proposition in his brief) that the instrument called "A," in and of itself, gave him an option to purchase, and that he acted on such option as of clear legal right. In that view of the case plaintiff's learned counsel must be held to contend, in effect, that if Mr. Meek, as agent of Hurst, had entered into a written contract with himself as the other contracting party, it would not have been contrary to good morals, but would have been in compliance with the terms of "A"—a position bad in morals and law, and which learned counsel would concede to be bad when baldly stated as above. We are of the opinion that under the allegations of this bill the payment and receipt evidenced by "B" was a pursuance of the authority given in "A," which in turn implies and presupposes that plaintiff had sold to a third party, and received $500 to bind the bargain.

The doctrine of the law that forbids an agent to buy from or sell to himself is not necessarily based on the idea that such deal in dirt is (to speak colloquially) a "dirty" deal; that is to say, resulted in an injury to or a fraud upon him. But it is rather based on the idea of closing the door to the temptation to commit fraud. It tends to keep the agent's eye single and clear to the rights and welfare of his principal. To allow one acting in the fiduciary relation of agent to buy from or sell to himself is a solecism in the realm of law; for the moral stamina of the average man is inadequate to preserving a fine glow of fidelity to his trust and confidential relation in such transaction, and the interdiction is enforced with a strong hand in courts of justice. Montgomery v. Hundley, 205 Mo., loc. cit. 148, 103

S. W. 527, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 122 et seq.; Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 Mich. 434; Grumley v. Webb, 44 Mo. 444, 100 Am. Dec. 304; Evans v. Evans, 196 Mo., loc. cit. 23, 93 S. W. 969. Under "A" plaintiff had the right to collect the first cash payment; he having power to contract on condition that $500 be paid simultaneously to bind the bargain. Receipt "B" comports with that idea. It is impossible to read it as constituting a binding contract, in and of itself, between plaintiff and defendant enforceable in a court of equity. Accordingly, to entitle plaintiff to specific performance, he must connect that receipt with the power of attorney, "A," and make one contract of the two instruments. He undertook to do that, but to do so puts a construction upon that power of attorney its terms do not import.

The ruling below on the demurrer was well enough. The judgment is affirmed. My Brethren all concur in these views.

SHOHONEY v. QUINCY, O. & K. C. RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
Nov. 27, 1909).

1. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 89*)—DETERMINATION—REVIEW.

Where a petition and bond for the removal of a cause to the federal court is duly filed, and on the record made defendant is entitled to removal, its right is preserved, not only for review in the state court, but also in the Supreme Court of the United States.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. §§ 200, 201; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

2. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 95*)—FILING PETITION AND BOND—EFFECT.

It is not the order of a state court removing a cause that gives a federal court jurisdiction, but it is the application for removal in the form prescribed; and, if the petition for removal, read in the light of the pleadings in the case, show a removable cause, and the bond tendered is sufficient, the cause is removed without reference to the action of the state court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. § 204; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

3. COURTS (§ 300*)—FEDERAL COURTS—JURISDICTION.

A federal court has no jurisdiction of a suit between two citizens of the same state on a cause of action arising within the state and under its laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 847, 850; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

4. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 25*)—RIGHT OF REMOVAL—ALLEGATIONS OF PLAINTIFF'S PETITION—PRESENTATION OF FEDERAL QUESTION.

A defendant by his petition to remove cannot change plaintiff's cause of action as stated in his petition, so as to bring it within a federal law, nor can plaintiff so state his cause of action as to deprive defendant of the right of removal, if defendant by his answer or plea shows that he relies for his defense on an act of Congress or a provision of the federal Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. §§ 58, 59; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

5. COMMERCE (§ 13*)—INTERSTATE AND INTRASTATE COMMERCE.

That a railroad company is engaged in interstate commerce does not deprive it of the right also to engage in intrastate traffic, or relieve it of its obligation to obey the law of the state while so engaged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. § 7; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 20*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Courts will take judicial notice that all trunk line railroads in Missouri are engaged in interstate and intrastate commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 24; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

7. COURTS (§ 289*)—FEDERAL COURTS—JURISDICTION—INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Where a railroad company while operating its railroad in Missouri violates the law of that state to the injury of a person therein a cause of action arises under the state laws, and not under an act of Congress; and hence the fact that the railroad's business includes interstate transportation is immaterial so far as the question of state or federal jurisdiction is concerned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 830; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

8. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 19*)—FEDERAL QUESTION—JURISDICTION.

Where plaintiff, in an action for injuries, stated a cause of action at common law only, and defendant's application to remove the cause to the federal court as depending on an act of Congress was denied, error in permitting plaintiff to take the benefit of an act of Congress, either in his evidence, instructions, or argument, could be corrected on appeal, and did not oust the state court of jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

9. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 107*)—DENIAL OF REMAND—RES JUDICATA.

Plaintiff, a railroad switchman, brought suit for injuries, based on an alleged violation of defendant's duty to equip its cars with automatic couplers that would couple by impact, etc., as required by the federal safety appliance act (Act Cong. March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3174]). On removal to the federal court and the denial of a motion to remand, plaintiff dismissed the cause, and brought another suit in the state court at common law, alleging negligence in the operation and equipment of the engine that was being used at the time of his injury. Held, that the order denying defendant's motion to remand the first cause to the state court was not res judicata of the question of jurisdiction of the cause of action stated in plaintiff's second petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Dec. Dig. 107.*]

10. REMOVAL OF CAUSES (§ 107*)—DENIAL OF MOTION FOR REMAND—FAILURE TO APPEAL.

Where a federal court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, an order overruling plaintiff's motion to remand unappealed from does not confer jurisdiction, which cannot be conferred by consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Removal of Causes, Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

11. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 110*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—APPLIANCES—LOCOMOTIVES.

Since a master is only required to use reasonable care to provide for the safety of his servant according to the character of the business, a railroad company was not negligent in providing a road engine instead of a switch engine for the doing of certain switching in a railroad yard, in the doing of which plaintiff safe for such purpose when handled with ordinary care, though not as convenient or as well adapted to the work as a switch engine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 214, 214½; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

12. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 101, 102*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—"SUITABLE APPLIANCES."

The term "suitable" as used with reference to a master's duty to provide "suitable appliances" for the use of his servants, means compatible with safety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 178; Dec. Dig. §§ 101, 102.*]

[For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, p. 6780.]

13. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 129*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Plaintiff, a switchman, was injured in endeavoring to couple a Leeds coupler, with which the pilot of the engine he was using was equipped, to a Tower automatic coupler on the end of a car. The couplers would have coupled by impact but for the fact that the car was standing on a curve, so that the couplers were not aligned. Plaintiff, being unable to shove over the Tower coupler, which had a lateral motion of three or four inches, with his hand, endeavored to do so with his foot, when the engine came forward without signal, the coupling was made, and plaintiff's foot was caught and crushed. Held that the equipment of the engine with the Leeds coupler, which had a lateral motion of but an inch and a half, was not the proximate cause of the accident, on the theory that if it had been equipped with a Tower coupler plaintiff could have moved it while standing on the pilot, since the lateral motion of the Tower coupler on the car afforded every facility for making the coupling.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 261; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

14. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—STATUTES—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The fact that a Leeds automatic coupler would not couple automatically with one of its kind, and therefore did not comply with the safety appliance act of Congress (Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3174]) did not render the use of such a coupler negligence per se, in the absence of proof that it was not reasonably safe for the uses to which it was put.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1019, 1020; Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

15. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ABANDONMENT OF APPLIANCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence of the general abandonment of an appliance the use of which was alleged to have caused injury to a servant, is not competent, unless the evidence shows, and the circumstances indicate, that it was abandoned because another appliance was safer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 921; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

16. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action at common law for injuries to a switchman resulting from the defendant's alleged negligence in providing a switch engine equipped with a Leeds coupler, an instruction, authorizing the jury to consider evidence that the Leeds coupler had been generally abandoned in determining whether or not it was safe, ing the reason for such abandonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1151; Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

17. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE.

In an action at common law for injuries to a switchman while operating certain automatic couplers, there being no law other than the federal safety appliance act (Act Cong. March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3174]) requiring the abandonment of a Leeds coupler, which did not comply therewith, evidence of an interstate commerce inspector that all railroads were doing away with the Leeds coupler and adopting automatic couplers "because the law makes them" was inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 915, 921; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

18. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—SAFETY APPLIANCE.

In an action at common law for injuries to a switchman while using a Leeds coupler, there being no law requiring the abandonment of such coupler except the federal safety appliance act (Act Cong. March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3174]), an instruction that, if the railroads have generally abandoned the Leeds coupler, and it was not reasonably safe, suitable, and adapted for switching purposes, and the other kind was easily accessible and obtainable, it was defendant's duty to have discarded the Leeds and obtained the other kind, was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1149, 1151; Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

19. NEW TRIAL (§ 66*)—VERDICT CONTRARY TO INSTRUCTIONS.

Where a cause on trial has drifted from the control of the trial judge, and is decided against his rulings, it is his duty to set aside the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 132-134; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

20. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for injuries to a switchman, evidence of the engineer's negligence in running his engine forward a second time after a coupling had failed without signal from plaintiff held for the jury.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Grundy County; Geo. W. Wanamaker, Judge.

Action by Ora T. Shohoney against the Quincy, Omaha & Kansas City Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Hall & Hall, J. G. Trimble, and Willard F. Hall, for appellant. E. M. Harber, A. G. Knight, and Edwin R. Sheetz, for respondent.

VALLIANT, J. This cause was heard at the last term of this court, and a judgment was then rendered reversing the judgment of the trial court and remanding the cause for a new trial. But in going over the case again on the motion for rehearing it was noticed that the action of the trial court in overruling defendant's motion to require the plaintiff to make his petition more definite and certain was not mentioned in the motion for a new trial, although exception thereto was otherwise duly preserved, and we thought the point was sufficiently doubtful to require a rehearing of the case. Therefore the motion for rehearing was sustained.

In the opinion delivered at the last term it is stated that, before answering, the defendant filed motion to require the plaintiff to make his petition more definite and certain; that the motion was overruled; that defendant excepted, and the exception was duly preserved in the bill of exceptions. In the motion for rehearing it was said that there was no such motion filed, and that there was no exception whatever taken to the overruling of the motion. The plaintiff, in making that statement that there was no such motion filed, was mistaken. The filing of such motion, and the ruling of the court thereon, can be shown only by entries in the record proper. The printed record before us on page 23 shows the entries in the record proper, showing that this motion was filed, and that it was overruled by the court, and that after the motion was overruled, the defendant filed its answer. The motion itself appears in full in the only place it should appear, that is, in the bill of exceptions, as shown on pages 27 and 28 of the record, and the exception to the action of the court in overruling the motion also appears in the only place it should appear, that is, in the bill of exceptions, as will be seen by reference to page 28 of the record. The language of the bill of exceptions on this point is: "Which said motion was by the court taken up, considered, heard, and overruled, and to the action of the court in overruling said motion the defendant at the time saved its exception." Plaintiff therefore was mistaken when he said in his motion for rehearing that there was no such motion filed, no such motion overruled, and no exceptions whatever taken to the ruling.

The ruling on a motion to require the plaintiff to make his petition more definite and certain occurs before the trial, and it may be at a former term, when exception thereto can be preserved only by a term bill of exceptions. Whether it is necessary or proper to bring it to the notice of the trial court again in a motion for a new trial is a question that some of our decisions have rendered a little doubtful. In Boatmen's Bank v. McMenamy, 35 Mo. App. 198, loc. cit. 203, the court said: "A motion to strike out part of a pleading is not part of the record, and the court's ruling on such motion must be excepted to and the exception preserved, both in the motion for new trial and by bill of exceptions; and, unless done by both, the exception is lost."

As authority for that ruling the court cites the following cases: Cowan v. Railroad, 48 Mo. 556; Saxton v. Allen, 49 Mo. 417; Margrave v. Ausmuss, 51 Mo. 568; Carver v. Thornhill, 53 Mo. 283; Curtis v. Curtis, 54 Mo. 352; Lancaster v. Ins. Co., 62 Mo. 121; McCoy v. Farmer, 65 Mo. 247; Acocock v. Acocock, 57 Mo. 156. It is noticed that in the above case cited from the Court of Appeals there is no discussion of the question, but the decision rests solely on the authorities cited, and, taking the cases cited in the inverse order of their citation, they run back for authority to the earliest case, or to cases based on the earliest, and decide the point as on that authority. In the first case (Cowan v. Railroad) the point was an alleged error in admitting testimony, and so it was in the second case (Saxton v. Allen), and also in the third (Margrave v. Ausmuss), and again in the fourth case (Carver v. Thornhill). In Curtis v. Curtis the appeal was from an order of the court allowing the wife alimony pendente lite, which, of course, was a trial of that issue. In the case next in line (Acocock v. Acocock) it appears that on motion a part of the petition was stricken out, and this court, after otherwise disposing of the cause on its merits, said: "The action of the court in striking out a part of the plaintiff's petition we will not review. It was not embodied as one of the errors or points insisted upon in the motion for a new trial, and therefore must be disregarded"—citing Curtis v. Curtis, and cases there cited. In that case it does not appear that there was an exception taken in any form to the striking out of part of the answer. In Lancaster v. Ins. Co. what the court said in reference to the necessity of assigning the error in the motion for a new trial was in reference to the introduction of the testimony. In the latest case cited by the St. Louis Court of Appeals in the case first above mentioned (McCoy v. Farmer, 65 Mo. 244) the suit was begun by a corporation as plaintiff, but pending the suit the life of the corporation expired, and on application of the last board of directors the suit was revived in their names as trustees. They filed a new petition stating inter alia the expiration of the corporation, and that they were the last board of directors and entitled, as trustees, to prosecute the suit. The defendants answered that petition, and denied those allegations. Those facts were therefore in issue at the trial, and any adverse ruling of the court occurring during the trial on those issues should of course have been brought to the attention of the court in the motion for a new trial, which was not done, and for that reason this court said they would not be considered.

Those are all the decisions of this court to which our attention has been called that can in any way be claimed to be authority for the proposition that the rulings of the

of those cases relate to the admission of evidence at the trial, or relate to points that arose in the trial. The chief reason for requiring rulings complained of to be embodied in a motion for a new trial is that the trial court should be afforded an opportunity to correct its own error, if error there be, and also to apprise the opposite party of what is complained. But that reason is not of universal application, for example, the appellate court will review the ruling of the trial court on a demurrer which appears on the face of the record proper, although there be no exception. Spears v. Bond, 79 Mo. 467; Hannah v. Hannah, 109 Mo. 236, 19 S. W. 87; Meissner v. Railway Equipment Co., 211 Mo. 112, 109 S. W. 730. In St. Louis v. Brooks, 107 Mo. 380, 18 S. W. 22, it was held that a motion for new trial or rehearing, on the ruling of the court on a motion after final judgment, was not necessary. In Crossland v. Admire, 118 Mo. 87, 24 S. W. 154, the court said: "A motion for a new trial must be predicated upon some error committed in the trial by which the verdict or finding was improper." In Rigdon v. Ferguson, 172 Mo. 49, 72 S. W. 504, the defendant's answer had been stricken from the files, and there was a judgment for the plaintiff. Defendant filed a motion for a new trial. The only grounds stated in the motion were that the court erred in refusing leave to file the answer and in striking it from the files. This court said: "If exception was not otherwise preserved to the action of the court in refusing leave to file the answer, it was not saved in the exception taken to the action of the court in overruling the motion for a new trial. A motion for a new trial relates only to that which occurred during the trial. The ruling on the application for leave to file the answer was no part of the trial, and could not be embraced in a motion for a new trial." In Sternberg v. Levy, 159 Mo. 617, 60 S. W. 1114, 53 L. R. A. 438, the trial court had sustained a motion to strike out a part of plaintiff's interplea. Plaintiff's exception to that ruling was preserved in the bill of exceptions, but not in a motion for new trial. This court said: "The plaintiff has properly saved the right to have the action of the trial court on the motion to strike out reviewed by this court. No motion for a new trial was necessary to preserve this right." In 8 Ency. P. & P. p. 829, it is said: "Errors in ruling on demurrers and motions relating to the pleadings may be reviewed on exceptions without a motion for a new trial. Such errors of law are not grounds for a new trial." And on page 830 the same author says: "A motion for a new trial is generally not necessary to secure a review of decisions on motions one pertaining to the trial or an issue of fact." The above-mentioned cases show the condition of the question as the decisions of this court have left it, and we have gone through them for the purpose of pointing out the doubt in our minds that led us to grant a rehearing in this case. But, after all, we will not decide that question now, because it is not necessary to a decision of this case, since it relates to that paragraph in the opinion delivered at the last term which holds that the ruling of a trial court on a motion to require the plaintiff to make his petition more definite and certain is, when the exception is properly preserved, reviewable on appeal, as to which two of the judges of this Division dissented, and therefore there was as to that point no decision. Besides the point is now unimportant, because the plaintiff's case was fully developed at the trial.

Returning now to the case itself, we have discovered no reason for changing our views expressed in the opinion delivered at the last term, which is as follows:

"Defendant is a Missouri corporation operating a railroad in this state. Plaintiff was in its service in the capacity of yard master in its switchyard in Milan. His duties were, with the aid of other employes under him, to switch cars and make up trains in that yard. In attempting to couple an engine to a freight car his foot got caught in the couplers and was crushed. He sues for damages, alleging that the accident was the result of the defendant's negligence. He recovered a judgment for $5,000 in the circuit court, and defendant appealed.

"There are two acts of negligence alleged in the petition: First, that the engine furnished by the defendant for use in the yards was not suitable for that purpose, and not equipped with reasonably safe appliances for coupling; second, the engineer negligently ran the engine against the cars where the plaintiff was to make the coupling, without having received from the plaintiff a signal to do so.

"Before answering, defendant filed a petition and bond to remove the cause to federal court, on the ground that it was engaged in interstate commerce, and that the action was bottomed on sections 1 and 2 of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to promote the safety of employes and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, and their locomotives with driving wheel breaks and for other purposes.' Approved March 2, 1893 (Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3174]). The petition for removal also alleged that the plaintiff had theretofore instituted a remand the cause to the state court, on the ground that the federal court had no jurisdiction of it, which motion was by court overruled, and thereafter plaintiff dismissed his suit in that court and instituted this suit in the circuit court of Grundy county. The circuit court of Grundy county denied the defendant's petition to remove, whereupon defendant caused a transcript of the record in this cause, as it stood up to that date, to be filed in the federal court, and thereafter this cause proceeded to trial in the state court.

"1. It is now insisted by defendant that the state court lost its jurisdiction of the cause by reason of the petition and bond for removal to the federal court; and since, if that contention is well founded, there will be no use in our looking any further into this record, we will give that point first consideration. If, on the record made, the defendant was entitled to the removal prayed, its right is preserved, not only for the purpose of review in this court, but also in the United States Supreme Court. It is not the order of a state court removing the cause that gives the federal court jurisdiction, but it is the application for removal in the form prescribed by the act of Congress. If the petition for removal, read in the light of the pleadings in this case, shows a proper case for removal and the bond tendered is sufficient, it makes no difference what action the state court may take, or that it take any action, the cause is rightfully in the federal court.

"But a federal court has no jurisdiction of a suit between two citizens of the same state on a cause of action arising within the state and under the laws of the state. Such jurisdiction it has never been claimed has been or could be conferred by an act of Congress, even under the interstate commerce power. Nor can a defendant by his petition to remove change the plaintiff's cause of action to make it different from that stated in the plaintiff's petition so as to bring it under the federal law. Neither can a plaintiff so state his cause of action in his petition as to deprive the defendant of the right of removal if the defendant, by his answer or plea, shows that he relies for his defense on an act of Congress or a provision of the federal Constitution. This we understand to be the interpretation given this law by the Supreme Court of the United States in Colorado, etc., M. Co. v. Truck, 150 U. S. 138, loc. cit. 143, 14 Sup. Ct. 35, 37 L. Ed. 1030. The mere fact that a railroad company may be engaged in interstate commerce does not deprive it of the right to engage also in intrastate traffic, or relieve it of its obligation to obey the reason for saying that the driver and the wagon and team are engaged in interstate commerce as there is in some other instances where it has been so considered, yet if the driver should so negligently manage the team as to run over a child in the street and kill it, the defendant could hardly claim the right to remove the cause to the federal court on the ground he was engaged in interstate commerce while he was doing the deed complained of.

"In the case at bar the plaintiff's petition does not state that the defendant railroad company is engaged in interstate commerce, and appellant complains that that was an intentional omission of a fact to defeat the removal; but, if the petition had stated that fact, it would not have affected the question of removal. The court will take judicial notice that all the trunk line railroads in the state are engaged in interstate commerce, but the court will also take judicial notice that they are also engaged in intrastate traffic, and, if while operating its instrumentalities in this state a railroad company should violate a law of this state to the injury of a person in this state, the cause of action would arise under our state law, not under an act of Congress; and, when that is the case, the fact that the business of the defendant included interstate transportation is immaterial so far as the question of state or federal jurisdiction is concerned.

"The plaintiff's petition makes no reference to the act of Congress. It states a cause of action at common law that would be perfectly good if there had never been an act of Congress on the subject; it is bottomed on the law that requires a master to furnish his servant a reasonably safe instrument with which to work, and on the state statute which makes the defendant company liable for the negligence of the plaintiff's fellow servant. Defendant does not undertake to frame a defense under the act of Congress, if it did, then, under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case last cited, there would be a case for removal, but defendant says that the plaintiff's cause of action is based on that act, which, as we have already said, is not correct. It is argued on behalf of defendant that plaintiff's petition is skillfully drawn to avoid using terms that would give the federal court jurisdiction, yet enable the plaintiff at the trial to claim the benefit of the act of Congress. Whatever may have been the design, the petition states only a cause of action at common law; and if at the trial the plaintiff was allowed to take benefit under the act of Congress, either in his evidence, his instructions, or his argument, it on appeal. It does not go to the point of jurisdiction.

"It is also argued that the Sullivan county case being based on the same cause of action, and that case having been removed to the federal court, and the motion to remand having been there overruled, the point of jurisdiction is res adjudicata. There are some differences between the petitions in the two cases. The petition in the Sullivan county case looks very much as though the pleader had the mind to bring his case under the act of Congress, although that act is not mentioned by name. It states that the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce, which fact, under what we have already said, even if it was the intention to bring the suit under that act, was perhaps unnecessary, because it was a fact of which the court would take judicial notice, yet it is a circumstance to show what the pleader had in his mind; and the petition also stated, which is more to the point, that it was the duty of defendant to have its cars equipped with automatic couplers that would couple by impact, and that it failed to have such couplers, and by reason of the failure the plaintiff was injured. There was at that time no law that required a railroad company to have such couplers, except the act of Congress referred to. Therefore the plaintiff pleaded that act. The plaintiff might have had a cause of action at common law and also one under the act of Congress, and, if he had both, he might have sued on either, or, having sued on one, he might have dismissed that one and brought suit on the other. If in the first place plaintiff had brought his suit in the United States Circuit Court bottomed on the statute, and had afterwards dismissed that suit and brought this one in the state court bottomed on the common law, his position would have been exactly as it is now. The order of the federal court overruling plaintiff's motion to remand the cause to the state court, if it was a final judgment on the question of jurisdiction, as defendant contends it was, it was so only in reference to that case, which as we have said was different from this one. After that order was made the plaintiff dismissed that suit, and defendant does not question his right to do so, or contend that it barred another suit on the merits.

"But what is more important still to observe in this connection is this: The question of a court's jurisdiction over the subject-matter is never settled until it is settled right. If the federal court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this suit, the order of the court overruling the motion to remand the other suit, and plaintiff's dismissing that suit without appealing from that order, cannot give the court jurisdiction. Consent of parties cannot confer juisdiction where the law has not conferred it.

"We hold that the circuit court of Grundy county has jurisdiction to try this cause, and did not err in refusing to order its removal.

"2. We turn now to a consideration of the case on its merits. The petition states that plaintiff was in the service of the defendant as yard master in its yards at Milan, and his duties were to assist in the switching of cars and making up trains; that the cars handled by defendant were, and for a long time had been, usually 'equipped with couplers and coupling apparatus designed and intended to couple with other couplers and coupling apparatus of other cars and engines to which they were to be, and it became plaintiff's duty to attach and couple the same; that it was the duty of defendant to furnish an engine for plaintiff to use in those yards that could with reasonable safety be used for that purpose, but defendant negligently failed to do so and instead furnished an engine wholly unsuitable, not properly adapted, equipped, or provided, as aforesaid, for said uses and purposes, and which had generally by all railroads been abandoned for such use and purpose; that said engine was not provided with coupler or coupling apparatus which would with reasonable safety and convenience, or could be with safety and convenience, coupled with said cars, and was not provided as it should have been with footboards upon the sides or end thereof, upon and for which plaintiff to stand in the discharge of his duties'; that it was a road engine, not a switch engine; that by reason of the defect when the engine came to couple to the car it failed to couple, and it became necessary for plaintiff to go in between the engine and the car to effect a coupling, and while he was there, the engineer negligently without signal to come, moved the engine on with great force, and caught the plaintiff's foot in the jaws of the coupler and crushed it. Before answering, defendant filed a motion to require the plaintiff to make his petition more definite and certain, first, as to the supposed defects in the engine; and second, as to the conduct of the engineer. The motion was overruled, and defendant excepted, and the exception is duly preserved in the bill of exceptions. After the overruling of the motion and the preserving of the exception, defendant filed its answer to the merits.

"The first question on this motion is, Was the exception to the overruling the motion to make the petition more definite and certain waived by the filing of the answer? There are three decisions of this court that seem to answer that question in the affirmative, but it may be doubted if it was a question seriously in dispute in either case. Sauter v. Leveridge, 103 Mo. 615, 15 S. W.

981; State ex rel. v. Bank, 160 Mo. 640, 61 S. W. 676; Dakan v. Chase, 197 Mo. 238, 94 S. W. 944.

"The first of those cases was a suit on two promissory notes; the original petition being in one count. A demurrer to it was sustained. Then the plaintiff filed an amended petition in two counts, alleging in each that the note sued on was lost. Defendant filed first a general demurrer which was overruled; then a motion to strike out the amended petition, which was overruled; then a motion to make more definite and certain as to the time when the notes were lost, which was also overruled. Glancing at the briefs in that case, we see no reference to the motion to make more definite and certain. The counsel seemed to treat it, as well they might, as frivolous. The appellant on that part of the case complained only of the overruling of his motion to strike out the amended petition, and respondent said that if there was error in that ruling, it was waived by pleading to the merits. The only discussion of that part of the case in the opinion relates to the motion to strike out, and, after that discussion was ended and cases cited, the court added: 'The same rule applies to the motion to make the petition more certain. Bliss on Code Pleading, 425a.' That is all there is in that case on that point; and, if we go to the authority cited we find that it does not sustain the proposition, but is rather to the contrary. In section 425, Bliss on Code Pleading, the author quotes our statute, showing that the court may cause the pleading to be made more definite and certain by amendment. Then he refers to other Code states where the statute authorizes the court to strike out a pleading that is indefinite and uncertain or else the fault may be made the ground for demurrer. Then in the next section, (425a) the author proceeds to show how the different decisions and dicta in the different states may be reconciled; that is, inter alia, a pleading may be so uncertain and indefinite that facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action cannot be gathered from it, or a petition may contain statements of evidence which ordinarily should be stricken out as redundant, but if it contain nothing else, and there would be no substantial pleading left if those statements should be stricken out, then the author says they should not be stricken out, and he concludes the subject by saying: 'The only remedy, then, must be to move for an order to make the pleading more definite and certain—an efficient remedy for slovenly, ambiguous, and argumentative statements.' If that is the only remedy a party has to apply to a material feature of his defense, and if he has done his best to avail himself of that remedy, and the right has been denied him, what justice is there in saying that he must abandon his right to have that adverse ruling reviewed by the appellate court, or else abandon all further defense at that stage and leave his adversary master of the field?

"In the second case above referred to (State ex rel. v. Bank, 160 Mo. 640, 61 S. W. 676) there was a motion to make the petition more definite and certain, but it was treated with indifference by appellant, and no argument was made in its defense. The following is all that appellant said in its brief on the subject: 'The motion to make the petition more definite and certain was certainly well taken, and it is unnecessary to argue this point, as it speaks for itself. But the vital point in the case is the assessment.' The case being presented by appellant in that way, the court, without going into an investigation, and without discussion, said that the filing of the answer and going to trial on the merits was a waiver of the motion.

"In the third case cited (Dakan v. Chase, 197 Mo. 238, 94 S. W. 944) what was said on this subject was obiter dictum, because, as said in the opinion in that case, the motions and the exceptions were not preserved in the bill of exceptions on which the case came here. The writer of this opinion feels less hesitancy in criticising what was said in the opinion on this point in that case because he wrote that opinion himself.

"Although, therefore, it appears that we have said in those three cases that the filing of an answer is a waiver of the exception to the overruling of a motion to make more definite and certain, yet upon an examination of them we see that the point was not seriously contended, for there was no discussion of the subject. Therefore we ought not to hesitate to enter into a consideration of the question as though it was a new one. The reason for our ruling in case of an overruled demurrer has no application in a case of an overruled motion to make more definite and certain. When the demurrer is overruled, everything of substance, as contradistinguished from the matters of form and convenience, is preserved to the end, and is subject to review in the appellate court, but in an overruled motion to make more definite and certain nothing is preserved, if it is not preserved in a bill of exceptions.

"We say that filing an answer after a demurrer to a petition is overruled waives every objection that the demurrer could make to the petition, except that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject, or that the petition does not state a cause of action, and our reason for that is that all else reached by the demurrer is nonessential, or does not deprive the defendant of any defense. That the plaintiff is a minor; that there is another suit pending on the same cause of action; that there is a defect of parties; that several causes of action are improperly united; that a party named in the petition is not a necessary party—all that they do not prevent the defendant from knowing exactly what he is sued for or from making his defense. But not so when a petition is so vague and indefinite that defendant does not know what he is to answer.

"It is the duty of a plaintiff to state his case with such clearness and definiteness that his adversary may know exactly what the complaint against him is. Our statute says the petition must contain 'a plain and concise statement of facts constituting a cause of action without unnecessary repetition.' Section 592, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 612). That duty devolves on the plaintiff, and it is one that appeals to our sense of justice and fair play. There are no words in the Code of Civil Procedure more significant of the spirit which actuated its authors than the words just quoted. The requirement is that the facts be stated, not mere conclusions of law. If the servant complains that his master furnished him a defective implement, he must state in what respect it was defective, unless it is a case in which the thing speaks for itself. In Sidway v. Missouri L. & L. Co., 163 Mo. 342, loc. cit. 375, 63 S. W. 705, 714, the court said: 'The theory of our Code is that the facts in a pleading are constitutive, and in order to be proved must be alleged. Pler v. Heinrichoffen, 52 Mo. 333. Every substantial fact which the plaintiff, in order to recover, must prove he must also allege, so that an issue can be made thereon. Lanitz v. King, 93 Mo. 513, 6 S. W. 263. In close connection with the section above quoted follows section 612, in which it is declared: 'And when the allegations or denials of a pleading are so indefinite or uncertain that the precise nature of the charge or denial is not apparent * * * the court may require the pleading to be made more definite and certain.'

"In an early case, discussing the above provisions of the Code in their application to an answer filed in the case, the court said: 'The object of the present practice act was to introduce truth and simplicity in pleadings.' And again the court said: 'The parties cannot expect to obtain an advantage by evasive pleading. If the pleading is insufficient, it ought to be disposed of before going to trial. * * * Indeed the failure or neglect of the inferior courts to comply with the plain requirements of the statute renders it almost impossible to do anything with the practice act now in force.' Atterberry v. Powell, 29 Mo. 429, 77 Am. Dec. 579. Thus we see how important the lawmaker regarded this point, and how important this court has regarded it. The motion to make more definite and certain is the only remedy the opposite party has against a pleading that is so evasive and indefinite as to leave him in the dark as to what issue he must prepare to meet; the motion, that remedy is lost, unless he abandons the case at that point and allows his adversary to take judgment. Is there any justice in that? The appellant may bring us a record showing that the pleading of his adversary failed to comply with that important requirement of the statute; that he resorted to the method pointed out by the statute for relief; that the trial court erroneously overruled his motion; that, submitting, as he was compelled to do, at his peril to the erroneous ruling, he went to trial in the dark, and issues were sprung on him that ought to have been tendered in the pleading—yet we say we will give no relief. How can we say that an error materially affecting the merits of the case was committed, and the exception was preserved in the manner provided by law, and the injury can be remedied in no other way, yet we will not hear it? Such ruling not only places a party at the mercy of the trial court, but its tendency is to belittle the motion, and it does not stimulate care in considering it.

"This court, in Melvin v. Railroad, 89 Mo. 106, 1 S. W. 286, in a short per curiam memorandum, reversed a judgment of the kind just supposed, and said it was error to have overruled the motion to make more definite and certain. If the overruling of such a motion was error, and the party aggrieved has no other remedy, why should we not correct the error? To correct error which cannot be elsewhere corrected is what this court was created for.

"We have no fault to find with what we said in Sauter v. Leveridge, 103 Mo. 615, 15 S. W. 981, State ex rel. v. Bank, 160 Mo. 640, 61 S. W. 676; Dakan v. Chase, 197 Mo. 238, 94 S. W. 944, concerning any of the questions seriously in dispute in those cases, but what was said to the effect that filing an answer and going to trial after the overruling of a motion to make more definite and certain is a waiver of the error, if any, in such ruling does not, on mature consideration, meet our approval and should not be followed.

"The motion to require the plaintiff to make his petition more definite and certain should have been in part sustained, or, if overruled altogether, on the ground that in part it was sufficiently specific, the order of the court should have so indicated, so that the issues to be tried should be limited to those specifically tendered. The petition was sufficiently specific in charging negligence on the part of the engineer, whose duty it was to hold the engine until he received a signal from the plaintiff to come forward, yet who, the petition said, came on without signal. The petition is also specific enough in saying that the engine used was defective in the fact that it did not have footboards on the sides for the switchman to stand on. Therefore the try in his case on either of those theories. There was evidence tending to show that the engineer was negligent in the respect specified, but the plaintiff did not ask an instruction that entitled him to recover for that negligence. The only reference to the engineer's alleged negligence in plaintiff's instructions was on the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence. There was evidence tending to show that there were no footboards on the sides of the engine, but there was no evidence tending to show that the absence of the footboards had anything to do with the accident.

"The theory on which the plaintiff tried his case was that the engine was unsafe because it had a defective coupler, and that is the theory on which he gained his verdict, but the petition does not specify in what respect the coupler was defective, and the motion to make more definite and certain called for such specification. The petition states that it was a road engine, whereas it should have been a switch engine; that it was not adapted to such use; that the coupler on it was not 'reasonably safe and convenient' to be used in coupling cars for switching purposes; that the engine was wholly unsuitable for such purpose. To say that the engine is unsuitable, and that the coupler was unsafe, is but to state a conclusion. It is not a 'plain and concise statement of the facts constituting the cause of action.' Why was the engine not suitable? In what particular was the coupler defective? The insufficiency of the petition in these particulars is clearly illustrated by the facts of this case. The point on which the case seemed at last to turn was that in the coupler on the engine there was not as much lateral movement as in another kind of a coupler in general use. Counsel for plaintiff at the trial said that he had himself just been informed of that defect. If plaintiff thought that that was a defect, and defendant was to be held liable in damages therefor, what justice was there in not requiring the plaintiff to state in his petition the fact on which he relied?

"The ruling of the court denying the plaintiff's motion to make more definite and certain, and allowing the case to be tried on the vague and indefinite statements as to the insufficiency of the engine, was error.

"3. In his opening speech at the trial the attorney for the plaintiff stated that there were two special causes of negligence alleged in the petition; one the drawhead or coupler of the engine, the other the act of the engineer putting the engine in motion without a signal for him to do so. Whilst the testimony was quite voluminous, and wandered sometimes from the real issues, show as follows: Plaintiff was, as stated in the petition, yardmaster in defendant's switchyard at Milan, or, as stated by him in his testimony, foreman of the engine, by which term we understand he meant that the engine should move only on his signal. His duties were to attend to the switching of cars and making up of trains; he was foreman of the switching crew. He had been in the service of the defendant in this capacity at this place about six or seven months prior to the accident. The engine furnished by defendant for switching purposes in that yard was not a regular switch engine, but was a road engine. A part of the time they used a switch engine, but most of the time a road engine. There was opinion testimony of one of plaintiff's witnesses, over defendant's objection, that a road engine was not suitable for, or adapted to, switching. He stated that the engine in question was reasonably safe for the purposes for which it was being used, but was not as safe as a switch engine, and not adapted at all for switching. Plaintiff himself testified that when the switch engine was in the yard they used it in preference to the road engine 'because it was more convenient; better to work with.' Nearly all the cars coming into defendant's yards were equipped with an automatic coupler called the Tower coupler, which was a later invention than the Leeds coupler, and had come into general use by nearly all railroads in preference to the Leeds. The difference in the mechanisms of the two couplers was described in the evidence. The engine that was in use in this instance was equipped with a Tower coupler on the rear end, and a Leeds on the front end. The Tower coupler was so contrived that it would couple automatically by impact with another coupler of the same kind, or with Leeds, but the Leeds would not automatically couple with another Leeds, because it had a solid case head that did not open to receive the knuckle of the other. All of the plaintiff's witnesses on this subject but one testified that the Leeds was an automatic coupler, and that one said he did not so consider it, because, whilst it would couple automatically with other standard couplers, it would not so couple with one of its kind. Two Tower couplers would not couple automatically by impact, unless the jaws of one were open and those of the other closed, and if the jaws of a Tower were open, a Leeds would couple with it as effectually as with another Tower. One of the plaintiff's witnesses explained that, if there had been a Tower coupler on the front end of the engine, the switchman could have opened the jaws of it while standing on the front footboard. But that fact could have had no influence in this accident, because in order to make the coupling, even if it was with two Towers, it was necessary to have the jaws of one open and those of the other closed; if both were open they would not couple. In this instance the jaws of the coupler on the car were already open, therefore if it had been a Tower instead of a Leeds on the engine the switchman would not have opened it, but would have left it with a drawhead as rigid as that of the Leeds.

"The accident occurred in the effort to couple the Leeds, which was on the front end of the engine, with a Tower, which was on a car to be switched. The jaws of the Tower, as already said, were open to receive the drawhead of the Leeds, and the engine, under the direction of the plaintiff, moved forward to make the connection, but it so happened that that end of the car was on a curve leading from the main track, on which the engine was moving, to a sidetrack on which the car was standing, and that condition threw the two couplers a little out of line with each other, and therefore, when the two bodies came together, the Leeds coupler struck to one side of the Tower, and they failed to unite. Then, according to the plaintiff, he got off the foot-board of the engine where he was riding, and signaled to the engineer to back, and when the engine had backed, plaintiff went to the end of the car and endeavored to shove the Tower coupler with his hand into position where it would be in line with the Leeds, but, not being able to shove it with his hand, he attempted to do so with his foot, and he placed his right foot on the inside of the Tower's jaws, standing on his left leg, and while in that position the engine came without signal, and by the impact the Leeds coupled with the Tower and caught the plaintiff's foot and crushed it.

"Thus far there is nothing in the evidence tending to show that the appliances furnished were not reasonably safe when handled with ordinary care. The road engine was not as convenient or as well adapted to switching work as an engine made for that purpose, but however clumsy or inconvenient the implement may be the master is not to blame if it is reasonably safe. The law does not hold the master liable for not providing for the convenience of his servants if he exercises reasonable care to provide for their safety. The master complies with all that the law requires when he uses reasonable care to provide for the safety of his servants; the care required varying in degree according to the character of the business—that is, what would be reasonable care in a business involving little danger might not be so esteemed in another business involving great danger—but the standard of measurement is reasonable care for the safety of the servant under the circumstances. Huhn v. Railway, 92 Mo. 440, 4

S. W. 937; Blanton v. Dold, 109 Mo. 64. 15 S. W. 1149; Friel v. Railroad, 115 Mo. 503. 22 S. W. 498; Steinhauser v. Spraul, 127 Mo. 541, 28 S. W. 620, 30 S. W. 102, 27 L. R. A. 441.

"We find the term 'suitable appliances' used by the law writers, but 'suitable' in that connection means compatible with safety. Some of the plaintiff's witnesses said that a road engine was not suitable for switching, and that was evidently correct in a certain sense, but none of them said it was not reasonably safe. The plaintiff himself only said that the switch engine was more convenient. This engine had been used there for a long time, and it had performed the work of a switch engine with reasonable safety. Whilst some of the witnesses were allowed to express the opinion that it was not suitable, yet none of them ventured to show in what way it was not safe. It would not require a very learned expert to be able to say that a road engine was not as suitable for switching purposes as a regular switch engine—every man of common experience knows that—but when that is said, it is far from saying that a road engine cannot be used for switching cars with reasonable safety, when handled with ordinary care. No witness in this case said so.

"This engine as equipped would have effected the coupling automatically by impact if the coupler on the car had been in line with it. The only reason for the failure was that the car was on a curve. The plaintiff was the master of the operation. The jaws of the Tower coupler on the car had been opened by him, or under his supervision, to receive the Leeds drawhead, and he could have adjusted it to do so at the same time he opened the jaws if he had observed the situation, but he overlooked the fact that the end of the car was on a curve, and therefore his first attempt to couple was a failure. Who was to blame for that? Certainly not the Leeds coupler.

"A great deal was said in the course of the trial about the desirability of having couplers that would not require the switchman to go between the cars, borrowing in that respect the language of the act of Congress regulating interstate commerce, but, whilst the act of Congress had nothing to do with this case, yet, even if it had, this Leeds coupler did not require the plaintiff to go between the cars. The jaws of the Tower coupler could be opened by a device of its own without going between the cars; and, when open and in line, the Leeds would couple by impact. But it is said that the Tower coupler has a lateral movement—that is, it may be moved three or four inches to the right or left, and thus bring it in line with the coupler with which it is aimed to unite—whereas the Leeds has a lateral movement of only about an inch and a half, and the argument is that, if there had been a Tower coupler on the front end of the engine, the plaintiff could have stood on the footboard of the engine, and have shoved it to one side, and thus have brought it in line; and the plaintiff's whole case, as far as it is bottomed on a defect of the engine, was reduced to that point, and on that point he went to the jury and obtained his verdict. But that defect, if defect it was, was not pleaded in the petition, and if it was known to the plaintiff, and considered by him a defect, he did not mention it to his counsel, because, as the counsel himself said at the trial, it had just then come to his knowledge. But suppose it had been pleaded, and suppose it was a defect, that might have caused an accident, the vital question still remains, did it have anything to do in causing this accident?

"The aim was to couple the Leeds coupler on the front end of the engine with the Tower coupler on the end of the car. The engine came forward under plaintiff's direction to make the coupling; the plaintiff riding, as he now claims, on the pilot of the engine. When the contact came, the effort to couple failed because the couplers were not in line. Then the plaintiff gave the engineer the signal to back, and when the engine had backed, plaintiff got off the engine and walked to the car, and undertook to adjust the coupler by shoving it with his foot. Then the engine came and caught him. When the plaintiff was coming forward standing on the pilot of the engine, he expected the coupling to be made by the impact when the coupler on the engine should strike that on the car, and it was not until the contact had come, and the failure to couple had resulted, that the plaintiff discovered the necessity of a lateral movement of one coupler or the other. Then he got off the engine and went to the car. If there had been a Tower coupler on that end of the engine, the plaintiff would have had the choice of moving either that one or the one on the car, and he might have chosen the one or the other; but the purpose would have been served as well in moving the one as the other. If the alleged defect in the Leeds was obviated by the presence of the Tower, where was the danger in having a Leeds? If the coupler on the engine had been a Tower instead of a Leeds, and plaintiff had choice which he would move, it is not difficult to imagine why he would have preferred to stand on the ground to move the coupler on the car than to stand on the footboard of the pilot of the engine to move the other, especially if the engine was moving, and more especially if it was necessary for him to use his foot in the operation, which would involve standing on one leg. But however that may be, the plaintiff makes out no case of negligence on account of the lack of lateral movement in the Leeds when there was a Tower at hand to perform the same service.

plaintiff the jury for the plaintiff coupler attached 'by reason of a play or movement to the other coupler was undertaken plaintiff's foot was by reason of said engine with negligence on the part of the plaintiff was error to submit that issue.

"4. The plaintiff in a preceding case first brought his Congress therein having been renounced by plaintiff, preferred dismissed that case founded on the case a perfect right to action in that plaintiff's learned counsel to avoid saying in this case that calling this an accident, and, since court, as they have wise in so careful. But, having put aside of the act of negligence, they ought to their evidence and the jury.

"The act of Congress engaged in interstate automatic couplers in contact, without requirement between the cars. The plaintiff, as it was before us, was not required to place a guard over the coupling between the cars, yet the plaintiff couple automatically. It did not measure prescribed by the act of Congress is not per se negligence, because it fails to measure the statute. Failure to crossing is not negligence per se, but is so under the law, but is so under the law to place a guard over the coupling per se at Congress by statute under the law, although the Leeds under the ban of the act unless it could be reasonably safe for the plaintiff in this case.

"Sometimes the mechanical device which was used, but had been used in favor of another method of the idea that the because the latter abandonment is competent on the question of safety; but, unless the evidence shows or the circumstances indicate that it was abandoned for that reason, it is not competent, and the jury should not be instructed to consider it. Many mechanical devices that at one time were in popular favor have been generally abandoned because later inventions are more efficient; that is, will produce more for the same amount of investment. This is as true of railroad equipments as it is of manufacturers. Even the air brake, whilst it is perhaps safer than the old-fashioned hand instrument, yet has its economic characteristics that commend it to men whose chief aim in business is financial success.

"All the trunk line railroads in the country are engaged in interstate commerce, and they must all conform to the acts of Congress passed in pursuance of the federal Constitution on that subject. Therefore it is easy to account for the fact that nearly all, if not all, the railroads in the country have abandoned the Leeds coupler. Since the passage of that act of Congress they have abandoned it because it has been considered as condemned by the act of Congress. But that does not justify a court, while trying a cause of action arising under the common law, in instructing the jury that, if the evidence shows that the Leeds coupler had been generally abandoned, without anything to show why, they may take that fact into account in determining whether or not it was safe. But that is what the court did in the second instruction given at the request of the plaintiff.

"One of the plaintiff's witnesses was an inspector of safety appliances of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, and one reading his evidence cannot fail to see that all his opinion evidence was derived from the standpoint of his official connection with the Interstate Commerce Commissioners and the act of Congress under which he held his office. In spite of the objections on the part of the defendant, and rulings of the court sustaining the objections, this witness was constantly (and perhaps unconsciously) conveying to the jury the idea that the Leeds coupler had been condemned by the act of Congress; for example: 'Q. What has become of that coupler [the Leeds]? A. All railroads are doing away with that and adopting automatic couplers. Q. For what reason? A. Because the law makes them.' There was, of course, no law but the act of Congress so requiring, and the court should not have allowed that evidence to go in, but the court not only allowed it, but instructed the jury in the second instruction that, if the railroads in the country had generally provided their switch engines with automatic couplers that would couple by impact without the necessity of going between cars, and that the had generally been abandoned, 'and was not reasonably safe, suitable, and adapted' for switching purposes, and the other kind were easily accessible and obtainable, then it was the duty of defendant to have discarded the Leeds and obtained the other kind. Not only was the requirement of the act of Congress, and the failure of this coupler to meet that requirement, carried by the evidence of this witness to the mind of the jury, but counsel for the plaintiff in their arguments were unable to restrain themselves within their common-law lines. Several times the defendant objected to their remarks, and the objections were sustained, but it did no good; the thought was planted in the minds of the jury, and could not be eradicated by the court's merely sustaining the objection. It sometimes happens that a trial judge is conscious that a cause on trial has drifted away from his control, and is decided against his rulings, and, when that is the case he has but one course of duty; that is, to set aside the verdict.

"For the reasons above stated the court erred in giving the second instruction for the plaintiff. Instruction 3 for the plaintiff contained the same infirmities as above mentioned in instruction 2, and it also should have been refused.

"5. There was evidence tending to show that it was the duty of the engineer to have held the engine in place, after the first effort to make the coupling had failed, until he received a signal from the plaintiff to come on, and that he neglected to observe that duty, but came on without signal. The testimony on that point was conflicting, but still there was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to go to the country on that issue. That question was not submitted to the jury in a form that authorized a recovery if decided in plaintiff's favor. On a retrial the plaintiff will be entitled to have that issue presented to the jury.

"The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to be retried according to the law as herein expressed."

LAMM, P. J., and WOODSON, J., concur in all except paragraph 2, as to which their views are expressed in the dissenting opinion of LAMM, P. J. GRAVES, J., concurs in all, except that in his opinion an exception to the overruling of a motion to make a petition more definite and certain is not preserved unless it is assigned for error in the motion for a new trial.

LAMM, P. J. No system of jurisprudence can be so wise and all-embracing that hard cases cannot be put in matters of practice. Might it have been better to allow appeals from orders overruling motions to make more definite and certain, or to strike out? Much can be said against that plan because it would clog the machinery of justice and breed delay. Now delay tends towards a denial of justice. Justice shall be administered without delay said the Great Charter, and so says our Constitution. Experience-taught, we have reached the settled rule of practice that joining issue on the merits is a waiver of interlocutory rulings on motions and demurrers, except where the petition does not state a cause of action, or there is a lack of jurisdiction of the subject. We should stand by that rule; for we have said so so often that the profession understands our position. If we unsettle the rule, the door is opened wide for confusion to come in; certainty being of the very essence of good law. If the rule inherently and necessarily tended to injustice in the end, it would be different. But it will be found to rarely, if ever, so result.

(a) Take the case of a motion to elect. If causes of action are commingled which contradict each other, and are self-destructive through repugnancy, the point can be saved after answering, for in such case the petition does not state a cause of action. White v. Railroad, 202 Mo., loc. cit. 562, 101 S. W. 14; Jordan v. Transit Co., 202 Mo., loc. cit. 426, 427, 101 S. W. 11. Or if such repugnant causes go to the jury, and a general verdict comes in, a motion in arrest lies. Or if there is no repugnancy, and the evidence sustains the whole charge, what injury is done if the jury be properly instructed? Take another case. If the petition commingle good with bad causes of action, and a motion to strike out, or to elect, or a demurrer on that score is overruled, and a general verdict comes in afterwards for plaintiff, the defendant ultimately suffers no wrong, because a motion in arrest lies. Mooney v. Kennett, 19 Mo. 551, 61 Am. Dec. 576, Christal v. Craig, 80 Mo., loc. cit. 371. Take the case of a motion to make more specific and certain. If it be inadvertently overruled, and issue is thereafter joined by answer, and if the petition states a cause of action at all, the interest of defendant may be guarded in the introduction of testimony, or in instructions, or if, on the trial to the merits, a just result has not been reached, justice can be attained in the trial court by sustaining a motion for a new trial. Therefore, in the long run, no harm is done. If, however, a defendant refuse to stand on his motion to make more specific (lacking faith, maybe), but answers over and invokes and takes his chance of winning or losing on a trial on the merits, that chance, so invoked and taken, waives his motion by abandoning it, and heals the error, if any, in overruling it. Otherwise a court becomes a place of gambling on chances, and the time and expense of a trial are wasted if on appeal we lose sight of the very judgment appealed from, cutting behind it (though it may have been rendered on a fair trial free from error) and treading back and tripping up a respondent's heels on an interlocutory ruling not affecting the merits of the judgment a whit. To overturn a verdict and judgment in that way is not in accord with our practice act. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 602,865 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 628, 812). My learned Brother's opinion explodes, it seems to me, the doctrine of a line of cases, if we rule as he has written. For example: White v. Railroad, supra; Jordan v. Transit Co., supra; Ewing v. Vernon Co. (just handed down, and not yet officially reported) 116 S. W. 518; O'Brien v. Transif Co., 212 Mo., loc. cit. 69, 110 S. W. 705 et seq.; Scovill v. Glasner, 79 Mo. 454 et seq.; Paddock v. Somes, 102 Mo., loc. cit. 235, 14 S. W. 746, 10 L. R. A. 254; McMillen v. City of Columbia, 122 Mo. App. 34, 97 S. W. 953. See, also, the cases criticised by him. Therefore, I dissent to paragraph 2 of the opinion.

(b) Moreover, in this case the attention of the trial court was not called by the motion for a new trial to the error, if any, in the ruling on the motion to make more specific. Such motion for a new trial, as its name indicates, assembles the reasons and grounds for a new trial, and presents them to the trial judge anew in order that he may have one last chance to heal his own errors by opening the case to be heard without error. Under our practice act all motions must specify the grounds the movement relies on. If the ruling on the motion to make more specific was such ground, then it should have been so stated in the motion for a new trial. If it was not such ground, it need not be stated, but, if it was no such ground below, it is no such ground above. If a ruling on a motion to make more specific need not be challenged in the motion for a new trial, then, by the same token, rulings on continuances, applications for changes of venue, motions to strike out, motions to suppress depositions, motions for judgment on the pleadings, or for this, that, or the other thing, need not be challenged in the motion for a new trial, but all of them come here for review, though abandoned by that motion. I do not agree to that. Since, then, by discussing the motion to make more specific in paragraph 2 of his opinion, my Brother necessarily assumes it is here to discuss, it would seem the opinion by implication will mean to the profession that such motion gets here though the ruling nisi be not challenged by the motion for a new trial.

Therefore I dissent to such apparent inferential holding. In all other respects I concur.

WOODSON, J., agrees with these views.

HAYS v. FOOS.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 586*)—RECORD—ABSTRACT.

The record proper must show the filing of the motion for a new trial and the ruling thereon; but an exception to the ruling must be preserved in the bill of exceptions, and not in the record proper, and the fact that the exception has been preserved must appear in the abstract of the bill of exceptions, and, if it does not so appear, the appeal presents nothing for review except the record proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 586.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 539*)—RECORD—STIPULATION—RULES OF COURT.

It is not within the power of counsel, by agreement, either expressed or implied, to obviate the requirements of the rules of the Supreme Court as to the contents of the record on appeal.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Nodaway County.

Action by James T. Hays against James C. Foos. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

B. R. Martin and Anothony & Ford, for appellant. John M. Dawson, for respondent.

GRAVES, J. This is an action under section 650, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 667), to quiet title to about 2½ acres of land in Nodaway county, Mo.

The chief error assigned is that the trial court misjudged the facts in evidence. Respondent challenges the abstract of record on the ground that appellant's abstract fails to set out all the evidence. It will not be necessary to go into this contention, for the reason that in underaking so to do it appears that the abstract before us fails to mention the motion, for new trial under the head of "Bill of Exceptions." In what purports to be "Appellant's Statement, Abstract, and Brief," we find, first, a "statement." This is followed by what is headed "Abstract of Record." Under this heading we find entries showing the filing of the petition and the petition itself, a demurrer and the ruling of the court thereon, the filing of an answer and the answer itself, an entry showing that after the hearing of the testimony a continuance of the cause for argument was made, an entry showing the filing of the motion for new trial and the overruling thereof, and in this record entry it is stated that there was an exception taken to the action of the court in overruling the motion. The judgment also appears under this heading. After these things, which appear under the heading of "Abstract of the Record," as aforesaid, we find the heading "Bill of Exceptions." Under this heading, and in abstracting the bill of exceptions, the motion for new trial, or the ruling thereon, is nowhere mentioned. No exception to the action of the court in overruling this motion is found under the heading of "Bill of Exceptions." It has long been ruled that the bill of exceptions is the place wherein an exception to the action of the court in overruling a motion for new trial should be lodged. Such an exception has no place in the record proper. The record proper must show the filing of the motion, and the action of the court thereon; but, if an exception to the action of the court is to be taken, it must be preserved in the bill of exceptions, and in abstracting such bill of exceptions the fact that the exception has been preserved must appear. It does not so appear in this record. For this reason the case is only here upon the record proper. Whilst counsel for respondent have not raised the question, yet in undertaking to enforce our rules we must see that the record is in proper shape. If counsel by expressed agreement, or even a tacit agreement, can obviate our rules, the efficacy thereof would be destroyed. It is not within the power of counsel by agreement, either expressed or implied, to obviate the provisions of the rules of this court. Those rules were established with the purpose of facilitating the business of the court, and to permit counsel to obviate the effect thereof by either a tacit or expressed agreement would leave the court powerless.

So that in this case we hold that there is nothing before us except the record proper, and this alone can we consider. Reno v. FitzJarrell, 163 Mo., loc. cit. 413, 63 S. W. 808; Clay v. Union Wholesale Publishers Co., 200 Mo., loc. cit. 672, 673, 98 S. W. 575; Stark v. Zehnder, 204 Mo., loc. cit. 448, 102 S. W. 992; Gilchrist v. Bryant, 213 Mo., loc. cit. 443, 111 S. W. 1128; Harding v. Bedoll, 202 Mo., loc. cit. 629, 100 S. W. 638. A number of other cases along the same line might be cited, because in this court they have been numerous. This, however, is sufficient to explain to the profession that there is a difference between what is nominated the record proper and the bill of exceptions. Not only so, but there is a difference in what is the nominated abstract of the record proper, and the abstract of the bill of exceptions.

Examining the record proper in this case, it is shown that the judgment is one which could have properly been entered upon the pleadings therein. In other words, the pleadings were broad enough, if proper proof had been made, to sustain the judgment. We are precluded to go into the proof by reason of the fact of the deficient abstract of the bill of exceptions. Being so precluded, we are bound by the record proper.

For the reasons aforesaid, the judgment should be, and is, affirmed. All concur.

NALL et al. v. CONOVER.

(Supreme Court of Missouri. Division No. 1.
Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. QUIETING TITLE (§ 10*)—TITLE OF PLAINTIFF—SUFFICIENCY—COMMON SOURCE.

Where, in a suit under Rev. St. 1890, § 650 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 667), to quiet title there was an agreed common source of title or both parties assumed a common source of title, plaintiff need not as a general rule go back of the common source in establishing his case, but, where he relies on a paper title from the government, he must show an adequate and complete paper title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 61*)—SWAMP LANDS—SALES.

Under Act March 1, 1855 (Laws 1855, p. 154), permitting the sale of swamp lands, requiring the issuance of a certificate of purchase and triplicate receipts on the presentation of the certificate of purchase and the payment of the price and providing for the issuance of a patent to the purchaser on filing the receipt with the required abstract, one relying on the purchase of swamp lands who merely shows the issuance of a certificate of purchase, without attempting to prove payment and the issuance of the receipt and patent, fails to establish any legal or equitable title which will support an action to quiet title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 192-213; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

3. QUIETING TITLE (§ 10*)—TITLE OF PLAINTIFF—COMMON SOURCE OF TITLE.

Where, in a suit to quiet title, plaintiff claimed under a certificate of purchase of swamp land issued to a third person, and defendant proved a title bond executed by the third person and another to a grantee, and title through him, there was no admitted or assumed common source of title, and plaintiff, relying on a paper title from the government, must fail unless his title was complete.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 11*)—LIMITATIONS AGAINST COUNTIES.

Limitations run against a county and in favor of one in adverse possession of its swamp lands.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 35-39; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 16*)—ACTS OF OWNERSHIP.

In 1872 a grantee in a warranty deed of 400 acres in one tract entered into possession and cleared a part and claimed the whole. In 1870 he conveyed the entire tract to his son, who for more than 10 years actually claimed title to the whole and lived thereon and cultivated a part thereof. He obtained from another part his rails for his entire farm, and he also cut and sawed timber therefrom, and he paid taxes on the whole tract. His successors in title paid taxes. Held to establish title by adverse possession.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pemiscot County; Henry C. Riley, Judge.

Action by Fannie Nall and others against J. R. Conover. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Jere S. Gossom and S. J. Corbett, for appellants. Ward & Collins, for respondent.

GRAVES, J., Plaintiffs, the heirs at law of Robert C. Nall, deceased, bring this action under section 650, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 667), to have the court declare their interest in and to 80 acres of land in Pemiscot county. The petition is practically in usual form. Therein they allege that Robert C. Nall was the owner in fee simple of this land, and died so seised thereof, and aver that they, his heirs at law, are now "the absolute owners in fee simple and claim that title" to the real estate mentioned. They charge that defendant claims some title, estate, or interest in the land; the nature of such claim being unknown. They then ask the court to ascertain and determine title. By answer the defendant first denies that plaintiffs were owners of the land, and admits that he claims title thereto, and avers that he is the owner thereof in fee. For a second count in the answer, denominated "Another and counterclaim," the defendant sets up what is usually found in a petition under section 650, and winds up with the usual prayer for the court to ascertain and determine title. Reply was general denial of all new matter in the answer. The cause was tried before the court. By its judgment the court found and decreed the title to be in defendant, and, from such judgment, the plaintiff has appealed.

Plaintiffs, to make their case, introduced in evidence the act approved March 28, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 251), making Carleton's Abstract Books, or certified copies of the entries therein contained, evidence of land titles of Pemiscot county. There were four entries from these abstract books introduced by plaintiffs, only one of which may be required to be noted in detail. Entry No. 1 shows that the land in dispute passed by act of Congress to the state of Missouri, said act of Congress of date September 28, 1850 (Act Sept. 28, 1850, 9 Stat. 519, c. 84). Entry No. 2 shows title passing from the state to Pemiscot county by patent dated December 24, 1875. Entry No. 3 thus reads: "Pemiscot County to Thomas C. Powell, Certificate of Entry No. 951, dated May 8, 1858; consideration $100.00; recorded in Register's Book No. 1, at page 34; lands conveyed, the West half of the North West quarter of Section No. 17, in Township No. 17 North, of Range No. 13 East." Entry No. 4 shows a warranty deed from Thomas C. Powell and wife to Robert C. Nall, dated October 24, 1859. Plaintiffs then showed the death of Robert C. Nall on December 18, 1879, and that they were his lawful heirs and rested their case.

Powell to William Johnson. Title Bond. Dated August 15, 1857. Filed and recorded March 18, 1858. Book A. Page 535. Consideration \$480.00. Acknowledgment regular. The above Bond is for the Northwest quarter of Section 17, Township 17, Range 13, East. Containing 160 acres." Then a warranty deed from Jesse Huffman and wife to John Cotton of date January 25, 1872, conveying this and other lands. By his deed of September 22, 1879, John Cotton conveyed the same lands to Milliard F. Cotton. Milliard F. Cotton conveyed the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 17, township 17, range 13 E., to S. N. McAdow. This includes the land in dispute in this case. April 18, 1895, S. N. McAdow conveyed the same land to George W. Alvey. May 15, 1895, George W. Alvey conveyed to Nelson J. Ball the same land, except the southeast 40 thereof. November 3, 1900, Nelson J. Ball conveyed the same 120 acres to T. L. Price. May 8, 1901, T. L. Price conveyed the same 120 acres, which includes the 80 acres in dispute in this case, to W. P. Carter. July 18, 1903, W. P. Carter conveyed the same 120 acres to the defendant, J. R. Conover. Defendant then proved by witnesses that Thomas C. Powell admitted that they had received the pay for the land mentioned in the bond for a deed. They also showed by parol that the same land was sold at an administrator's sale of the William Johnson estate, and that Jesse Huffman was the purchaser. In addition to the record title above disclosed and to the facts above stated, the defendant attempted to show title under the statute of limitations. In so doing it appears that most of the active parties were dead. Johnson was dead, Powell was dead, Huffman was dead; in fact, all of the leading factors in the transaction were shown to be dead. It was shown, however, that Jesse Huffman, the alleged purchaser at the administrator's sale of William Johnson, deceased, sold and conveyed about 400 acres of land to John Cotton, which land was contiguous, and which tract included the 80 acres in dispute. This transfer, as above indicated, was by a warranty deed in January, 1872. Later, in September, 1879, John Cotton conveyed the same lands to his son, Milliard F. Cotton. This tract of 400 acres or more included lands in section 18 and section 17, and section 20, in township 17, range 13 E., so situated as to be one continuous body. It is shown by the evidence that John Cotton had built a house and cleared the land on that small portion thereof located in section 20. He had also cleared a portion of the east half of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 18, which corners with the land in dispute in section 17. Milliard F. Cotton upon his purchase took and held the possession of the entire tract from the date of his deed on to the time he sold it as indicated in the record evidence above stated. By the parol proof it was fur-the land in question in connection with the whole tract, hereinabove mentioned; that he actually lived upon and farmed a part of the 400 acres cornering with the 80 in dispute, and that, in connection with said occupancy, he used the 80 in dispute for the purpose of obtaining firewood, rails for the balance of his farm, and, in addition, cut and sold timber therefrom. In addition to these facts, it appears that Milliard F. Cotton so occupied and claimed said land from the date of his deed in 1879 to his conveyance thereof in April, 1895. Tax receipts were introduced showing payment of taxes on this land by Milliard F. Cotton from 1889 up to and including 1895, and, further, that from that time on his subsequent grantees likewise paid the taxes to the time of this suit. There is no evidence as to what John Cotton did toward payment of taxes, but there is evidence showing that he took possession of and cleared portions of the 400 acres of land located in sections 17 and 18.

It must be borne in mind that all the records were destroyed when the courthouse of Pemiscot county was burned in 1882, which, of course, included the probate records and the tax records prior thereto. There is no evidence of a substantial character tending to show that the plaintiffs or any of them or their predecessor in title, ever paid any taxes on this land. There is substantial evidence tending to show that John Cotton claimed the entire tract from the date of the deed from Jesse Huffman, and much stronger evidence tending to show that Milliard F. Cotton claimed title to this land and exercised acts of ownership thereover from the date of his deed in September, 1879.

This substantially states all facts necessary for a disposition of the cause.

1. As a preliminary question, it should be determined whether or not there is a common source of title proven, and, if so, what such common source of title is; for the record contains no admitted common source of title. To the end of fully discussing this point we have set out in full the two record entries bearing thereon. The plaintiffs claim that a common source of title has been established by the proof; that such common source of title is Thomas C. Powell. In this contention they rely upon record entry No. 3 introduced by them, which shows a certificate of entry No. 951 to Thomas C. Powell, as recorded in Register's Book No. 1 at page 34. To this certificate of entry they add the title bond executed by Thomas C. Powell and John H. Powell to William Johnson, the record of which was introduced by the defendant.

We agree with the doctrine of Harrison Machine Works v. Bowers, 200 Mo., loc. cit. 235, 98 S. W. 770, wherein Judge Lamm, in effect, held that the trend of our cases was to the effect that if there was an agreed common source of title, or both parties assume a common source of title, subject to certain exceptions, the plaintiff need not go back of such common source in making his case. It should be added now that, if no such common source of title is assumed, admitted, or proven, then, under section 650, the plaintiff must prove his interest in the land beginning with the government. In other words, if he relies upon a paper title, as in this case, such paper title must be complete and adequate. To start with, the plaintiffs in this case were not relying upon an admitted common source of title, nor upon an assumed common source of title, nor did they attempt to prove a common source of title. When they closed their case, they relied upon what they thought was a clear paper title, when supplemented by proof of the death of deceased and proof that they were the legal heirs of the last grantee in their chain of title. Had they stopped there, as they did, and the defendants stopped at the same point, and had there been a missing link from their chain, the court could not have declared title in them. The question now is: Was there a missing link in the chain of title as evidenced by the record evidence, and, further, if so, has the defendants' evidence supplemented theirs so as to change the result?

Let us take first the paper title of the plaintiffs. One link of that title was a register's certificate under the act approved March 1, 1855 (Laws 1855, p. 154). Section 4 of that act reads: "When any of said lands shall be sold in any of the modes pointed out in this act, the register shall make triplicate certificates of the fact, describing the land so sold by its numbers and quantity, to whom sold, and the amount of the purchase money per acre, and in the aggregate—one of which certificates he shall deliver to the purchaser, file one in his office, and transmit the other to the register of lands at Jefferson City, with an abstract containing the number of the certificate, the name of the purchaser, the number of the land, and the amount of purchase money." From the certificate, or, rather, the copy from Carleton's Abstract Books, it would appear that Thomas C. Powell had taken the first step toward purchasing the land in question. But section 5 of the same act provides a further step to be taken. This section reads: "When a certificate of purchase shall be presented to the receiver of public moneys, and the money paid, he shall issue triplicate receipts to the purchaser, stating the numbers and quantity of the land, the name of the purchaser, and the amount paid per acre, and in the aggregate—one of which receipts shall be delivered to the purchaser, one filed in his office, and the other transmitted to the register of lands at Jefferson City, with such an abstract as is required to be transmitted by the register in the next preceding section." And section 6 of the same act further provides: "Upon the receipt of said certificates, receipts and abstracts at the office of register of lands at Jefferson City, agreeing with each other, the Governor shall cause a patent to be issued to the purchaser for the lands he shall have purchased." The record in this case fails to show any patent to Powell. It fails to show any compliance with section 5 of the act set out, supra. It only shows that under section 4 of the act, supra, Powell selected or located the land as a purchaser. Of course, had it been proved that Powell in pursuance of his selection or location as evidenced by the certificate of the register had followed it up by a payment of the amount to the receiver of public moneys as provided in section 5, then there would have been in him an equitable title, even though a patent had not issued as provided for by section 6, supra. But such is not this case. Two questions are here presented: (1) Is the register's book of selections or locations such a book affecting land titles as was contemplated by the act of 1901, which made Carleton's Abstracts evidence of title; and (2), even if it is such a book, does the mere selection or location for purchase of a tract of land evidence any title, either legal or equitable, until something further is done? An examination of the act approved March 1, 1855, will show that it relates to ten counties of which Pemiscot is one. The act provides that as to all the counties named therein, except Scott, Dunklin, and Pemiscot, the county clerk shall be ex officio register of lands, and the county treasurer shall be ex officio receiver of public moneys. In the three excepted counties—i. e., Scott, Dunklin, and Pemiscot—a register of lands and a receiver of public moneys were to be elected by the voters. They were required to give bond, but not a word said about their keeping a record either public or private. Not being a record required to be kept by law, we hardly see how a mere abstract thereof can be made evidence of land titles, any more than the abstract of any other private record or memoranda. Nor do we think that when the act of 1901, together with its preamble, was passed, that it was intended to make Carleton's Abstract Books evidence of title further than they undertook to abstract instruments effecting titles which were required to be made public by record. But we need not pass upon this question now. The other matter is fatal to the paper title of plaintiffs. The only thing that plaintiffs claim is a certificate of purchase as provided in section 4, supra. These certificates are made out in triplicate, one going to the purchaser, one to be retained by the register, and one to be sent to the register of lands at Jefferson City. No provision here for any other record, except the copies aforesaid. Then by section 5, supra, when the purchaser presents his certificate of purchase from the register to the receiver, and pays the money, then the receiver issues triplicate receipts, one to the purchaser, one to be retained at his office and the other to be transmitted to the register of lands at Jefferson City. Then by section 6, supra, if the certificate from the county register and the receipt from the county receiver as transmitted to the register of lands at Jefferson City agree with each other, then the Governor caused a patent to issue.

It is clear under this law that the plaintiffs failed by their entry No. 3 from Carleton's Abstracts to show either a legal or equitable estate. No attempt is made to prove the loss of the triplicate certificates, for at least one of them should have been in Jefferson City. No attempt was made to prove payment, either from the receiver's books, or from the triplicate copy of the receipt on file in Jefferson City, if, in fact, any payment was made. No patent was in evidence. Had it been shown that the money had been paid, an equitable title might have resulted from that proof, but there is no such proof or even an attempt to make it. Under the proof presented by the plaintiffs, neither a legal or equitable title was established in plaintiffs. Certificates of this character were held in judgment by this court in the recent case of Phillips v. St. Louis Union Transit Co., 214 Mo. 680, 113 S. W. 1065.

2. It thus appears that there is a missing link in plaintiffs' chain of title, and therefore no decree could go for them unless there was a proven common source of title, behind which neither party could go. There is no admitted common source of title, and we think no assumed common source of title, because defendant by way of defense and in support of his cross-bill undertook to prove title by adverse possession under the 10-year statute of limitations. Going to the evidence as to whether or not it shows a common source of title, we find that plaintiffs claim under a certificate of purchase from Pemiscot county to Thomas C. Powell of date May 8, 1858. The only thing outside of the statute of limitations introduced by defendants is a title bond executed by Thomas C. Powell and John H. Powell to William Johnson, of date August 15, 1857, and by parol and record evidence they undertake to deraign title from that title bond forward. Whether they did so or not is immaterial on the question under discussion now. Does this record evidence prove a common source of title? We think not. Plaintiffs claim through Thomas C. Powell alone. Defendant attempted to deraign title from Thomas C. Powell and John H. Powell. There is a difference between a single grantor and two grantors. Plaintiffs claim through one, who had no paper title, and defendant claims through two, neither of whom had a paper title. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that a common source of title was either assumed or shown. Nor was such admitted. In Phillips v. Trust Company, supra, we had to deal with a certificate of purchase in New Madrid county which is one of the 10 counties mentioned in the act of 1855. One August E. Shields had a certificate of purchase. This he assigned to Shapley R. Phillips. The following receipt was introduced in evidence: "Received of Shapley R. Phillips two thousand two hundred and thirty-three dollars and seventy-four cents in payment of land bought of the county by Edward Coleman, Wm. D. Walthrop and Augustus E. Shields, and in final payment of all land they bought at the May Term, of our county land sales, in 1857. Geo. W. Dawson, Treasurer." Phillips was depending upon that receipt in conjunction with his assigned certificate from Shields for title or at least equitable title. Discussing this receipt, this court then said: "It will be observed by reading the register's certificate of sale of the land to August E. Shields, dated May 23, 1857, that Shields paid nothing whatever to John T. Scott, the register, for that certificate of purchase, and the only evidence offered tending to prove Phillips paid the county for the land described in that certificate was the receipt of George W. Dawson, treasurer of the county, dated August 14, 1860. By reading that receipt it will be seen that it does not mention the land described in the certificate of sale, dated May 23, 1857, signed by John T. Scott, register of the swamp lands, but, upon the contrary, it in express terms acknowledges the receipt of the purchase money for lands sold by the county to Edward Coleman, Wm. D. Walthrop, and Augustus E. Shields. No court could be warranted in finding that the lands sold by the county to the three persons named in the treasurer's receipt were the same lands described in the certificate of sale, dated May 23, 1857. The legal import of the language employed in the treasurer's receipt is that those three gentlemen purchased the lands therein mentioned as tenants in common, and cannot be tortured into meaning that it referred to separate tracts of land purchased by each of them in severalty. That being true, then there is no evidence that plaintiff nor any of those through whom he claims title ever paid the county one cent for the land sued for; and it cannot be claimed that Phillips was the equitable owner of the land, or that the county held the legal title thereto as trustee for the benefit of the plaintiff. The county, therefore, having never disposed of the legal or equitable title to the land, she had the perfect legal right to convey it to defendants' grantors."

So in this case it cannot be said that when one party relies upon Thomas C. Powell alone for title, and the other relies upon Thomas C. Powell and John H. Powell, there has been proven a common source of title. Therefore, the evidence failing to show either an admitted, an assumed, or a proven common source of title, and the plaintiffs of title. There was no error in the judgment wherein it held that plaintiffs had no title to the land involved herein.

3. Was the decree right in decreeing title to the defendant? We think so. Concede that plaintiffs have failed to deraign title from the county, and concede, further, that defendant has failed to deraign by conveyances a title from the county, then how stands the case? Plaintiffs claim that the common source of title is Thomas C. Powell, but the evidence shows that they did not rely thereupon, and attempted to deraign title from the government. Taking the proof both pro and con, it does show that Pemiscot county owned the land. It falls to show that by legal conveyance either the legal or equitable title passed from the county. It did not pass to Thomas C. Powell, as we have hereinabove shown. Neither did it pass to Thomas C. Powell and John H. Powell, so far as disclosed by this evidence. But, whilst this is true, the statute of limitations will run against a county. In the case of Dunklin County v. Chouteau, 120 Mo., loc. cit. 595, 25 S. W. 557, it is said: "Distinction must also be made between property held for strictly public purposes, as for streets, parks, commons and the like, and property held by the corporation in its private character. 2 Dill. on Munic. Corp. § 675. This distinction is made in our own present statute of limitations. Rev. St. 1889, § 6772. These swamp lands would not come within the terms of that section, and hence the statute of limitations would run in favor of one in adverse possession, even as against the county." It should be remembered that Dunklin county is one of the 10 counties coming under the act of 1855, as is also Pemiscot county.

Conceding, then, as this case and others hold, that the statute of limitations will run against the county, it then becomes necessary to consider, in behalf of the defendant, whether or not either he or he and his predecessors in title have acquired title by adverse possession as against the county. We need not in this inquiry consider plaintiffs and their immediate predecessor in title because they never acquired even an equitable title against the county. Under the proof, John Cotton in 1872 by warranty deed acquired what he evidently thought was title to 400 acres of land in one contiguous body. On this tract he moved and cleared a portion thereof, claiming the whole. A part of the land actually cleared and cultivated by him was in section 18, which adjoined to the west the land in dispute. In 1879 and whilst plaintiffs' predecessor was yet living, this land (400 acres) was conveyed to Milner and other portions of the 400 acres. As to the land in question, he got for more than 10 years his firewood therefrom. He got his rails therefrom for his entire farm, including the tract in dispute, although the tract in dispute was never fenced. He cut and had sawed timber therefrom. He cut and sold timber therefrom. He paid the taxes thereon, and his successors in title have paid the taxes thereon since his conveyance. Plaintiffs and their predecessor in title have paid no taxes, as shown by the evidence. There are some general statements of paying taxes upon this and other lands owned by Mr. Nail, but no county officer could find a record thereof, and the testimony is nothing more than mere hearsay. Under the evidence in this record, we are of opinion that when John Cotton in 1872 took possession of this tract of 400 acres, including the land in dispute under a warranty deed from Jesse Huffman, he took possession of the whole tract, and, when his son followed in the possession in 1879, he likewise was in the possession of the whole tract, and that prior to the time Milliard F. Cotton conveyed a complete title under the statute of limitations had ripened in him, and, when he conveyed, he conveyed a complete title in fee simple, which title has regularly passed by mesne conveyances to the defendant herein.

So believing, the judgment below is correct, and should be and is, affirmed. All concur.

BERRY v. ST. LOUIS & S. F. R. CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. RELEASE (§ 52*)—SUFFICIENCY OF REPLY
RAISING ISSUE OF FRAUD.

A reply tendering to defendants the amount received by plaintiff for a release set up in the answer, and alleging that the release was obtained by coercion, fraud, and deception used by defendants by and through a claim agent named and another; that they told plaintiff her lawyer had gone back on her; that her neighbors and friends were all going to testify against her; that they would pay her lawyer; all of which statements were untrue; and that she, being old and poor, was finally scared and persuaded by them into the settlement, and that she was led to believe that the paper she signed contained stipulations to the effect that defendants would pay her lawyer, which it did not; and that the alleged settlement was not the one she understood she was making; and that her actual damages were in excess of the amount in the settlement—was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. § 92; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

2. JURY (§ 10*)—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL—CONSTITUTIONAL GUARANTY—CONSTRUCTION.

The provision of Const. art. 2, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 162), that "the right of trial by jury, as heretofore enjoyed, shall remain inviolate" means that, if prior to the adoption of the Constitution defendant by law or practice is entitled to a jury, such right must remain inviolate, and the only inhibition on the Legislature was to prevent depriving a party of a jury trial where he had theretofore enjoyed the right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 15, 16; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

3. JURY (§ 13*)—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL—ISSUE OF FRAUD AS TO RELEASE SET UP IN ANSWER.

Rev. St. 1899, § 654 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 670), permitting a reply alleging that a release set up in the answer was fraudulently procured from plaintiff, and that the issue thus raised shall be submitted to the jury, is not violative of Const. art. 2, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 102), providing that the right of trial by jury "as heretofore enjoyed" shall remain inviolate, since such an issue was triable by jury before the adoption of such constitutional provision.

Appeal from Circuit Court, New Madrid County; Henry C. Riley, Judge.

Action by Julia A. Berry against the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant above named appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Evans and Moses Whybark, for appellant.

GRAVES, J. The plaintiff originally brought her suit against the St. Louis, Memphis & Southeastern Railroad Company. Petition, filed to the March term, 1905, of the New Madrid circuit court, was in two counts. By the first she sought to recover damages to crops growing on certain lands belonging to her by reason of defects in the right of way fences belonging to defendant. Damages were alleged in the sum of $600 and judgment asked in double that sum. By the second count damages were sought in the sum of $50 to be doubled under the statute for injury to a horse alleged to have been occasioned by the negligent construction of a farm crossing. Upon this count verdict went for the defendant, and further notice need not be taken. Later, and at the March term of said court, the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company was on motion of plaintiff made a party defendant. At the September term following, defendants answered, by the terms of which answer they denied the charges in both counts contained, and, further answering, averred that the suit had been fully settled for $130 and the money paid to plaintiff by the last-named defendant, specifically pleading a stipulation signed by the plaintiff acknowledging the payment of the $130, and agreeing that the suit abate and be dismissed at the costs of defendant. Then follows averments to the effect that the first-named defendant was the owner of the road, but that the latter defendant had operated the same since June 1, 1904; that said settlement was in satisfaction of plaintiff's claims as to both defendants, but that she thereafter sued the latter defendant for the same causes of action which had been thus settled. To this answer the plaintiff filed the following reply: "Comes now the plaintiff, and first tenders to the defendant the amount received in the alleged settlement, and says that said settlement was obtained by coercion, fraud, and deception used by the defendants by and through J. O. Livesay, claim agent, and W. E. Robertson; that they told her her lawyer had gone back on her; that her neighbors and friends were all going to testify against her; that they would pay her lawyer, all of which statements as made were untrue, and that she, being old and poor, was finally scared and persuaded by said parties into said settlement, and that she was led to believe that the paper signed by her contained stipulations to the effect defendants were to pay her lawyer, which it does not contain, and that said alleged settlement is not in fact the one that she understood she was making; that her actual damages in said matters were in excess of said amount in said settlement; and, having made reply, again asks for judgment." To this replication defendants demurred, and, when the same was overruled, duly excepted. At the September adjourned term of said court for the year 1905, the plaintiff dismissed as to the first defendant, and the trial proceeded as to the remaining defendant, the appellant here. Verdict upon a trial before a jury was returned for plaintiff on the first count for $350. Upon the second count the verdict was for defendant. On motion of plaintiff the damages were doubled and judgment accordingly entered for $700. Later and at the same term, and whilst the motion for new trial was pending, the plaintiff remitted the sum of $135.90, and a new judgment for $564.10 was entered, and the motion for new trial overruled. Defendant excepted to both acts of the court; i. e., that of permitting the remittitur, and the act of overruling the motion for new trial. Within proper time motion in arrest of judgment was filed and overruled, defendant excepting. When the case was called for trial, the defendant requested that the matter of settlement set up in the answer and the issues thereon made in the reply be tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, and in such request it is charged that section 654, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 670), in so far as it undertakes to make such an issue triable by a jury violates section 28, art. 2, Const. Mo. (Ann. St. 1906, p. 162). This was overruled and the whole case submitted to the jury.

This and kindred questions are the only questions urged in the elaborate and excellent brief filed by the defendant. Plaintiff has not favored us with a brief. The questions urged therefore are purely questions of law.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

1. To what has been said in the statement it should be added that to the reply a demurrer was filed and the court overruled the same. This demurrer charged that the replication failed to state sufficient facts to constitute a defense to the new matter set up in the answer. This, to our mind, is only one way of stating the real issue between these parties. Defendant claims that section 654, Rev. St. 1899, is invalid, and for that reason the question of fraud, as pleaded in this reply, could only be heard in a court of equity, and not in a court of law and before a jury. If, however, it is meant that the replication does not state a proper defense in either branch of the court, equity or law, we cannot give our assent to the insistence. The replication pleads facts properly raising the issue of fraud in the procurement of the settlement and release. To this end, we have purposely set it out. The replication charges certain representations which induced the settlement. It then charges the falsity of these representations and the reliance of the plaintiff thereon. Not only so, but there is a tender of the sum so paid in settlement. The reply was at least a proper defense to the new matter (the settlement) pleaded in the answer. Whether such matter should have been tried before a chancellor or a jury remains to be seen. Suffice it to say for the present that the reply was sufficient to raise the issue of fraud in the procurement of the settlement, and the question of the forum for the trial of the issue we will consider in due order. Cases cited by appellant are not opposed to the idea that this reply properly presented an issue of fraud, which is cognizable in some court. We therefore pass to the real question urged in this case.

2. As indicated above, the real issue urged by the defendant in this case is the unconstitutionality of section 654, Rev. St. 1899, which section reads: "Whenever a release, composition, settlement or other discharge of the cause of action sued on shall be set up or pleaded in the answer in bar to plaintiff's cause of action sued on, it shall be permissible in the reply to allege any facts showing or tending to show that said release, composition, settlement or other discharge was fraudulently or wrongfully procured from plaintiff, and the issue or issues thus raised shall be submitted with all the other issues in the case to the jury, and a general verdict or finding upon all the issues, including the issue or issues of fraud so raised, shall be sufficient." This section appears as a new section in the revision of 1899. It will serve no good purpose to rehearse at length the diverse opinions of this court prior to the enactment of this section. The section evidently had its origin in the opposing views of the judges of this court prior to its enactment. Girard v. St. Louis Car Wheel Co., 123 Mo. 358, 27 S. W. 648, 25 L. R. A. 514, 45 Am. St. Rep. 556; McFarland

v. Mo. Pac. Ry. Co., 125 Mo. 253, 28 S. W. 590; Och v. Railway Co., 130 Mo. 27, 31 S. W. 962, 36 L. R. A. 442; Homuth v. Street Ry. Co., 129 Mo. 629, 31 S. W. 903. These various cases and others which might be cited evinced varying views among the members of this court as to what matters of fraud were cognizable before the law side of the trial court and what matters should be heard in equity. Releases of different character were submitted by the trial courts to juries, and thus the division of opinion. These varying views run up to the date, or practically so, of this statute, and the statute was no doubt passed to meet the emergency. But, be that as it may, this statute is challenged on the ground that it is violative of section 28, art. 2, Const. Mo. This section of the Constitution reads: "The right of trial by jury, as heretofore enjoyed, shall remain inviolate; but a jury for the trial of criminal or civil cases, in courts not of record, may consist of less than twelve men, as may be prescribed by law. Hereafter a grand jury shall consist of twelve men, any nine of whom concurring may find an indictment or a true bill." The defendant, after invoking this section of the Constitution, says that its right to a trial by jury, where there has been executed a release which is pleaded in bar of an action, and fraud in the execution thereof is alleged by the plaintiff, that this statute violates its Constitutional right, in that it forces the trial of that issue to be before a jury. The Constitution says: "The right of trial by a jury, as heretofore enjoyed, shall remain inviolate." In discussing that right we have held it to mean that such matters that were triable by jury prior to the Constitution of 1875 could not be shifted to the equity side of the court. In other words, the status of what must be tried by a jury was fixed by the conditions existing at the time of the adoption of the Constitution.

In State v. Bockstruck, 136 Mo., loc. cit. 358, 38 S. W. 322, Division 2 of this court, through Sherwood, J., used this language: "This being the case, it cannot be said that defendant has been denied 'the right of trial by jury as heretofore enjoyed,' since whatever was the status of that right at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1875 was the status referred to in that instrument. 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. (3d Ed.) § 892; 3 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 720, and cases cited." Again, in the recent case of Lee v. Conran, 213 Mo., loc. cit. 412, 111 S. W. 1153, Woodson, J., for this division, says: "Section 28 of article 2 of the Constitution of 1875 provides that 'The right of trial by jury, as heretofore enjoyed, shall remain inviolate.' This court, in the case of State v. Bockstruck, 136 Mo., loc. cit. 358, 38 S. W. 322, held that the constitutional guaranty of 'the right of trial by jury as heretofore enjoyed' has reference to the status of that right as it existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. And this court, in the case of State ex rel. v. Withrow, 133 Mo., loc. cit. 519, 34 S. W. 245, 36 S. W. 48, held that said section 28 'means that all the substantial incidents and consequences which pertained to the right of trial by jury are beyond the reach of hostile legislation, and are preserved in their ancient substantial extent as existed at common law.' In order to determine whether the case at bar comes within the meaning of that section of the Constitution as interpreted by those adjudications, we must first determine what the issue tendered by the pleadings is, and, after doing so, we must then ascertain how that issue was triable before the adoption of that constitutional provision. If by jury, then either party is entitled to a trial of that issue by a jury regardless of any statutory provision; but, if it was not triable by jury prior to that time, then the Constitution does not govern, and we would then look to the statutes and the common law for a rule by which to solve the question."

Now, viewing these contentions of the defendant in this light, what do we find? Has it been deprived of any right under the Constitution by reason of this statute? In our judgment the Constitution means that, if theretofore (that is, prior to the adoption of the Constitution) the defendant by law or practice was entitled to a jury, then such right must remain inviolate. Prior to that time some questions of fraud were triable by a jury in a court of law and some by the chancellor in a court of equity. The only inhibition on the Legislature fixed by the Constitution was to prevent the Legislature from depriving a party from a trial by a jury where he had theretofore enjoyed that right. No inhibition is found in the Constitution preventing the Legislature from extending the right of trial by jury. Not a word is said to the effect that the Legislature cannot make matters theretofore tried in equity, triable by a jury, where the cause of action in the first instance was one at law, and the equity only arises by reason of fraud of some kind being pleaded to obviate a release pleaded in the answer. In our judgment the matters pleaded in this reply could have properly been tried at law prior to the Constitution of 1875. Fraud vitiates all contracts, and whether the contract is absolutely void by reason of the fraud, as held in Girard v. St. Louis Car Wheel Co., supra, or whether it be merely voidable, as suggested in some of the cases, yet, if in the latter class of cases the party tenders back the consideration and disclaims the contract thus induced by fraud, then the question of whether or not the release is void or valid may be properly tried before a jury. And we think it was so triable even before the statute in question. The foundation of the present defense is a receipt for so much money in settlement of a claim. Of course, collateral thereto is an agreement to dismiss the suit on that claim at the cost of the defendant. Even under the Och Case, supra, we believe this question was triable by a jury without this statute. It was certainly so under the statute. But, if it was not allowable under the ruling in the Och Case, it was made so by the more recent ruling in Courtney v. Blackwell, 150 Mo., loc. cit. 278, 51 S. W. 676, whereat Marshall, J., in concurring in an opinion by Brace, J., gave special reasons for his concurrence in this language: "I concur in the foregoing opinion, and believe it is the only proper conclusion under the circumstances disclosed by this record, especially in view of the opinion in this case on former appeal, but in my judgment that opinion was erroneous in holding that the issue of fraud in the procurement of the release could not be raised in a reply to the answer setting up the release. In my opinion release is an affirmative defense, and, when pleaded by a defendant, the plaintiff can meet it in the reply by a plea of fraud in its procurement, and this is the rule prescribed by sections 2042, 2052, Rev. St. 1889. The plaintiff may anticipate an affirmative defense of release by a count in his petition setting out the fraud in its procurement, and asking its cancellation, but should not be required to do so, nor should a plaintiff be reverted to a separate bill in equity for such purpose, for the whole question can logically be determined when the release is pleaded by the defendant, if it is pleaded, by an issue of fraud raised by the reply, and tried by the chancellor, before the action at law is tried. For these reasons, I think the opinion on former appeal was incorrect in not so holding, and in requiring the plaintiff to resort to a proceeding in equity or to amend her petition. Gantt, C. J., Sherwood and Brace, JJ., concur herein."

The case had formerly been tried in which the fraud in the procurement of the release had been raised by reply. Hancock v. Blackwell, 139 Mo. 455, 41 S. W. 205. At that time the whole court concurred that the release should be set aside in equity, although several members thereof had persistently opposed that rule in the Och Case, supra, and by the majority vote opposed the doctrine in the Girard Case. In the Girard Case, written by Barclay, J., and concurred in by a majority of the judges, it was held proper to plead the fraud in the procurement of a release in a reply, but in a later case, the Och Case, Burgess, J., who had dissented in the Girard Case, distinguished his case from the Girard Case, and held that the release pleaded in his case should have been set aside in equity. To this opinion Barclay and Brace, JJ., filed a vigorous dissenting opinion. Then came the case of Hancock v. Blackwell, supra, in which Burgess, J., again followed the Och Case, and it would appear that the dissenting judges yielded to the majority in the Och Case. But when the Hancock Case, supra, again reached this court, under the name of Courtney v. Blackwell, 150 Mo., loc. cit. 278, 51 S. W. 668, it appears that Marshall, Brace, and Sherwood, J.J., and Gantt, C. J., concurred in the doctrine that, when a release was pleaded, the fraud in the procurement thereof could be pleaded in a reply and tried before a jury. And be it said that the fraud in that case covers just as broad a ground as in this case. I am of opinion that even under the Och Case, as ruled by Burgess, J., the fraud in procuring the receipt in this case at bar could be pleaded by way of reply, but all doubt is removed by the latter case just mentioned. This latter case, Courtney v. Blackwell, supra, was passed upon at the April term, 1899, and, as section 654 first appeared as a new section in the revision of 1899, it must have been passed about that time. However, the case is not bottomed upon the statute, so that prior to this statute, and without considering the statute, this court has held that fraud in the procurement of a release was properly pleaded in a reply and properly triable before a jury. The statute, therefore, does not go further than this court had done about the time of the passage thereof. The statute does not undertake to abolish all equitable jurisdiction, and has never been so considered by bench or bar. If it did, another question might be here. We are of opinion that the Legislature violated no portion of the Constitution in the enactment of the statute. The other cases from this state relied upon by defendant are not out of line with these views.

Thus believing, and this being the only real question in this case, the judgment nisi is affirmed. All concur.

JONES v. EDEMAN et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. PROCESS (§ 96*)—SERVICE BY PUBLICATION—AFFIDAVIT FOR ORDER.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2022, provides that if plaintiff shall file an affidavit stating that part or all of the defendants are nonresidents of the state, or is a corporation of another state, kingdom, or country, and cannot be served in this state in the manner prescribed in this chapter, or have absconded or concealed themselves so that ordinary process cannot be served on them, the court or the clerk in vacation shall make an order directed to the nonresidents or absentees, etc. Held, that the clause "cannot be served in this state in the manner prescribed in this chapter" referred to the corporation of another state, kingdom, or country, and not to natural persons who were or are nonresidents of this state, and hence jurisdiction may be acquired over nonresident defendants of the latter class, by an order of publication, and ordinary process could not be served on them, and in such case an affidavit for publication was not defective in not stating that process could not be served "in this state."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. § 118; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 171*)—MORTGAGE OF WIFE'S LAND TO SECURE HUSBAND'S DEBT—WIFE AS SURETY.

As it is competent for a wife to mortgage her lands to secure her husband's debt, when she does so, she stands in the relation of a surety for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 682; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 171*)—RELEASE OF MORTGAGE BY WIFE TO SECURE HUSBAND'S DEBT.

A wife's mortgage of her lands to secure her husband's debt is not released on the taking of a judgment against him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 683; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 501*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK—MERITS OF JUDGMENT.

The merits of a judgment in a case where in the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties cannot be inquired into collaterally.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 941; Dec. Dig. § 501.*]

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 238*)—JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

On foreclosure of a mortgage given by a husband and wife on her land to secure his debt, a defense that the mortgage was released by the taking of a personal judgment against him was open to her, and neither she nor he can collaterally attack the judgment by urging such release in a subsequent action of ejectment as against the title acquired through the purchaser on the foreclosure.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Chariton County; Jno. P. Butler, Judge.

Action by Charles T. Jones against Ben J. Edeman and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. H. Waters, for appellant. J. A. Collet and H. J. West, for respondents.

GANTT, P. J. This is an action in ejectment for 160 acres of land, the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 12, in township 53 N., of range 21 W., in Chariton county, Mo. Edeman, the original defendant was the tenant of Lois and Edna Kennedy. The Kennedys were made defendants on their application. Harriet E. Rolfe is the common source of title. Plaintiff's title was acquired by deed from Harriet E. Rolfe and husband, of date May 4, 1905. Defendants' title was deraigned from W. S. Woods, who purchased under a judgment foreclosing a mortgage given by Harriet E. Rolfe and husband to Charles Jewett, bearing date January 20, 1890, to secure the husband's note for \$1,500 of which Woods was the owner at the time of the foreclosure in 1893. Previously thereto Woods had obtained a judgment against Rollin M. Rolfe, the husband, on said note in Oteo county, Neb., which fact appears in the petition to fore-woods purchased the lands at the execution sale under said judgment, on October 21, 1893. In the foreclosure proceedings the defendants were summoned or notified by publication, and the judgment was by default. The plaintiff herein asserts the invalidity of the decree of foreclosure on two grounds: First, that the affidavit on which the order of publication was based was insufficient to authorize said publication; and, second, that the effect of the Nebraska judgment was to discharge Harriet E. Rolfe, the owner of the mortgaged lands. The affidavit alleged that "Rollin M. Rolfe and Harriet E. Rolfe are nonresidents of the state of Missouri, and the ordinary process of law cannot be served on them."

1. Plaintiff insists the affidavit was fatally defective in not stating that the ordinary process of law could not be served on said defendant in this state. This action seems to have been commenced soon after the promulgation of the decision of the St. Louis Court of Appeals in Hedrix v. Hedrix, 103 Mo. App. 40, 77 S. W. 495, which sustained the contention of counsel for plaintiff in this suit but the St. Louis Court of Appeals overruled that decision. Harbert v. Durden, 116 Mo. App. 512, 92 S. W. 746, and the Kansas City Court of Appeals in Paddock v. Paddock, 91 S. W. 398, ruled adversely to Hedrix v. Hedrix. In the very recent decisions of this court in Keaton v. Jorndt et al., 119 S. W. 629, Huiskamp v. Miller et al., 119 S. W. 633, and Van Natta v. Real Estate Co., 120 S. W. 738, the legislation on this topic which has finally eventuated in section 575, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 601), was traced by this court. The Revised Statutes of 1889 were in force at the time of the commencement and prosecution of the foreclosure suit. Section 2022 of the Revised Statutes of 1889 was in these words: "If the plaintiff or other person for him shall allege in his petition, or at the time of filing the same, or at any time thereafter shall file an affidavit stating that part or all of the defendants are nonresidents of the state, or is a corporation of another state, kingdom, or country, and cannot be served in this state in the manner prescribed in this chapter, or if absented or absconded themselves from their usual place of abode in this state, or if they have concealed themselves so that the ordinary process of law cannot be served on them, the court in which said suit is brought or in vacation the clerk thereof shall make an order directed to the nonresidents or absentees notifying them of the commencement of the suit and stating briefly the object and of said suit, section 515, Rev. St. 1889. As pointed out in Huiskamp v. Miller, supra, prior to the revision of 1889, a foreign corporation might be served by publication even though it had an office and was doing business in this state and the purpose of this change was to require service by ordinary process of law in this state whenever such service was possible. Prior to this provision, a corporation of another state, kingdom, or country might be served by publication upon the mere affidavit that it was a nonresident, and if the section as revised had been intended to apply to all nonresidents the words "or is a corporation of another state, kingdom, or country" would not have been added. We think it is clear as was ruled in Huiskamp v. Miller, and Keaton v. Jorndt, supra, that the clause "cannot be served in this state in the manner prescribed in this chapter," has reference alone to the corporation of another state, kingdom, or country, and has no reference whatever to natural persons who were or are nonresidents of this state. See, also, Tufts v. Volkening, 122 Mo. 631, 27 S. W. 522. The plaintiff's contention therefore that the circuit court acquired no jurisdiction over Rolfe and wife by the order of publication is unsound.

2. It was perfectly competent for Mrs. Rolfe to mortgage her land to secure her husband's debt, and it is true as contended by plaintiff that when she did this she stood in the relation of a surety for her husband. But the taking of a judgment in Nebraska against her husband on this debt which was primarily his obligation did not have the effect of releasing Mrs. Rolfe on her mortgage. It is also plain that this defense is not open to the plaintiff at this time because the circuit court of Chariton county had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of said suit and of the parties and the merits of that judgment cannot be inquired into now in this collateral proceeding. Had it been a defense at all it was open to Mrs. Rolfe in the foreclosure proceedings and neither she nor the plaintiff can be heard to urge it now. Gray v. Bowles, 74 Mo. 419; Holt County v. Cannon, 114 Mo. 514, 21 S. W. 851. As the defendants established title to the land by a perfectly valid paper title, it is entirely unnecessary to inquire into the propriety of the giving of the eighth instruction on their right to claim title by adverse possession.

The judgment of the circuit court was right and is affirmed.

BURGESS and FOX, JJ., concur.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 21*)—JURISDICTION—SUPREME COURT—CONSENT OF PARTIES.

Consent of the parties cannot give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the action, if it does not in fact have jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 88-97; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

2. COURTS (§ 231*)—SUPREME COURT—JURISDICTION—CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

That the trial court misconstrued the act of Congress as to the removal of causes, or erroneously decided that a defendant was not entitled to remove the cause under the facts presented in the petition, would not draw into question the validity of the act of Congress (Act March 2, 1875, c. 137, § 2, 18 Stat. 470 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 509]), within Const. art. 6, § 12 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218), giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction, where the validity of a statute of, or authority exercised under, the United States is drawn into question, so that the Supreme Court would not have jurisdiction of an appeal from its decision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

3. COURTS (§ 231*)—JURISDICTION—SUPREME COURT—"AMOUNT IN DISPUTE"—INTEREST ON JUDGMENT.

Act June 12, 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 397), which contains an emergency clause, gives the Courts of Appeals jurisdiction of cases where the amount in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall not exceed $7,500; they having theretofore had jurisdiction only where the amount in dispute did not exceed $4,500. Held, in view of other language in the act directing the transference of causes pending in the Supreme Court, showing that it was intended to apply where appeals had been taken years before, that the amount in dispute was to be determined as of the date the judgment appealed from was rendered, and not the passage of the act, so that, where the amount of the judgment appealed from was $7,500, interest to the time of the passage of the act could not be added to enable the Supreme Court to retain jurisdiction of the appeal; interest not being a part of the "amount in dispute," but an incident of the judgment added by operation of the law.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Daviess County; J. W. Alexander, Judge.

Action by Albert H. Schwyhart against Martin A. Barrett and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Cause transferred to the Court of Appeals.

Hicklin, Leopard & Hicklin and Brown & Dolman, for appellants. K. B. Randolph, for respondent.

VALLIANT, J. Plaintiff sued the defendants, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, Martin A. Barrett, Frank Novak, and H. L. Reed, for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by him through the negligence of the defendants. The negligence of the railway company consisted, as the petition alleged, in neglecting the operation of its engine and cars which caused the injuries. Plaintiff recovered a judgment against all the defendants for $7,500 on December 14, 1906, from which judgment the defendants appealed to this court, and the record was duly lodged here January 19, 1907. At the date of the appeal and the date of the filing of the record here, the amount in controversy was sufficient to give this court jurisdiction; but by an act of the General Assembly approved June 12, 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 397), the Courts of Appeals were given jurisdiction in causes "where the amount in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall not exceed the sum of seventy-five hundred dollars," and by that act all cases within its purview then pending in this court, not under submission, were to be transferred to the proper Court of Appeals to be there heard and determined. Counsel on both sides have agreed that this court has jurisdiction, and insist that it be not transferred; but, of course, consent cannot give jurisdiction of the subject. Counsel for defendants are of the opinion that there is a federal question involved, which gives this court jurisdiction under section 12, art. 6, of our state Constitution (Ann. St. 1906, p. 218); the question being the right of the railway company to have the cause removed to the United States Circuit Court for trial. Counsel on both sides are of the opinion that, in estimating "the amount in dispute" with reference to the act of 1909, interest must be added to the amount of the judgment appealed from, $7,500, from its date, December 14, 1906, to the date of the act of the General Assembly above mentioned, to wit, June 12, 1909, which would raise the sum beyond the jurisdiction by that act conferred on the Courts of Appeals.

1. The federal question: The words used in that clause of section 12, art. 6, of our state Constitution, which gives this court jurisdiction, are: "In cases where the validity of a treaty or statute of or authority exercised under the United States is drawn in question." To give this court jurisdiction under that clause, there must be a question of the validity of a treaty or the validity of a statute or the validity of an authority exercised under the United States. Of course, there is no treaty or statute in question, and the only suggestion is that, by proceeding to try the cause after the petition to remove was filed, the validity of an authority exercised under the United States was denied. No one has questioned the validity of the act of Congress under which the application for removal was made, or that the cause should have been removed if it was one which under the terms of that act was removable. Act Cong. March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 2, 18 Stat. 470 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 509). Even if the state court had misconstrued the act, the misconstruction would not have drawn in question its validity. In Vaughn v. Wabash R. R. Co., 145 Mo. 57, 46 S. W. 952, the defendant pleaded as a defense a compliance with a section of the interstate act of Congress, which compliance was denied in the reply. The court said: "The validity of that federal statute was not drawn in question. The reply put in issue the averment of compliance with the law, not its validity." In White L. S. Com. Co. v. Railway Co., 157 Mo. 518, 57 S. W. 1070, the court said: "While by the Constitution exclusive appellate jurisdiction is vested in this court in cases where the validity of a statute of the United States is drawn in question (article 3, § 12), we know of no constitutional provision vesting such exclusive jurisdiction in this court in cases merely involving the construction of a federal statute." In Carey v. Schmeltz, 221 Mo. 133, 119 S. W. 946, where the right of action was based on a statute of Colorado, it was claimed by appellant that a federal question was involved, because the trial court having construed the Colorado statute to be a penal statute refused to enforce it, thereby refusing to give full faith and credit to the public act of another state as required by section 1, art. 4, of the Constitution of the United States; but this court held in that case that, even if the trial court had misconstrued the statute and had based its judgment on such misconstruction, yet it did not question the validity of the statute, and decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States are cited in the opinion in that case sustaining that view. Therefore even if the trial court in the case at bar had misconstrued the act of Congress in reference to removal of causes, or if it had erroneously decided that, under the facts of the case, as presented under the petition for removal, the defendant had not made out a case for removal under the act of Congress, still the validity of the act was not questioned, or the authority to remove when a case under the statute was made. The worst that the defendant can say is that the trial court misconstrued the statute, or misinterpreted the pleadings, or misunderstood the facts, all of which questions the defendant would have the right to ask any appellate court which has jurisdiction of the cause to review; but they raise no federal question, and we neither give or intimate any opinion concerning them. We hold that there is no federal question in the case, and that we have no jurisdiction on that ground.

2. Until the act of June 12, 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 397), the pecuniary limit to the jurisdiction of the Courts of Appeals was $4,500; but by that act those courts were given jurisdiction of causes "where the amount in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall not exceed seventy-five hundred dollars." Does that mean "the amount in dispute" at the time the judgment appealed from was rendered, or does it mean the amount in dispute at the time the General Assembly spoke, June 12, 1909? Other language in the act directing the transference of causes pending in this court shows that it was intended to apply to cases where judgments had been rendered and appeals had been taken years before, and the emergency section of the act shows that the General Assembly took cognizance of the overburdened condition of the docket of this court. We think the natural inference to be drawn is that the mind of the lawmaker was directed to cases where the amount in dispute at the time the judgment appealed from was rendered did not exceed $7,500, and that there was no thought given to the date of the passage of the act or of the influence that date would have on the effect of the act itself. If a plaintiff brings suit for damages, and states in his petition the amount for which he sues, if he is cast in his suit and appeals, we go back to the petition, and say that the amount there claimed is the amount in dispute. If the plaintiff should, in such case, recover judgment for a certain amount, and the defendant appeals, the amount then in dispute is the amount of the judgment. The date of the dispute in the one case is that of the filing of the petition, in the other it is that of the rendition of the judgment, and in either case the amount in dispute is the amount for which the dispute could at that date have been settled. If not settled then, and interest is added, it is added by operation of law, not as a part of the amount in dispute, but as a consequence of withholding it. Interest in such case is a mere incident, a mere sequence. Interest has been running on this judgment three years or more; but, if interest is to be considered as affecting the question of jurisdiction, it would take a case in which the judgment was for $7,500 out of the operation of the statute if the interest had run but a few days or even one day. Therefore if a judgment for $7,500 should be rendered in a circuit court to-day, and application for the appeal should be made a few days hence, the amount in dispute at the date of the appeal would be more than $7,500, and hence the Court of Appeals would not have jurisdiction. Or if the amount of the judgment was $7,200, and the appeal was taken within a few days of its rendition, it would go to the Court of Appeals; but, if the party aggrieved should wish to get his case into this court, he could wait 10 months, during which the interest would accumulate to an amount, which, added to the original judgment, would make the amount in dispute exceed $7,500, and he could then sue out a writ of error and bring his cause to this court. We are satisfied that the General Assembly intended to give the Courts of Appeals jurisdiction of causes wherein the amount in dispute at the date of the judgment did not exceed $7,500.

There is nothing in what this court said in Pittsburg Bridge Co. v. Transit Co., 205 Mo. 176, 103 S. W. 546, to which we are referred, that is in conflict with what we have above said. In that case, although the judgment was for an amount beyond the then pecuniary jurisdiction of the Courts of Appeals, yet the record showed that the defendant at the trial admitted that it owed the plaintiff the amount sued for, but pleaded two counterclaims, one for $4,300, the other for $142-74. The plaintiff admitted that it owed the last-mentioned counterclaim, but denied the other one for $4,300, and the trial resulted in allowing the defendant $1,850 on the disputed counterclaim, and deducted that amount from the amount sued for, and gave judgment for the balance, and defendant appealed. This court said that the only amount in dispute was the difference between $4,300, which defendant claimed as due him on his first counterclaim, and $1,850, which the court allowed him on that claim, and therefore the case was within the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals. In that case we took the pleadings and the judgment at its date.

In Vanderberg v. Gas Co., 199 Mo. 455, 97 S. W. 908, the plaintiff had sued in an action ex delicto, alleging her damages $5,000 compensatory, and $5,000 penal. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the evidence, and plaintiff appealed. The record showed that there was no ground for the claim of punitive damages, and that, if she was entitled to any compensatory damages they were not more than $100 or $200. There is nothing in that case bearing on the question now in hand.

In State ex rel. v. Broadus, 212 Mo. 685, 111 S. W. 508, it was held that after a judgment had been rendered for $5,500, and several months' interest had accrued, a remittitur of $1,000 was entered, but the old judgment was not set aside, and a new judgment entered, as it should have been, the remittitur was to be treated only as a credit on the amount due on the original judgment, which, with interest accrued at that time, amounted to $5,632, which left the amount due on the judgment $4,632 at the time the appeal was taken. It was held in that case that, if, when the remittitur was entered, the old judgment had been set aside and a judgment for $4,500 entered, it would have been within the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals.

We are referred to some decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States; but we do not think they sustain the position of the learned counsel. When we are construing a statute of our own state relating to the jurisdiction of our state courts, it is not always safe to follow a decision of a federal court construing an act of Congress relating to the jurisdiction of federal courts, because those courts exercise a peculiar jurisdiction, and the acts of Congress concerning the subject are to be viewed from that peculiar standpoint. In Zeckendorf v. Johnson, 123 U. S. 617, 8 Sup. Ct. 261, 31 L. Ed. 277, the judgment of the trial court was for $4,304.92, the cause was appealed to the Supreme Court of the territory of Arizona, where a judgment of affirmance was had, and from that judgment—that is, the judgment of the Supreme Court of the territory—appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. The court said: "The value of the matter in dispute is to be determined by the amount due at the time of the judgment brought here for review, to wit, the judgment of the Supreme Court of the territory, and not the time of the judgment of the district court." That is what we say in this case; that is, that the amount in dispute is to be determined by the amount due at the date of the judgment from which the appeal is taken. And to the same effect is District of Columbia v. Gannon, 130 U. S. 227, 9 Sup. Ct. 508, 32 L. Ed. 922. In that case the court quotes with approval what it said on the same subject in Railroad v. Trook, 100 U. S. 112, 25 L. Ed. 571: "In cases brought here on writ of error for re-examination of judgment of affirmance in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the value of the matter in dispute is determined by the judgment affirmed, without adding interest or costs." Benson M. & S. Co. v. Alta M. & S. Co., 145 U. S. 428, 12 Sup. Ct. 877, 36 L. Ed. 762, is to the same effect.

Our conclusion is that "the amount in dispute" in this case, within the meaning of that term as it is used in the act of June 12, 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 397), is $7,500, which is the amount for which the judgment was rendered December 14, 1906.

The cause is therefore transferred to the Kansas City Court of Appeals. All concur.

SANFORD v. KERN.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. EASEMENTS (§ 36*)—WAY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in a suit to establish a right to a private way across defendant's land and to remove obstructions placed in the way by defendant held sufficient to establish such way originating in a contract with one in possession of the land, ratified by the owner, and adverse user of the right, openly and uninterruptedly, for more than 10 years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

2. EASEMENTS (§ 9*)—ADVERSE POSSESSION—CLAIM UNDER CONTRACT.

The claim to an easement for a passageway across land by virtue of adverse possession for more than 10 years can only be invoked by a a bad title into a good one, unless possession is under a claim of right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

3. EASEMENTS (§ 12*)—CREATION BY CONTRACT—EXECUTION BY CONTRACT.

Where the owner of land gives an easement for a passageway across his land on condition that the grantee build a fence near the grantor's line separating the land over which the easement extends from the remainder of the tract, and the grantee builds the fence, and it is accepted by the grantor, the contract is performed, and the consideration passes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 35-41; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

4. EASEMENTS (§ 12*)—CONTRACTS—ADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION.

A boundary fence becoming out of repair, so that cattle on the adjoining lands broke through the fence, the owner of the land contracted with plaintiff to allow him a passageway along the boundary line, providing he would build a fence parallel to the line fence. Held, that the building of the fence and the furnishing of material for it, and the benefit conferred upon the grantor, by preventing stock from trespassing, was an adequate consideration in law for the grant of the easement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 35-38; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

5. EASEMENTS (§ 8*)—CREATION—PRESCRIPTION.

Adverse possession sufficient to establish a right to a passageway across land is not destroyed by the use of the passageway by others with the acquiescence of the person claiming under adverse possession, as, under Rev. St. 1899, § 9468 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4346), private roads shall be free to be traveled by all persons as a public road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

6. EASEMENTS (§ 9*)—ADVERSE POSSESSION—CLAIM OF RIGHT.

Use of a passageway across land under a contract allowing such use is under an adverse claim of right, where the person using it performs a condition of the contract requiring him to build a fence along the passageway, and keeps the way in repair and uses it continually and claims the passageway as a right, whenever a question is raised relating to his right to use it, and such claim was recognized by the owners of land over which the way extended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

7. EASEMENTS (§ 5*)—PRESCRIPTION—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

The right to a way by prescription may be established in the same way as the title to land, to wit, by adverse possession under a claim of right uninterrupted for 10 years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 13-26; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

8. EASEMENTS (§ 26*)—RIGHT OF PASSAGE—CREATION BY CONTRACT—REVOCATION—ESTOPPEL.

An easement for a passageway across land, though without consideration at its inception, may not be revoked at will where the licensee was expected to go to great expense in order to enjoy it, and where that expense had been incurred, as in such case, equitable estoppel arises, and the easement may not be destroyed by the act of the licensor alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 72½-82; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

LISH BY CONTRACT.

The right to an easement for a passageway across land is not affected by the fact that the person with whom the licensee contracted for the easement did not have the legal title to the land, where she was in possession and clothed with the powers of an apparent owner, and exercised those rights by leasing the land to tenants and enjoying the returns, and the legal owner, who was her father, had knowledge that she was dealing with and contracting in relation to it, and this was done with his acquiescence, and the licensee thought he was dealing with the owner and such person subsequently became the owner, and all subsequent owners of the land claimed under such person, and, when they bought the land, had actual notice of the licensee's claim by the fact that the passageway extended through an open fenced lane across the land.

Appeal from Cape Girardeau Court of Common Pleas; B. F. Davis, Judge.

Action by Linus Sanford against Joseph Kern. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with direction to enter judgment for plaintiff.

Oliver & Oliver and Linus Sanford, for appellant. Wilson Cramer, for respondent.

LAMM, P. J. Suit to establish a right in plaintiff to a private way in Cape Girardeau county, and to remove obstructions put in the way by defendant. The ultimate facts relied on to show a user as of prescriptive right, or adverse possession under a claim of right, are set forth in the petition with sufficient particularity to permit the sufficiency of the petition, it will not be further noticed. The answer raised the general issue. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

There is little or no dispute on material facts. In 1889 plaintiff owned a body of timber land (the rise of 100 acres) in section 30, township 32, range 13, with no access to it by public road or private way. A half mile east, following the meandering of Hubble creek, ran an old north and south public road, known as the "Jackson and Pocahontas road." Between that road and the south part of plaintiff's woodland lay a tract of cultivating land we will call "A." North of and bordering "A," between the north part of plaintiff's land and said public road, lay another tract we will call "B." There was an east and west partition fence between "A" and "B." At that time one Flynn owned tract B, and Nannie E. Baldwin, the daughter of Thomas W. English, was in possession of tract A. Whether she was covert or discreet at the times in hand is dark. As a matter of fact she seems to have claimed the land, but the legal title was in her said father. She did not reside on it, but for several years, by her father's consent, occupied it through her tenants, and, with his consent, exercised acts of proprietorship over it, contracting with relation thereto, and enjoyed the rents and profits. She was commonly reputed to be the owner, and Sanford thought she was. Evidently she held the land under some domestic arrangement not fully developed. Whether by a gift resting in parol accompanied by possession, or whether it was turned over to her because of, or anticipating, a will devising the land to her, or some undisclosed contract, we do not know. At any rate, about five years later Mr. English died. At that time it was found he had made his will giving Nannie tract A. In 1889 the party fence between tracts A and B had run down at the heel through decay and inattention. Lured by growing crops and a broken fence, the Flynn stock trespassed on the crops of Nannie's tenant, and wrangles and squabbles sprang up between the Flynn's and her tenant, Fullenwider. At this immediate time Sanford was clearing his woodland to make a farm of it, and desired a right of way opening it to the Jackson and Pocahontas public road. To that end, he opened negotiations with Nannie, thinking her the owner of tract A, and made a proposition to her to furnish the labor and material for a 10-rail fence in consideration of a private way 30 feet wide and half a mile long off of the north end of tract A, running from his woodland to said road. The proposition was accepted by her. There is evidence indicating it was considered by her and her friends, including her father, a good proposition, in that it would furnish her protection against the ravages of the Flynn stock, fence tract A securely in, and keep the cows out of her corn. Accordingly she instructed her tenant, Fullenwider, to stake out a strip a half mile long and 30 feet wide off said north end, and act in her stead in accepting the fence Sanford was to build as per contract. Presently, at his own expense in labor and rails, he built a new 10-rail fence on the line marked off by Fullenwider, "every corner locked" or "cross-railed." We assume it was an old-fashioned, "stake-and-rider" worm fence. Mrs. Baldwin testified that Sanford was to furnish all the rails, but failed to do so, using some rails out of her half of the old partition fence. As she did not live on the place, the record indicates that her testimony in that behalf was not based on personal knowledge. Contra, there is substantial evidence from her tenant, Fullenwider, and from parties who built the fence for Sanford, that he furnished his own rails from his own land, fully performed his contract, and that Fullenwider accepted the fence. There is other uncontradicted testimony to the effect that a 30-foot lane was then opened, fenced on both sides and remained an open, used lane from 1889 until a year and a half before the filing of the petition in this cause, August 29, 1905, say 14 years. The negotiations between Sanford and Mrs. Baldwin seem to have been conducted by correspondence (now lost) and the contents of letters were proved by parol. Fullenwider testified without contradiction that the old line fence was very bad; that, when he rented the farm from Mrs. Baldwin, the poor fence was objected to by him; that she promised to fix it, but did not; that the Flynn stock jumped in and annoyed him; that in September, 1889, (quoting) "she wrote me that Mr. Sanford had made her a proposition that he would build her a fence if she give a road through here. She asked me what I thought about it, in a letter." In response to that letter he told her "it would be a very good thing because they were wrangling about the stock." He further testified: "I know Mrs. Baldwin was to give Mr. Sanford 30 feet of land through there for that fence, and I know that because I had letters from her." Again, he testified: "She wrote me that if Mr. Sanford would build her a good fence, 10-rail fence, * * * for me to stake off 30 feet, which I did, and for me to receive the fence. Mr. Sanford built the fence according to contract, and I received it and wrote to her." There was other testimony, substantially uncontradicted, to the foregoing effect, and we think it satisfactorily established that, in consideration of Sanford's building the fence to protect her tenant's crops and inclose her own land for renting and cultivation purposes, Mrs. Baldwin agreed to give and did give him said roadway from his woodland to the Jackson and Pocahontas public road.

It seems after the lane was open and in use Sanford discovered the legal title to the strip was in Mr. English. While on the stand and being examined in chief it was sought to show the substance of a conversation between the two. Objection was lodged against this testimony (English being dead) and sustained. Subsequently, on cross-examination, it cropped out that, when Sanford went to English, he, English, told him to use the road and keep it in repair; that Flynn (quoting) "ought to have given part of the lane, but it was the best thing Nannie could do"; further, that when Sanford found out that Mrs. Baldwin was only to get the land at Mr. English's death, and, as said, went to see him, he, English, (quoting) "laughed and said the road ought to be through there, and that none of them would interfere with me." We think the testimony establishes that from 1889 up to the time the road was closed by Kern, Sanford on all occasions kept the roadway in repair by working it and repairing a bridge thereon (except that the Flynn's helped a little in working a part of the road at a certain time). There is no testimony on the value of the 30-foot strip of land (something less than two acres) in 1889; nor as to the cost at that time of making and hauling rails and building a good 10-rail fence a half mile long. There is nothing to show it was not a fair trade on an adequate consideration passing. The testimony indicates that the title to the fence, when built and accepted, was to be in Mrs. Baldwin, that she treated the fence as her own, and that the title thereto passed to her grantees hereinafter mentioned. Nothing was said about Sanford keeping the fence in repair. Such repairs seem not within the scope of the contract. Accordingly, he did not repair it. All the testimony shows it remained a fair fence down to a short time before the road was closed. Some of the testimony shows it was a fair fence at that time, but there was testimony it was then out of repair.

The main question in the case turns on whether Sanford's use of the road was under a revocable license—i. e., merely permissive and in a neighborly way, or whether his user was of right, and his claim adverse under his executed contract. It will therefore be not amiss to set forth the testimony with more particularity. There is no dispute but what Sanford and his tenants and those having business with them or on his farm used the road openly and continuously for 14 years or thereabouts without any question raised as to the right of such use by the owners of tract A. Sanford says, among other things, that his proposition in writing to her was that he would build a half mile of fence and furnish all the material "if she would give me a roadway"; that the fence was the consideration for the road; that his proposition was accepted and performed; that the road, when opened, became his only way to market his wood and farm products; that, before Kern bought tract A, he came to see him, Sanford, about buying Sanford's said land, and inquired "how he could get out if he bought it." Thereupon Sanford told him plainly of the lane, and that he had bought it, and paid for it, and had a right of way there. Sanford further testified in effect, that he always claimed it as a private way as of right after he had built the fence and opened the lane.

One Green testified he was a tenant on Sanford's land and hauled a great deal of cordwood over the road to Jackson, and that Mr. Sanford had him work the road and keep it in repair for the eight or nine years of his tenancy.

Bolinger, Sanford's succeeding tenant, testified the same way.

Mrs. Baldwin testified she did not "sell" the strip to Sanford, and gives her reason for not selling it in these words: "No; I did not sell it, because at the time I did not own it." She admits, however, that Sanford wanted a roadway, that he offered to open up the road at his own expense and build the fence, and says (quoting): "I consented to allow the road to be opened under those conditions: That he bear all the expense of making a good fence so as to fence the farm on that side." Being inquired of whether there was any "consideration," she answered: "Well, there was no money paid in the matter; * * * nothing more than the building of the fence and opening of the road."

She says there was nothing said about the time the road was to continue. The land having been devised to her by her father's will, probated in 1895, she sold it to one Burford by a deed of April 18, 1896, by a description including the lane. Burford held the land for three months, and sold it to one Clippard by a similar deed. Clippard owned the land about a year and transferred it back to Burford. Burford then held it about two years and conveyed to the defendant Kern.

Burford was not put on the stand, but Clippard was by defendant. He testified that the corners of tract A were pointed out to him before he bought; that he saw the lane in use; that it was a fenced lane then open and being traveled by Sanford and his tenants; that the corners of tract A included the Jackson and Pochontas public road as well as the lane, and there was no reservation in his deed in regard to either; that, when he sold back to Burford, the lane was still open and being used just as he saw it before he bought.
